Mr. PAGE. It will be remembered by the Chair that every chairman of every Committee of the Whole during this session of Congress has decided that an appropriation act is a law, and that any proposition changing the provisions of such an act changes existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is aware of that.

Mr. PAGE. Now my amendment, which proposes to insert another paragraph in place of the one stricken out, is in the exact language of the law of last year. The Chair asked awhile ago of the gentleman from Illinois if an appropriation could be made under that law and carried out. Certainly it can. There is a law on the statute-book which provides for this appropriation. My point of order against the original paragraph was that it changed existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not decide that it changes existing law. The bill of last year was in the sundry civil appropriation bill and provided for the expenses of the year ending June 30, 1881. The law as it now exists will expire on the 30th day of June next. When this law goes into effect, of course that law will not exist. It does not propose to interfere with the appropriation of the preceding year. It is simply an appropriation for a specific purpose which will expire on the 30th of June next. It does not, therefore, change existing law. It creates a new law, but it is not in the way of economy; and the Chair, therefore, rules it out of order. The Chair told the gentleman from California how he might reach his point by moving to strike out the words in regard to the Director of the Mint, as that would leave the section as he wants it.

Mr. PAGE. I will do it now.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Fuel, lights, and water for public buildings: For fuel, light, water, and miscellaneous items required by the janitors and firemen in the proper care of buildings, furniture, and heating apparatus, such as brooms, mops, brushes, buckets, wheelbarrows, shovels, saws, hatchets, and hammers, for all public buildings under the control of the Treasury Department, $450,000.

Mr. BUCKNER. I move to insert, after line 387, the following:

And the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to use $24,000 of the said sum in the purchase of gas-saving and gas-regulating instruments which are shown to be most advantageous to the Government by the report of the commission made under the order of the House of Representatives during this Congress and by reports of experts heretofore made under the order of the Secretary of the Treasury, to be placed in the buildings under the control of the Treasury Department, provided the price paid for said instruments shall not exceed the saving of cost made by their use for the first year they are placed in said buildings.

Mr. BLOUNT. I reserve all points of order, and I hope it will not be objected to until I can hear a statement in explanation of this amendment from the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. BUCKNER. The amendment shows for itself that it is not subject to the point of order. It does not add to the expenditure of the Government at all, but merely provides that a certain sum of money shall be expended in the purchase of these instruments which save in the consumption of gas, and it further provides that the price paid for these instruments shall not exceed the saving to the Government for the first year. They will be a permanent investment for the Government in the way of saving in the consumption of gas in the public buildings. The amendment is in the interest of economy.

Mr. BLOUNT. I will not withdraw my point of order at the present time, but will move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia, reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had, according to order, had under consideration the bill (H. R. No. 7203) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. WARD, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. No. 192) granting a pension to Hulda L. Barnard;

A bill (H. R. No. 624) granting a pension to Robert S. Goodall;

A bill (H. R. No. 2123) granting a pension to Albert N. Jack;

A bill (H. R. No. 2290) granting a pension to William Bowman;

A bill (H. R. No. 3100) granting relief to Samuel B. Huchinson;

A bill (H. R. No. 4572) defining the verification of returns of national banks; and

A bill (H. R. No. 4887) granting a pension to Rosalie Louis.

RESIGNATION OF WALBRIDGE A. FIELD.

The SPEAKER. The Chair presents the following communication to the House.

The Clerk read as follows:

BOSTON, MASSACHUSETTS, February 21, 1881.

SIR: Having been appointed an associate justice of the supreme judicial court of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, I have delivered to his excellency the governor of the Commonwealth my resignation of the office of Representative in the Forty-sixth Congress of the United States from the third congressional district of Massachusetts.

Very respectfully,

WALBRIDGE A. FIELD.

Hon. SAMUEL J. RANDALL,
Speaker House of Representatives.

AMENDMENT TO APPORTIONMENT BILL.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a substitute for the apportionment bill which I propose to offer when I get the opportunity to do so.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

The substitute is as follows:

AMENDMENT.

That after the 3d day of March, 1883, the House of Representatives shall be composed of three hundred and fifteen members, to be apportioned among the several States as follows:

Alabama, 8; Arkansas, 5; California, 6; Colorado, 1; Connecticut, 4; Delaware, 1; Florida, 2; Georgia, 10; Illinois, 20; Indiana, 13; Iowa, 10; Kansas, 6; Kentucky, 11; Louisiana, 6; Maine, 4; Maryland, 6; Massachusetts, 11; Michigan, 11; Minnesota, 5; Mississippi, 7; Missouri, 14; Nebraska, 3; Nevada, 1; New Hampshire, 2; New Jersey, 7; New York, 32; North Carolina, 9; Ohio, 20; Oregon, 1; Pennsylvania, 27; Rhode Island, 2; South Carolina, 6; Tennessee, 10; Texas, 10; Vermont, 2; Virginia, 10; West Virginia, 4; Wisconsin, 8.

POST-ROUTES.

Mr. MONEY. I ask by unanimous consent that the bill (H. R. No. 7036) to establish post-routes, returned from the Senate with amendments, be taken from the Speaker's table and the amendments of the Senate concurred in. I will state that I have examined the bill and the amendments of the Senate, and they contain nothing in the way of general legislation, but only post-routes.

Mr. DUNNELL. Have the Senate amendments been printed?

Mr. MONEY. They have not. I should like to state there will be great difficulty about this bill being enrolled unless it is passed speedily.

There was no objection, and the bill and Senate amendments were taken from the Speaker's table and the amendments concurred in.

Mr. MONEY moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendments of the Senate were concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MENOMONEE RIVER RESERVATION.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting the draught of a bill to authorize the sale of logs cut on the Menomonee reservation within Wisconsin; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

HOMESTEAD AND PRE-EMPTION LAWS.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a memorial of the Legislature of Dakota, relative to homestead and pre-emption laws; which was referred to the Committee on the Public Lands.

D. T. KIRBY.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting protest against the passage of Senate bill No. 965, for the relief of D. T. Kirby; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

INTERNATIONAL REMONETIZATION OF SILVER.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of State, transmitting a statement of the appropriation of $20,000 for negotiations with foreign governments as to international remonetization of silver; which was referred to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

By unanimous consent, leave to print an amendment to the apportionment bill, and remarks thereon, was granted to Mr. SHALLENBERGER. [See Appendix.]

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois, that the House do now adjourn.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 38, noes 51.

So the House refused to adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The question now recurs on the motion of the gentleman from Georgia, that the House take a recess until ten o'clock a. m. to-morrow.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 57, noes 21.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. No quorum has voted.

The SPEAKER. The point of order being made that no quorum has voted, the Chair will appoint tellers.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois, and Mr. BLOUNT were appointed tellers.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 63, noes 24.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I withdraw the point of order as to a quorum.

So the motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at five o'clock and five minutes p. m.) the House took a recess until ten o'clock Wednesday.

MORNING SESSION.

The recess having expired, the House reassembled at ten o'clock a. m., (Wednesday, February 23.)

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of further considering the sundry civil appropriation bill; and pending that I move that all general debate upon the bill be limited to one-half minute.

Mr. PACHECO. I hope the gentleman from Georgia will give way for a moment.

Mr. BLOUNT. At eleven o'clock the gentleman will have an opportunity to make his request. This hour has been set apart for the consideration of this bill.

The SPEAKER. The first question will be taken upon the motion of the gentleman from Georgia, limiting general debate upon the bill to one-half minute.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BLOUNT moved to reconsider the vote by which the House agreed to limit debate; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now recurs on the motion to go into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. CLYMER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole to consider the bill (H. R. No. 7203) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, and for other purposes. The Clerk will report the pending amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

And the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to use $24,000 of the said sum in the purchase of gas-saving and gas-regulating instruments which are shown to be most advantageous to the Government by the report of the commission made under the order of the House of Representatives during this Congress and by reports of experts heretofore made under the order of the Secretary of the Treasury, to be placed in the buildings under the control of the Treasury Department, provided the price paid for said instruments shall not exceed the saving of cost made by their use for the first year they are placed in said buildings.

Mr. BLOUNT. I raise the question of order on this amendment in its present form.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state the point of order.

Mr. BLOUNT. The point of order is that it is new legislation, as it relates to the lighting of public buildings, and does not appear on its face to retrench expenditures.

Mr. BUCKNER. Mr. Chairman, in response to the point of order raised by the gentleman from Georgia, I will simply say that it is obvious upon the face of this amendment that there is a large saving to the Government contemplated by it. This provides that a portion of the appropriation already made for the purpose of lighting public buildings shall be set apart for a certain purpose, and that the price paid for the machinery, &c., shall not exceed the saving of the first year; so that after the appropriation is made for this single year it puts that much money annually, at all events, back into the Treasury, and is to that extent a saving.

Now, it is true that the amount annually estimated for this purpose is incorporated in this bill. A portion only of that amount is taken for the purpose contemplated by this amendment. But if it be true that it will save, as it contemplates, a certain amount for the first year, it is presumable that that saving will continue for subsequent years. On its face, therefore, it does save that portion of the expense to the Treasury, and is in the interest of economy. It is the only measure of economy that has been incorporated in this bill so far in the way of an amendment.

Mr. BLOUNT. The difficulty in my friend's argument is simply this, that he confounds his own reasoning upon the subject of lighting the public buildings with the naked proposition contained in his amendment, and tells us that it will produce a large saving to the Government. How? Does it appear from the paper itself that it will do so? By no means.

Mr. BUCKNER. Yes, it does.

Mr. BLOUNT. There is not a single line in it which shows that there will be any saving.

Again, the proposition is that the Government shall purchase the machines contemplated for this purpose from whatever parties shall have the most eligible ones, out of the appropriation set apart in this bill. That is to start with. Consequently you begin with that experiment, in an experimental form simply, and there is no knowing after you do begin what is to be the extent of the expense thereby incurred. You do incorporate in your amendment a clause added by way of a proviso that it shall not exceed the saving for the first year. Now, it is too late, after the Department has proceeded by purchase to obtain control of these machines, to say that there has been no saving; but even if it should be held that the saving would be enough to compensate for the purchase of the instruments themselves. I do not think it is clear on the face of the amendment that it is in the line of economy. It is a mere experiment.

The CHAIRMAN, (Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia.) Will the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BUCKNER] state wherein on the face of the amendment it shows that it retrenches expenditures?

Mr. BUCKNER. It shows it in this way, that it is provided the price paid for the instruments shall not exceed the saving of gas made by their use for the first year. It is admitted there may be no saving during the first year, but if there is a saving, which the Secretary can find out in various ways, then the benefit to the Government will accrue afterward. And if there should be, say, a saving of 25 per cent. on the first year it is to be presumed that there will be at least a saving of 25 per cent. thereafter.

Mr. BLOUNT. There is shown on the face of this paper no saving at all. The only ground on which the gentleman from Missouri claims there is a saving is that it is provided there shall not be paid more for the instrument than the saving by its use. Suppose there is no saving at all, suppose there is an actual loss. So far as appears on the face of the amendment there may be an actual loss and detriment to the Government. What the opinion of experts may be upon this matter, or what the opinion of my friend from Missouri may be, has nothing to do with the construction of the proposition itself.

The CHAIRMAN. The late Speaker of the House (Mr. Kerr) invariably held that to bring an amendment within this rule it must not change existing law unless it appeared on the face of the amendment that it retrenched expenditures. Now, that this amendment does change existing law as to the lighting of public buildings is not disputed. The next question is, does it appear on its face to retrench expenditures? The Chair thinks on the statement of the gentleman from Missouri himself that the saving is merely conjectural. Therefore the amendment does not come within the ruling of Speaker

Kerr nor within the view of the rule taken to sustain the point of order.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I offer as an amendment, to come in after line 387, what I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the collection of statistics relative to the annual production of precious metals in the United States $4,950, to be expended under the direction of the Director of the Mint.

Mr. BLOUNT. I have no objection to that.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the following:

Furniture and repairs of furniture for public buildings: For furniture and repairs of furniture, and carpets, for all public buildings, including new public buildings at Hartford, Connecticut, Nashville, Tennessee, and Utica, New York, under the control of the Treasury Department, $150,000.

Mr. WARNER. I ask the gentleman in charge of the bill if he can tell us how many officers or employés are to be provided for at buildings for which this appropriation is made for furniture—an appropriation of $150,000 at three points—whether it would be at the rate of $1,000 or $5,000 per employé.

Mr. BLOUNT. This paragraph, I will state to my friend from Ohio, does not relate to the employment of men at all. It simply provides for the purchase and repairs of furniture and carpets.

Mr. WARNER. For what use? It must be for somebody's use.

Mr. BLOUNT. For the public buildings throughout the country.

Mr. WARNER. Only for the public buildings at these three points.

Mr. BLOUNT. Oh, no; not by any means. The original estimate for this item was only $100,000; but later, after the estimates came in, when we had information that these several buildings designated would create a necessity for an additional appropriation, we added over the estimate $50,000 for those buildings.

Mr. WARNER. Very well. If this item is for the expenditure generally for this purpose for the Treasury Department, I have no objection; but if it is for three buildings alone, it appears to me a high sum.

Mr. BLOUNT. It is for all the buildings.

The Clerk read the following:

Salaries and traveling expenses of agents at seal-fisheries in Alaska: For one agent, $3,650; one assistant agent, $2,920; necessary traveling expenses of agents in going to and returning from Alaska, at $600 each per annum; in all, $7,770.

Mr. BLOUNT. I am directed by the Committee on Appropriations to offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 423, after the word "dollars," insert "two assistant agents at $2,190 each;" and change the total of the paragraph so as to read "$12,150," in lieu of "$7,770."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the following:

Preparation of receipts, expenditures, and appropriations of the Government: To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to carry out the resolutions of the Senate of October 16, 1877, and January 16, 1879, in preparing for publication consolidated statements of the appropriations and expenditures of the War Department from March 4, 1789, to June 30, 1876, and of the Indian Department from July 16, 1790, to June 30, 1878; and for the work, in the office of the Secretary of the Treasury, pertaining generally to the preparation for publication of the receipts and expenditures and appropriations of the Government, for the use of Congress and the several Departments, to be immediately available, $5,000.

To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to pay W. A. Richardson, when the work shall have been completed, for preparing and editing a supplement to the Revised Statutes under joint resolution approved June 7, 1880, $5,000.

Mr. SAMFORD. I ask the gentleman from Georgia whether or not the printing here authorized is not also provided for on the forty-ninth page, line 1184, where an appropriation of $210,000 is made to pay for the printing of the Treasury Department. Here is $10,000 given for printing in the same Department.

Mr. BLOUNT. These are altogether different things. The paragraph under consideration relates simply to the payment of Mr. Richardson for preparing and editing a supplement to the Revised Statutes.

Mr. SAMFORD. I call the gentleman's attention also to the paragraph preceding that to which he has just alluded.

Mr. BLOUNT. The preceding paragraph makes a new and distinct appropriation, independent of all others, based on a Senate resolution of the last session of Congress providing a specific appropriation for the publication of the receipts, expenditures, and appropriations of the Government, with a view of informing the several committees of this House as to what amount is being expended in this or that branch of the service. It has stood by itself in that way as a separate item. It rests on no law. It is simply for the purpose of furnishing information to the House, and very valuable information. It was inserted in this bill at the last session of Congress, and is inserted likewise here. The result of this appropriation last session is a publication of very great value in all inquiries as to expenditures of the Government under any particular head.

Mr. SAMFORD. This sum, then, of $210,000 is not sufficient to cover that?

Mr. BLOUNT. No, sir; these are altogether different matters, and are estimated for at different places.

The Clerk read the following:

National Board of Health: For salaries and expenses of the National Board of Health, to carry out the purposes of the various acts creating the National Board of Health, $75,000, or so much thereof as is necessary: Provided, That $25,000 of the appropriation made by act of June 2, 1879, entitled "An act to prevent the introduction of contagious or infectious diseases into the United States," shall be applied to the same purposes; and no more money shall be expended for the above purposes out of any appropriations heretofore made or by virtue of any previous law.

Mr. KING. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the word "purposes," in line 472, namely, these words: "And no more money shall be expended for the above purposes out of any appropriations heretofore made or by virtue of any previous law."

Mr. KING. I understand there is a balance still of $180,000 left of the appropriation first made for this purpose. I perceive that the committee has allowed only $100,000 to be used in the event of epidemic disease. Now, Mr. Chairman, that looks almost like trifling with a most dreadful subject. This House several years ago was moved with the utmost pity and compassion for the people of this broad land who were afflicted by the plague of yellow fever, and the sum of $500,000 was appropriated to prevent the spread of that fell disease. The money was applied most judiciously two years ago at Memphis, and the monster was so hedged around that it became a terror no longer to those who dwell in that section of the country.

Now this committee not only sees fit to give but $100,000 for this beneficent purpose, but it strikes out the balance of former appropriations that remains to the board of health. Our exemption from yellow fever for the past two years does not by any means augur a freedom from it in the future. It may come upon us at any moment during the coming summer. The National Board of Health last year predicted its approach.

To the city of New Orleans alone the cost for each one of these epidemics is estimated at not less than $12,000,000. When the Government undertook to protect the people against this plague it spoke in no uncertain tones. If it has the right and power to protect us against foreign enemies, less to be feared than this, certainly this House, this democratic House that claims to be the friend of the people, cannot refuse protection against the attack of an enemy which simply means death.

Mr. BLOUNT. The gentleman who has just taken his seat has said that Congress, being in sympathy with the people afflicted with the epidemic of yellow fever, did provide an appropriation in 1879 of $500,000 for the expenses of the Board of Health. That is true; Congress was exceedingly liberal.

Now, let us see something of what this Board of Health has been doing. In the act of June 2, 1879, the sum of $500,000 was appropriated to be disbursed under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury on estimates to be submitted by the Board of Health and approved by him. My friend from Louisiana [Mr. KING] has well said that the appropriation was made in view of an imminent epidemic. To corroborate the gentleman in that I will say that the last clause of the bill of 1879 provides, "This act shall not continue in force for a longer period than four years from the date of its approval." The $500,000 was given to be expended in case of an epidemic; it is a permanent appropriation. The whole matter was to end in four years, when the entire Board of Health was to disappear.

Mr. KING. I think the gentleman is mistaken in that.

Mr. BLOUNT. Now, what has occurred? At the very next session of Congress after that law was passed the Committee on Appropriations ascertained by investigation that a system had been adopted of building expensive and permanent quarantine stations on the Atlantic coast, on the coast of the Gulf of Mexico, and along the Mississippi River. Contracts were made looking to the permanency of this Board of Health. During the last session of Congress this matter was agitated with a view of restraining this commission in the appropriation made for the next year. I submit that they were not entitled to a dollar of money; they had no right to a dollar. The generosity of Congress had exhausted itself in giving the $500,000. But they came in with their estimates asking for immense appropriations. We contended, and the House thought, that the very buildings which they had constructed had been constructed in violation of law. And with a view of restraining the Board of Health we put in this provision.

For salaries and expenses of the National Board of Health, and to carry out the purpose of the various acts creating the Board of Health, $75,000.

And we put in a provision that $25,000 of the $500,000 which had been appropriated in 1879 might be used during the year for the current expenses of the Board of Health. What has been the result? By a construction given by a subordinate official of the Treasury Department it was held that the board was not restrained by that provision, and they could use not only what we said they might use for the year of the $500,000 but go back and use any other portion of it for that year. If there was any misunderstanding on that subject——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. I desire to be heard a moment.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate has been exhausted upon the pending amendment.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. Then I move to strike out the last word. I hope I shall have the patient hearing of the Chair if I do not of the members of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. If it is upon a question of order the Chair will listen with great pleasure; otherwise—— [Laughter.]

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. The House is called upon to decide between two authorities on this subject: the National Board of Health and my distinguished friend from Georgia, [Mr. BLOUNT.] Now, I am going to demonstrate that it is safer for this House to follow the recommendations of the former, acquainted with all the facts, than to the advice of the latter, who manifests a total want of information on the subject. I think I shall be able to satisfy the House that, however well and intelligently that gentleman has discharged the other legislative duties devolving upon him as a member of the Committee on Appropriations, it is utterly unsafe to leave this portion of the bill in his hands and under his control and management. I know that he is generally thoroughly acquainted with every question which he discusses; and this is the first one I have ever known him to undertake to discuss on this floor without having the slightest information upon it. If such a motion were in order, I would move to recommit this clause of the bill to the Appropriations Committee or some other committee that would understand it better, so that it might be presented to the House in an intelligent form.

Who ever heard of an appropriation to carry on any department or bureau of this Government made in gross, as the Committee on Appropriations has submitted this one? They say:

For salaries and expenses of the National Board of Health, and to carry out the purposes of the various acts creating the National Board of Health, $75,000, or so much thereof as is necessary.

How is the money to be expended? What restraint is imposed upon the discretion of the National Board of Health? What other bureau ever had placed at its disposition an appropriation of this character without any specification of the manner in which it should be expended? The paragraph continues:

Provided, That $25,000 of the appropriation made by act of June 2, 1879, entitled "An act to prevent the introduction of contagious or infectious diseases into the United States," shall be applied to the same purposes; and no more money shall be expended for the above purposes out of any appropriations heretofore made or by virtue of any previous law.

Is not that the clearest and most lucid appropriation ever made by this House? For what purpose is this money to be expended? If the committee represented by my friend from Georgia had acted intelligently, would they not have required the National Board of Health to submit an estimate in detail as to where the money is to go and for what purpose? If information of that kind had been given to the House, members would have been prepared to vote upon it more intelligently. If my friend from Georgia had done the committee especially charged with this matter the honor of consulting them, they would have given him no information probably upon this or any other subject, but they could have lightened his labors very much by assisting him in discharging them in detail. I do not mean by this that the National Board of Health has not expended and will not in the future expend all the money placed under its control honestly and for proper purposes; but I submit these criticisms to show that the gentleman [Mr. BLOUNT] having this bill in charge has not given it the careful and minute examination which should have been devoted to it. I object to a wholesale reduction of an estimate without giving any attention to particular items of expenditure, or of offering any objection to the manner in which the money is to be expended.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Chairman, the proposition embraced in this bill is that—

No more money shall be expended for the above purposes out of any appropriations heretofore made or by virtue of any previous law.

Now, Mr. Chairman, my friend from Tennessee [Mr. YOUNG] talks about the law requiring the independence of this bureau. In the second section of the act with reference to the Board of Health it is provided that estimates shall be submitted by them to the Secretary of the Treasury and approved by him; but no estimates have come to us in that way. The only information we have is a printed slip handed to our committee by the president of the Board of Health.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. Why did you not apply to us?

Mr. BLOUNT. I did not know that the gentleman was running this thing, or had anything to do with these estimates. The law declares that all estimates shall be made and submitted to the Secretary of the Treasury, and that he shall include them in the Book of Estimates. The estimates are to be sent in each year through the Secretary of the Treasury. I submit, therefore, that under the Revised Statutes I resorted to the legal authority when I looked to the Secretary of the Treasury for these estimates.

When last on the floor I was discussing the action of the Board of Health. The use of this fund all at once and asking for hundreds of thousands of dollars more for the next year brought the attention of the House to the fact that the Board of Health was going on at a rate of expenditure and with purposes in view never intended by the act creating the board. Congress, therefore, prescribed specifically what moneys might be used during the current fiscal year, and intended that no more should be used. But what has happened? An opinion has been given to the Secretary of the Treasury by a subordinate officer, informing him that the whole fund could be used during a single year. The purpose of the Committee on Appropriations in drafting this bill was to execute the will of Congress; to put it beyond the power of the officers of the Board of Health, by the construction of any subordinate officer of the Treasury Department, to use this money in a manner not intended by Congress. This is all there is in the proposition. Congress has been liberal; but its liberality has not been appreciated. I do trust that the House will adopt this provision and make it plain that by no artifice of construction shall the will of Congress be thwarted.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. I move to strike out the second provision of the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. No further amendment is in order; but the gentleman, by unanimous consent, can withdraw his former amendment.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. I hope the Chair will allow me to conduct this debate in my own way. I propose to strike out the second provision of the pending paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will allow the gentleman to "conduct the debate in his own way" subject to the rules of the Committee of the Whole; and under those rules no further amendment is now in order, unless it be in the form of a substitute.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. Then I withdraw my former amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. By unanimous consent that can be done. The Chair hears no objection. Now the gentleman, before he can proceed with the discussion, must make some other amendment.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. Then I renew my former amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to quarrel with my friends on the Committee on Appropriations, but I intend to demonstrate to the House, if I am not choked down before I get through, that the Committee on Appropriations does not understand this question, and that it is not safe for the House to follow that committee in this respect. The importance of this question forbids us to follow the lead of gentlemen who have no information whatever on the subject.

My friend from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] says that he pursued the legal channels in order to get this appropriation before the House in the proper way. If the estimate did not come before his committee in the proper way, why did they propose any appropriation at all? The committee should not have proposed an appropriation of a solitary dollar if they did not know for what purpose it was to be expended.

The National Board of Health estimate—

For maintenance of Mississippi River inspection service, including the pay of employés, cost of fuel, medicines, disinfectants, &c., at fourteen stations, namely, Vicksburgh, Red River, Memphis, and Cairo, $36,733.71.

Now, look here, and see how intelligently these gentlemen have managed this appropriation. Here is an amount appropriated in gross for a service for which no items are given. Do these gentlemen of the Committee on Appropriations know how many employés this board has? Do they know where they are located? Do they know where this money is to be expended? Can the committee tell how many inspectors the board has employed, or give any information whatever in reference to details? Do they know how many posts there are; how many clerks; how many messengers; how many bureaus; how much money each one receives, or what the $4,000 for miscellaneous expenses is for? Do they in fact know any item whatever in reference to the details of the management of this service which they now propose to come in here and cut down in this irresponsible manner? There is no item of information, Mr. Chairman, given by the Appropriations Committee that the House has, or that it ought to have, to warrant us in cutting down this appropriation in this manner.

My friend from Georgia says he did not know I was running this department. I am very well aware that the gentleman from Georgia cannot conceive how anything is run except by the Committee on Appropriations, which he essays to manage in his peculiar fashion. But I will say to the gentleman from Georgia that I believe I am in a position at all events to be thoroughly informed in reference to the main features of this service, and I propose to give the House that information if I can get the time.

Mr. ROBINSON. Let us have the information now.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. Let us go a little further. I will say to the gentleman that I am coming to that as fast as I can. They have given——

Mr. ROBINSON. The gentleman has disposed of the Appropriations Committee, now let him give us the information that is necessary to enable us to act intelligently upon this matter, as he claims to possess it.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. I am coming to that, if the gentleman will wait a moment. I have the estimates here of the National Board of Health, and I propose to give some facts from them. It consists of a great many items, and my friend from Massachusetts will pardon me, and the committee will, I am sure, in view of the brief time allotted to me, if I confine myself to the aggregate of these estimates, for I cannot go into details at this time. Now, this board asks, in addition to the unexpended appropriation remaining on hand, the sum of $203,000, and the reasons why this is asked are given. They furnish every item of expenditure for which it is proposed to use this money. They want it for the establishment of an inspection station at Sapello Sound, Georgia, for the maintenance of an inspection station at Galveston, one at Hampton Roads, for two or three on the Mississippi River, one in South Carolina, &c. Now, gentlemen, if you expect the National Board of Health to have power to ward off epidemic diseases from your shores or to act intelligently in that direction, you must give them the agencies by which to execute the law, and one of these agencies, and the only one I believe which can be safely relied upon, is to guard the inlets of our southern coast. New Orleans, Pensacola, Mobile, Charleston, South Carolina, are all places having a direct communication with the yellow-fever regions with which we are in constant commercial intercourse, and every ship from those countries that comes to your southern sea-ports may bring with it the seeds of this terrible scourge and plant them upon your coast. Now they ask that the quarantine stations may be kept up, to guard against this fearful peril and to carry out the objects for which the board was created.

I think it likely that the gentleman might have cut down in detail some of these items of expense, but the Committee on Appropriations propose to strike it down in a mass without appearing to understand why it is done or what effect it will have. In this very bill six or seven hundred thousand dollars are appropriated for the Life-Saving Service, and the last report of that bureau shows that during the last year along the entire coast of the United States some ninety lives were saved, while the testimony of commercial bodies, of scientific men, of medical associations in various parts of the country subject to the fever show that in 1879 by the exertions of the National Board of Health and the application of those agencies which they could control the yellow fever was kept within a limited area, by which means it is estimated and it is very probable that more than twenty thousand lives were saved, to say nothing of the vast benefits that resulted to every business interest.

In 1878, when this terrible pestilence ran riot all over the Mississippi Valley, it is estimated that some thirty thousand victims perished, and I think that estimate too low. In my own city, containing a population of less than 20,000, having been largely drained by people fleeing from the plague, in about one hundred days 5,200 people perished. In my little congressional district, composed of three counties only, in the same length of time more than 7,000 people fell victims to it.

It does seem to me, Mr. Chairman, that it is false and unwise economy to cut down the appropriations for an object and purpose like this, and continue them for many other objects which do not compare in importance. I wish I had time to speak longer, for there is much more I would like to say.

Mr. GOODE. I want to say, Mr. Chairman, a few words on this subject. I have just entered the Hall, but I understand the proposition is to strike out the latter part of this clause.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the pending amendment.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. GOODE. Now, Mr. Chairman, the National Board of Health was created by act of Congress approved March 3, 1879. By an act approved June 2, 1879, the powers of the board were enlarged and $500,000 was appropriated to carry out the purposes of the act; and by the subsquent act of July 1, 1879, the board was authorized to construct temporary quarantine buildings for the purpose of preventing the introduction and spread of contagious and infectious diseases.

The $500,000 appropriated has been held by the Treasury Department, by the proper officer of the Department, the Comptroller of the Currency, to be a continuous appropriation and taken out of the operation of section 3690 of the Revised Statutes, which required unexpended balances to be covered into the Treasury. In other words it created a board of health, with the power to use unexpended balances remaining on hand of the appropriations from year to year, in order to prevent the introduction and spread of contagious and infectious diseases.

Now, the evident design of this clause is to prevent the Board of Health from using unexpended balances.

The gentleman talked about this board. I did not hear all he said; but I undertake to say this board have not spent the money they had the right to spend. They have shown no disposition to be wasteful and extravagant. The total appropriations since the creation of the board have been $625,000. The total expenditures to the 1st of January, 1881, have been $364,000. The estimated expenditures to the end of the fiscal year are $75,000. There is thus left a balance of $185,000 already appropriated, which the Treasury Department say the board have a right to spend to carry out the purposes for which the board was created. Shall they not have the right to expend that balance?

I submit if gentlemen will read the last annual report there will be no two opinions on the subject. The board say in the last annual report the Mississippi inspection service may be improved at a small additional cost. They say the imperfect quarantine arrangements at Hampton Roads, on the Georgia coast, and on the Texas coast are such as to make it absolutely necessary that a more effective instrumentality shall be employed. I cannot speak for the Georgia coast nor for the Texas coast, but I can speak for Hampton Roads; and I would call the attention of the committee to what the board say in regard to that point. They say this:

It should be borne in mind that this large and commodious harbor—

is resorted to as a place of refuge for both domestic and foreign shipping bound to other and often distant ports, and driven in by stress of weather, or not infrequently by the disability of the crew from some infectious disease. Numerous instances might be cited in which the latter condition was the inducing cause for which foreign vessels dangerously infected have put into the roads for anchorage, but found no means provided for isolating and appropriately treating the sick. It is needless to say that there was more or less danger of the spreading of the disease to other shipping at anchor in the harbor.

Now, if this quarantine station is established it not only protects Norfolk but it protects Richmond, Alexandria, Fredericksburgh, Baltimore, and Washington. The board say this: they have the money already appropriated, they do not ask any additional appropriation, but they ask this Congress to respect the construction of the Treasury Department which has already been put on the law. And I repeat this board have shown no disposition to be wasteful or extravagant. They have accomplished a great work. They are now accomplishing a great work. They cannot do it without the necessary means at their disposal. And it is my deliberate judgment that they are entitled to the favorable consideration of this Congress and of the country.

Mr. HAWLEY. There are certain things in connection with this subject that are perfectly well understood by everybody from every section of every party. One is that the people of the United States, in their capacity as citizens, and the Government also, are disposed to be extremely liberal, or if you choose, just in this whole matter. That we all agree to; nobody will grudge any the most liberal appropriation if it be needed in case of one of these epidemics.

Now, the functions of a national board of health, I hold, are properly extremely limited. I do not believe in the wisdom of undertaking to take out of the hands of the local quarantine authorities this work or the greater part of it, or, substantially, any part of it. The real purpose and functions of a national board of health are stated in the original acts. Section 2 of the act which created that board provided it should obtain information, and that was substantially all. The object was the general publication of information for the benefit of the various sea-ports. But the power of the board was extended considerably by the act of June 2, 1879, and its existence was expressly limited to four years by the terms of the act. It was not in the contemplation of Congress that there should be established a permanent board of health superseding or governing the State boards of quarantine. The act of 1879 declared:

That upon the request of the National Board of Health the President is authorized to detail a medical officer to serve in the office of the consul at any foreign port for the purpose of making the inspection and giving the certificates—

Previously mentioned in the act. The third section provides:

That the National Board of Health shall co-operate with, and so far as it lawfully may, aid State and municipal boards of health in the execution and enforcement of the rules and regulations of such boards to prevent the introduction of contagious and infectious diseases.

Not with the idea of absolutely taking care of every port that came within the scope of this provision, but chiefly with a view to prevent the introduction from abroad of epidemic diseases.

Now the best help in the world is self help; and Congress in passing this act bore in mind the real work must be done by the States and the various ports.

Those States are not in the habit of relinquishing the control of everything to the Federal Government except where they think it necessary to get appropriations.

I have not, of course, time to discuss this question in the five minutes allotted me. But I say the terms of the two acts creating this board and prescribing its duties do not call for such expenditures as are called for in this comparatively imformal statement of the board. We do not get from the Treasury Department any such estimate. I affirmed last year and I affirm now that that National Board of Health did not conduct itself in a practical manner. I would prove this if there were time, and I deny the wisdom of the estimates laid before us.

Now, there may not be any yellow fever at Hampton Roads in ten years. There may be next year. I am willing there should be half a million of dollars in the Treasury subject to the call of the President in case of the breaking out of an epidemic. But I wish to know why they want $30,000 for the construction of a quarantine station at Hampton Roads, where there are miles and miles of the most excellent beach in the world, where the temporary tents and buildings alone fit for the purpose can be put up. We do not want a permanent station there. The best surgeons tell me you should not have permanent stations. When the necessity arises let the buildings be put up where the air and sunshine can reach them, and when their purpose is served burn them up. Merely have the lumber ready to put up temporary hospitals when required. But here are $50,000 for a quarantine station at Galveston. And here is an estimate of $30,000 for a quarantine station at Sapelo, Georgia. And then there is $11,000 beside for a long list of officers and employés at Sapelo Sound, Georgia; for a quarantine wharf, and only repairs at that, at Charleston, South Carolina, $12,000. Now, we do not need any special quarantine wharf there; we do not collect any yellow-fever patients on that wharf.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. KING. In connection with that statement, I desire to ask the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] what would be done with the freight of vessels at quarantine condemned as infectious, except to put it on the wharf? That is the purpose of that provision.

Mr. MANNING. The gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] says he wants this matter left to the local boards.

Mr. HAWLEY. With $500,000 in the hands of the Federal Government ready at any moment to assist them.

Mr. MANNING. It is true, I believe, that the Committee on Appropriations are hostile to a national board of health; that cannot be disguised. If I remember aright, they fought it in the very outset of legislation touching this matter, and questions were raised and elaborately discussed as to the authority of Congress under the Constitution to legislate at all upon this subject.

We who favored legislation undertook to show then, and thanks to the Congress of this country its judgment was favorable to our position, that local boards of health were not efficient; that the great destruction of human life in the valley of the Mississippi in 1878 resulted in part because of the inefficiency of local boards; that their action often created confusion. At all events, it was, in view of all the facts of the case, deemed wise and essential, after the frightful epidemic of 1878, that this Government should give that aid which it could afford by the creation of a national board of health, and the appropriation of money to be expended under its direction. On this point I have on a previous occasion given my views, and am content with the position then taken.

It is well to recall that the President of the United States in his message of December, 1878, stated that over one hundred thousand cases of yellow fever had occurred in the valley of the Mississippi, and that it was impossible to tell how much money had been expended and property destroyed, but it could be reckoned at hundreds of millions of dollars. Now, is it not economy, is it not humanity, is it not the part of statesmanship for us to afford the means by science and treasure that are essential to the protection of human life and property? We have passed beyond the question of the authority of Congress to do this. That question is behind us, it is res adjudicata.

Gentlemen insist that this amendment should not prevail, because they think it is not wise to leave in the hands of the Board of Health the two hundred and odd thousand dollars which it now has subject to its control. Is it charged that if it is so left there is apprehension that it will be improperly or unfaithfully expended? What is the occasion for that apprehension? Has the deportment of the Board of Health been such as to warrant any such belief? Are not the members of that board honorable men, well known for their integrity and scientific attainments? I apprehend that no man can say aught that reflects upon their capacity or their integrity. So far as I know and believe they have discharged their duties efficiently and to the satisfaction of all who are familiar with what they have done.

It has been correctly stated by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. YOUNG] that last year over five hundred thousand dollars were appropriated, and that it is proposed in this bill to appropriate $600,000 for what is known as the Life-Saving Service. If such an epidemic as came upon the people in Louisiana, Mississippi, Tennessee, Kentucky, and Arkansas two years ago should come again its ravages might be such that even a few little villages would lose more lives in a week or so than all the lives that would be saved by those engaged in the Life-Saving Service on the whole Atlantic coast in a year. My own little city of Holly Springs, in Mississippi, lost in three weeks more lives from yellow fever than were saved on the entire Atlantic coast in that year. I do not at all criticise the appropriation in behalf of the Life-Saving Service; on the contrary, I indorse it, yea it reflects credit alike upon our heads and hearts. My reference to it was only for the purpose of better bringing to the attention of this House the great merit of the proposed amendment.

Mr. BLOUNT. I move that the committee now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia, reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the bill (H. R. No. 7203) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. COBB, from the Committee on Appropriations, to which had been referred the bill (H. R. No. 7035) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, and for other purposes, with the Senate amendments thereto, reported the same back, accompanied by the following report:

The Committee on Appropriations, to which was referred the bill (H. R. No. 7035) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, and for other purposes, with the amendments of the Senate, having considered the same, beg leave to report as follows:

They recommend concurrence in the amendments of the Senate numbered 3, 9, 12, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 53, 54, 55, 56, 57, and 58.

They recommend non-concurrence in the amendments numbered 1, 2, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 10, 11, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, 44, 45, 46, 47, 48, 49, 50, 51, 52, 59, 60, 61, 62, 63, 64, 65, and 66.

They recommend concurrence in the amendment numbered 23 with an amendment, as follows: Substitute in lieu of said amendment the following:

"And the military commission assigned to such service shall have the rank and pay of a colonel of the Army of the United States."

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the Chair will first submit the question upon the amendments in gross of the Senate in which concurrence is recommended; then upon those amendments in which non-concurrence is recommended, and then upon the amendment in which concurrence is recommended with an amendment.

There was no objection.

The various recommendations of the Committee on Appropriations were then agreed to.

Mr. COBB moved to reconsider the votes just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. BLOUNT. I move that the House now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at ten o'clock and fifty-seven minutes a. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and other papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows, viz:

IN SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, February 23, 1881.

The Senate met at eleven o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. J. BULLOCK, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. SAUNDERS presented the memorial of E. S. Gillett and 40 others, citizens of Blue Springs, Nebraska, surviving soldiers of the war for the Union, remonstrating against the passage of the bill (S. No. 496) providing for the examination and adjudication of pension claims; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. LOGAN presented the memorial of Captain John Cowdon, relating to the report on the Mississippi River improvement commission; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT presented a memorial of the Legislature of Montana in favor of an appropriation to remove such obstructions at the Great Falls of Clark's Fork of the Columbia River as prevent the ascent of fish; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 6248) directing the payment of certain awards in favor of parties therein named, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. McMILLAN, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3789) for the relief of Homer Fellows, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. HILL, of Colorado, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1836) for the relief of Arthur W. Eastman, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. EATON. I am instructed by the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was referred the memorial of the Chamber of Commerce of the State of New York, and the memorial of the Chamber of Commerce of Charleston, South Carolina, praying Congress to make provision for the weekly and monthly publication of consular reports and their distribution to the leading commercial bodies of the United States, to ask to be discharged from its further consideration. These reports are being published now, and there is no necessity for further action by Congress.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. EATON. I am instructed, also, by the Committee on Foreign Relations to report back the resolutions of the Legislature of Tennessee in relation to the regie contracts for leaf-tobacco, and asking that Congress advise the President to consult with other governments. Congress has already so advised the President that it is proper to enter into negotiations. I move that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the resolutions.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. EATON, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was referred the memorial of Francis Vincent, of Wilmington, Delaware, in favor of the formation of an Anglo-Saxon confederacy, asked to be discharged from the further consideration of the memorial; which was agreed to.

Mr. EATON. I am also instructed by the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. No. 14) for the relief of John C. Landreau, to ask to be discharged from the further consideration of this matter. It relates to a contract between a citizen of the United States and the Peruvian Government, and it is the opinion of the committee that it is a matter entirely within the power of the Executive Department. Therefore the committee ask to be discharged from the further consideration of the joint resolution.

Mr. VOORHEES. I ask that it be placed upon the Calendar with the adverse report.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair hears no objection to that request, and that order will be entered.

Mr. EATON. I am also instructed by the Committee on Foreign Relations to make a similar request in regard to the petition of Helen M. Fiedler, widow and executrix of Ernest Fiedler, a citizen of the United States, praying Congress to constrain the Government of Brazil to make compensation for the charter of the steamer Circassian in 1867, which is another of the same class of cases. It relates to a contract made between her husband and the Government of Brazil, and in the opinion of the Committee on Foreign Relations it is a matter with which Congress has nothing to do at present, at least; and it is entirely within the power of the Department of State. I move that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the petition.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. COKE, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 440) for the ascertainment of the amount due to the Choctaw Nation, reported it without amendment.

Mr. KIRKWOOD, on the part of the minority of the Select Committee to examine into the circumstances connected with the removal of the Northern Cheyennes from the Sioux reservation to the Indian Territory, submitted a bill (S. No. 2215) for the relief of the Ponca Indians; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. GROOME, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 2057) for the relief of Arthur J. Carrier, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. FARLEY. I am directed by the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 2102) for the relief of John J. Williams and James D. Thornton, to report it favorably and without amendment. I have not prepared a written report. The bill appropriates $400 to these parties for services rendered as attorneys for the Government in 1876, in a suit pending between the Government and the contractor at Mare Island navy-yard, California, for damages arising out of the construction of the dry-dock at that place. A similar bill passed the Senate and House for the services of a short-hand reporter in the same proceeding. There are accompanying documents with the bill. I ask that the bill be considered now, by unanimous consent.

The Chief Clerk read the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. TELLER. I will enter my objection to that request.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made, and the bill goes on the Calendar.

Mr. VANCE. A resolution was passed by the Senate instructing the Secretary of the Navy to inquire into the particulars of the restoration to the active list of Edward Bellows. When the answer of the Secretary was returned, that answer with the whole subject was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs for their opinion as to the legality of the restoration to the active list of Paymaster Bellows. The committee have instructed me to submit a report containing their opinion in the case, and as it touches an important principle concerning promotions in the Navy, I ask that the report be printed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. All reports are printed under the rule.

Mr. VANCE, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3826) for the relief of the heirs of the late Langley B. Culley, reported it without amendment.

Mr. GARLAND, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 2182) for the relief of Edward Haile, surviving partner of Savage & Haile, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Claims; which was agreed to.

Mr. ANTHONY. The Committee on Printing, to which was referred a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting in compliance with section 194 of the Revised Statutes, the names of the clerks and other persons employed in the Department from December 1, 1879, to November 30, 1880, have instructed me to report it back with a recommendation that the usual number be printed. I make that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ANTHONY, from the Committee on Printing, to which was referred the letter of the Secretary of War, transmitting, in compliance with section 229 of the Revised Statutes, statements showing the contracts made by the bureaus of the War Department on behalf of the United States during the year 1880, asked that the committee be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

ENTOMOLOGICAL REPORT.

Mr. WHYTE. The Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. R. No. 387) authorizing the printing of 30,000 copies of the third report of the United States Entomological Commission, have instructed me to report it back favorably and ask for its present consideration.

By unanimous consent the Senate as in Committee of the Whole proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FOREIGN COMMERCE AND MANUFACTURES.

Mr. WHYTE. I am instructed by the Committee on Printing to report, with a favorable recommendation, the House concurrent resolution for the printing and binding of 50,000 copies of the three numbers issued by the State Department of reports from the consuls of the United States on the commerce and manufactures, &c., of their consular districts, and ask for its present consideration.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and concurred in, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring,) That there be printed and bound in one volume 50,000 copies of the three numbers issued by the State Department of reports from the consuls of the United States on the commerce and manufactures, &c., of their consular districts; 35,000 of which shall be for the use of the members of the House of Representatives and 15,000 for the use of the Senate.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. WINDOM, it was Ordered, That H. T. Johns be permitted to withdraw from the files the papers in his case, under the rules of the Senate.

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there further business for the morning hour?

Mr. COCKRELL. The Calendar, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The regular order is demanded.

Mr. BUTLER. I wish to submit some remarks this morning upon an amendment now on the table to be proposed to the river and harbor bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Pursuant to notice the Senator from South Carolina calls up an amendment submitted by him for the purpose of making some remarks upon it.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, at the last session of Congress I had the honor to introduce an amendment to the river and harbor bill (which was adopted) providing for "an examination of the headwaters of the Savannah River in connection with the headwaters of the Hiawassee and Tennessee Rivers, with a view of ascertaining if the waters of the last-mentioned streams can be united with those of the Savannah by means of a canal," and the following is the report of Major W. R. King, United States Engineers, upon that subject:

EXAMINATION FOR A CANAL TO CONNECT THE WATERS OF THE SAVANNAH RIVER WITH THOSE OF THE HIAWASSEE AND TENNESSEE.

UNITED STATES ENGINEER OFFICE,
Chattanooga, Tennessee, January 14, 1881.

GENERAL: I have the honor to state that the examination of "the headwaters of the Savannah River in connection with the headwaters of the Hiawassee and Tennessee Rivers," with a view to ascertaining if the waters of the last-mentioned streams can be united with those of the Savannah by means of a canal, has been completed, and to submit the following report thereon:

Referring to the small map herewith, it will be seen that the connection of the waters in question would, if practicable, form a link in a chain of water communication between the Ohio River and the Atlantic coast, which, on account of its directness and climatic advantages, would be one of the most important transportation routes in the United States. In fact it would combine in a remarkable degree the advantages of the Mississippi River, which is open throughout the year, and of the Erie Canal, which, in spite of its being frozen up five months in the year, forms an invaluable artery of commerce between the great agricultural and manufacturing areas.

There is but one serious engineering question in regard to the feasibility of this transportation route, namely, the question of lockage. Had the topography of the country been such that navigable water of the Tennessee could have been reached from the Savannah by simply digging a canal across the divide, and without locks or even with a small number of them, the connection would no doubt have been made years ago and its commercial value would have been incalculable.

The existence of a summit, to be overcome by locks, detracts from the commercial value of the route in two ways, namely, it increases the cost of the improvement in the first instance, and, secondly, it increases the time and cost of transit which virtually lengthens the route, and thus tends to neutralize its advantages over other routes.

To ascertain exactly the extent of these disadvantages would require a detailed survey, which did not come within the scope of the present examination; but we can, in a general way, estimate some of the more important elements involved from data now available.

The route in question should be made navigable for the same class of boats that can navigate the Tennessee and Savannah Rivers. The locks and canal trunk should, therefore, be of the same dimensions as those now building at Muscle Shoals on the Tennessee River, which will pass boats three hundred feet long, sixty feet wide, and drawing five feet of water. Smaller boats could, of course, be provided for at considerably less cost, which might answer for local traffic; but the magnitude of the proposed work is such that, if undertaken at all, it should be done on a scale that would enable it to compete successfully with existing through routes.

Referring more particularly to the Hiawassee route, it is found that, from the navigable waters of the Hiawassee at Charleston, Tennessee, to the summit at Hightower Gap, a difference of level of 1,300 feet must be overcome by lockage, and from the summit to Augusta, on the Savannah, 1,850 feet, the distance being two hundred and ninety-one miles.

The total lockage would therefore be 3,150 feet, and assuming that the ordinary form of canal-lock is to be used, and that the canal trunk and dams can be so located as to admit of locks of an average lift of fifteen feet, it would require two hundred and ten locks, or about three times the number on the Erie Canal.

An important question naturally comes in at this point as to whether a considerable number of these locks cannot be replaced to advantage by inclined planes similar to the outlet lock above Georgetown, District of Columbia. If so, a very great reduction in cost can be effected in that way. With this view, Mr. Whinery was instructed to observe, as far as practicable, whether the topography of the country was favorable to this plan, and it appears from his examination that in the vicinity of the summit there are a number of places where the inclined plane could be used to advantage, and a more extended survey may show that it can be quite generally used. If so, the advantage to be expected will be apparent from the following rough estimate:

On the west side of Hightower Gap the fall is about four hundred feet in one mile, which would require twenty-seven locks at an average cost of, say, $150,000 each, or a total cost of $4,050,000. I believe the same lift can be overcome by an inclined plane for $500,000, or about one-eighth the cost of the locks. In this estimate I have not undertaken to compare the relative costs of canal trunk, dams, &c., in the two cases, but have no doubt of the advantage being decidedly in favor of the inclined plane in these items, as well as in the economy of water, since it could, if necessary, be operated by steam, and there would then be no loss of water except from leakage and evaporation.

It will be seen, then, that the cost of the proposed improvement may by the use of inclined planes be greatly reduced from what the amount of lockage would seem to indicate, and there would also be a great saving in time of transit from the same cause.

As to the relative feasibility of the Little Tennessee and Hiawassee routes, it appears that the former has a considerable advantage in regard to a summit level without a tunnel, and to the amount of lockage; but the Hiawassee route is about one hundred and ten miles shorter, and strikes the Tennessee River below the mouth of the Clinch, which greatly increases its volume, and below the troublesome shoals between the mouth of the Hiawassee and that of the Little Tennessee.

In order to a full investigation of the merits of these routes the following information will be necessary:

1. The cost of improving the Hiawassee, Little Tennessee, and Savannah Rivers up to the head of practicable slackwater navigation.

2. Exact profiles of the routes through Hightower and Rabun Gaps, with cross-sections at suitable points, from which it can be determined to what extent the inclined-plane system can be utilized and estimates of the cost of building the necessary canal can be made.

3. A comparison of the cost, distances, lockage, &c., of the Hiawassee and Little Tennessee routes with each other, and with the corresponding elements of the route via Tennessee, Coosa, and Ocmulgee Rivers surveyed in 1874. (See Appendix C C, page 658, Report of Chief of Engineers, 1875.)

By making use of certain railroad surveys that have been made over a part of the route, the necessary survey ought not to cost more than $15,000, and could easily be made during one summer.

I would therefore respectfully suggest an appropriation of that amount, if Congress decides to take further action in regard to this route.

A detailed account of Mr. Whinery's examination will be found in his report herewith.

Respectfully submitted.

W. R. KING,
Major of Engineers.

The CHIEF OF ENGINEERS, United States Army.

I invite the especial attention of the Committee on Commerce and the Senate to the remarks of Major King touching the importance of the proposed canal.

If practicable—

He says—

it would be one of the most important transportation routes in the United States. In fact it would combine, in a remarkable degree, the advantages of the Mississippi River, which is open throughout the year, and of the Erie Canal, which, in spite of its being frozen up five months in the year, forms an invaluable artery of commerce between the great agricultural and manufacturing areas.

The "question of lockage" is the "one serious engineering question," and this Major King thinks can be overcome by "inclined planes, similar to the outlet-lock above Georgetown, District of Columbia;" and he estimated that the sum of $15,000 would enable the "necessary surveys" to be made to ascertain exactly the engineering difficulties in the way, and the cost of construction, &c., and I have had the honor to introduce an amendment to the river and harbor bill appropriating that amount.

It appears to me, Mr. President, that the importance of this transportation route fully justifies the expenditure of this amount of money by the Government.

My attention was first called to the feasibility of this water connection by Colonel James Edward Calhoun, (himself an accomplished engineer,) who resides on the Savannah River, at the foot of Trotter's Shoals, in Abbeville County, South Carolina, (one of the finest water powers in this country,) and upon an examination of the map I found that the waters of the two rivers, Savannah and Little Tennessee, almost interlocked on the divide of the Blue Ridge Mountains, which separated them. The main question in uniting the waters for the purposes of a canal was, as I was informed, the practicability of securing a summit water-level.

In this connection I beg to submit the following letter from Major Thomas B. Lee, a very able engineer, who has had large experience in that section of the country as a railroad engineer, and who accompanied Mr. Whinery in making the examination to which Major King refers in the closing paragraph of his report:

ANDERSON COURT-HOUSE, SOUTH CAROLINA.
January 4, 1881.

SIR: In response to your request I address you in reference to the practicability of a canal for transportation across the Blue Ridge Mountains, through the Rabun Gap, (in Rabun County, Georgia,) connecting the waters of the Savannah and Tennessee Rivers.

First, I beg leave to ask your attention to the accompanying paper furnished Mr. S. Whinery, United States engineer in charge of "reconnoissance for canal across Blue Ridge Mountains, &c.," at his request.

It embodies the result of examinations and surveys made by myself at different times, and presents such information pertaining to the topographical and geographical features of the proposed route of canal as could only have been had by an extended and expensive examination. The project of a canal through the Rabun Gap has often occupied my thoughts when engaged professionally at different times in that section of country. I found that there would be no difficulty whatever (even without constructing dams to secure a supply in dry seasons) in an ample flow of water for the summit level. The Rabun Gap presents the appearance of a wide valley in the mountains, smooth and fertile, producing large crops of corn. The traveler here never knows when he passes the divide unless it is pointed out to him. The waters of the Savannah and Little Tennessee Rivers flow parallel with each other (in opposite directions) in a broad cornfield, where a ditch ten feet deep would connect them. The principal streams forming the Little Tennessee River unite very near the gap, and can be utilized as feeders for the summit level of the canal at a small expense.

The remainder of the route presents no unusual engineering difficulties. The total distance between Loudon, Tennessee, and Augusta, Georgia, is estimated at three hundred and sixty miles. This is by no means the length of canal to be built, for both on the Little Tennessee and Savannah Rivers many miles of natural navigation and also of slackwater navigation can be had. I regard the project as eminently practicable and one of vast importance to the South Atlantic States and those immediately west of the Blue Ridge Mountains. It would in its length be fifty-eight miles in Tennessee, seventy-five miles in North Carolina, nineteen miles in Georgia, and two hundred and eight miles in South Carolina and Georgia, giving to the countries east and west of the Blue Ridge Mountains a sure and cheap means of exchanging products at all seasons of the year, for, be it remembered, this water-way would never be closed by ice, except in unusually severe weather, and then not long at a time; no such thing as "closing navigation for the winter." It would develop and make accessible a series of water-powers equal to any. These powers would be in the iron, copper, coal, lime, and timber regions, in the land of wool and cotton. It would carry an immense commerce to the enrichment of our people and prevent railroad monopoly. In view of these facts and many others that might be presented, it would seem to me, respected sir, that there is no project that could engage the attention of our lawgivers, the completion of which would be the means of enriching our people and developing our resources to a greater extent. A few thousand dollars now for a thorough survey of this route would, when applied, develop facts, I believe, which would induce Congress to make at the proper time the needed appropriation to build this great water highway.

Respectfully, yours,

THOMAS B. LEE.

Hon. M. C. BUTLER.

Major Lee does not overdraw the importance of this canal, nor the great benefit it will be to the country on either side of the Blue Ridge Mountains. It would give to the great West another outlet to the sea, and to the sea-coast States another inlet to the West.

It is stated, Mr. President, that the Government has granted in aid of railroads 200,000,000 acres of land (about forty-six million acres patented) and 80,000,000 in bonds, amounting in value to more than $300,000,000, perhaps $400,000,000; and within the next few years 100,000 miles of railway will be in operation in the American Union.

This ever-growing, ever-increasing railroad corporate power is beginning to arouse serious alarm among many very patriotic persons, and the apprehension is spreading lest the corporations become stronger than their creators, the governments State and Federal.

The consolidation of companies and accumulation of vast controlling capital in the hands of a few individuals appear to threaten with danger the private rights of individuals and orderly administration of government. How far this may be true or otherwise it is no part of my present purpose to indicate. It is sufficient for the present to affirm, what I believe is very generally admitted, that there is cause for serious alarm at the overgrown power of corporations in this country, and the statesmen of different sections are anxiously considering methods and means to subject them to proper legal restraints and secure that measure of governmental control which will not interfere unduly with vested rights and cripple the energies and capacities of the corporations on the one hand, or permit the abuse of corporate power on the other.

My own judgment on this point is that all incorporated companies deriving their franchises and powers from the United States Government should be supervised and regulated by the national authority, and those existing under State grants should be controlled and regulated by State authority. This, I believe, will be found to be one solution of the problem, and if the respective powers of the national and State governments are firmly and impartially exercised they will prove amply efficacious to avert any probable evil which is likely to arise.

But, Mr. President, there is another great agency which should be freely and fully invoked to supplement and re-enforce the cautious and just exercise of the powers of Government—the law and power of competition. The productive capacities and possibilities of this country and the increasing demand throughout the whole world for the products of our people are so great that it will be next to impossible to overstrain or overtax the saving effects of stimulated competition in trade. And I believe it is not only the right but the duty of the National Government to open or aid in opening every natural avenue and highway of trade and commerce for the convenience of the people that it can possibly reach under the limitations imposed by the Constitution.

I need not argue at this day to an American Congress that the Govment may constitutionally aid in the improvement and development of any of the many water-ways of the country for the accommodation and convenience of commerce and trade between the States, one with the other, and between them and foreign countries. If there was ever any doubt on this subject the exercise of the power has been too long enforced and acquiesced in to be questioned now. And I know of no more effective way of establishing permanent, successful, and indestructible competition in trade, no more effective way of throwing safeguards and shields around private rights of trade, than by developing to the highest degree of perfection every water-way in the country to be free for the purposes of navigation and travel to every citizen.

We have absolute free trade between the States the nearest and remotest, and the products of the diversified soil and climate of our vast territory may be freely interchanged without the interference of a custom-house officer or tax-gatherer. It may do more. It may go out into the great highways of the commerce of the world untrammeled and unfettered by the burdens of taxation. This, Mr. President, is a great boon to 50,000,000 of people inhabiting such a country as ours. No charge for the interchange of the endless variety of our commodities with each other save the cost of transportation. Surely, it is worthy the consideration of the most ambitious statesmanship to make this charge as light as possible.

This particular project for direct water communication between the tributaries of the Mississippi River and the Atlantic Ocean would be a great blessing to the vast number of our people immediately benefited by the facilities and advantages it would afford them of commercial intercourse. It would establish a strong competitor and rival in trade to railroads or other channels, which might otherwise acquire a monopoly in transportation and impose onerous tariff rates of freight and passage.

The great surplus of food supply in the fertile grain and stock-raising States across the mountains would find another avenue for getting their products to a ready and paying market, and the States on this side the mountains, abounding in products and manufactures for clothing the people, would have additional facilities for getting them to willing purchasers.

Of course my opinion of the practicability of this canal will count for very little, but I am encouraged to have faith in it by the favorable opinions of Major King, who I am informed is a prudent and able engineer, who thinks carefully before venturing an opinion, and of Major Lee whose letter I have read, and who I have the pleasure of knowing as one of the ablest and most reliable engineers in the country, and as having a thorough knowledge of the country whereof he speaks.

I believe it is generally conceded that water transportation of freight is cheaper than railway transportation. This is certainly true of heavy, bulky articles, such as cotton, cotton goods, sacked grain, ores, pork, heavy machinery, &c., and wherever water-ways can be opened or improved for the cheaper movement of these commodities, it is the duty of the General Government to open or improve them.

The Government, as has been shown, has contributed over three hundred millions of dollars in land and bonds to railroads, and to-day those very railroads are laying a tariff on the commercial products of the people, in the shape of freight charges and passenger rates, that absorbs a large proportion of their profits. Instead of returning the bounty of the Government, lavishly bestowed, of the people's land and money, by liberality toward them, they extort in the way of freight charges "what the article will bear;" and therefore, Mr. President, I have always advocated the generous appropriations by Congress for the improvement of our rivers and harbors. They can be used by all the people who will furnish their own means of navigation—freely and without charge.

I vote for the appropriations for rivers and harbors with more satisfaction than any others acted upon by Congress, for two reasons: first, because the money is used to supply additional facilities to the people of the country for commercial intercourse, and, second, because the money is honestly expended and the people get a satisfactory return. It will be a happy day for the whole country when the same may be said of all the other appropriations.

It is not wise statesmanship, or true economy, Mr. President, to stint and pinch any branch of the public service. People never complain of liberal allowances for the public service if those allowances are honestly expended. Jobbery and corruption, abuse and violation of official trusts, using the public funds for private ends, diverting them to other than the objects for which they are allowed, these are some of the evils that raise a clamor against the administration of our affairs, and I am happy to believe that occasion for such clamor is rarely, if ever, found nowadays in the Congress of the United States. I believe there is not an instance known where there has been the slightest defalcation or misconduct by one of the Engineer Corps of the Army in the disbursement and expenditure of the appropriations for rivers and harbors, all of which pass through their hands. This is certainly a creditable record for officers charged with the disposition of so many millions of dollars; but it is the simple truth. And how much those officers have contributed and are contributing with their efficient corps of civil assistants to the advancement of commercial prosperity and facilities for trade the country does not appreciate.

The improvement of the navigation of every stream, however small, which enables the farmer or the manufacturer or miner to get his products to market cheaper than before its improvement, is a benefit to that farmer or manufacturer or miner which the Government ought to bestow because that stream is free to be navigated by every citizen of every State in the Union, subject of course to police and other regulations. This Blue Ridge Canal, if upon further investigation it should be found to be practicable, will pour into the ports of the South Atlantic a wealth of products from the interior valleys, in addition to those now carried by rail, that will in a few years pay for its construction tenfold.

Some of these ports have already a large and valuable and annually increasing export trade, and ought to have much larger import trade. Savannah for instance, although the sixty-third city in the United States in population, is the seventh in the value of her export trade. Charleston is the thirty-sixth in population and eighth in the value of her foreign exports. Wilmington is the one hundred and twenty-third in population and the nineteenth in the value of exports. Why the small towns of Beaufort and Port Royal, South Carolina, which constitute one customs district, have annual exports to foreign countries amounting in value to $1,952,644, while Providence, Rhode Island, with a population of 104,850, the twentieth city in the Union, has annual exports of only $15,000 in value.

I call attention to these facts to show the importance of opening every profitable avenue to these great gateways of foreign commerce in order that additional facilities may be provided to the people for getting their products into the commerce of the world, and getting back in exchange such commodities as they require for their comfort and happiness.

I trust, Mr. President, the Committee on Commerce and the Senate will concur with me in the propriety of making this small appropriation for this great national work, and move the reference of my amendment to the Committee on Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. EATON. The Committee on Foreign Relations are very anxious that a bill, or two bills rather, relating to one and the same matter, reported many days since, should be taken up. I feel that the honor of the Government, the honor of the country, demands that the Japanese indemnity bill should be taken up and passed. I apprehend it will take but very little time. A great deal of labor has been given to it, and I venture to move to postpone all prior orders, and if they are postponed I shall then move to take up that bill.

Mr. INGALLS. Is it a House bill that the Senator wishes to have considered?

Mr. EATON. No, sir.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Connecticut, in behalf of the Committee on Foreign Relations, moves that the pending order, being the consideration of the Calendar of General Orders under the standing order of the day, be postponed, stating his purpose to be, if that motion shall prevail, to move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the Japanese indemnity bill.

Mr. EATON. The bill (S. No. 2022) in relation to the Japanese indemnity fund is the one that I wish to have considered first.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I know that the Senator from Vermont who sits beside me [Mr. EDMUNDS] feels a decided interest in that bill. I do not know whether he is in the city or what detains him from his seat, but I know he would like very much to be here when the bill is considered.

Mr. EATON. Does my friend desire that we should not take up the bill this morning?

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I merely make the suggestion that I know the Senator from Vermont desires to be here when it is considered.

Mr. EATON. I should be very sorry to displease one of my brother Senators, but at this late day the bill ought to be taken up, and I shall venture to ask that it be taken up.

Mr. COCKRELL. I hope not. I hope we shall devote one morning to the Calendar and see if we cannot dispose of some cases. I hope my friend from Connecticut will not press the Japanese indemnity bill this morning, when the Senator from Vermont is not here. Let us go on with the Calendar.

Mr. EATON. Very well; I will not press it, but I shall ask that my friend will assist me to-morrow in taking the bill up.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The motion is withdrawn.

CHANGE OF NAME OF VESSELS.

Mr. BALDWIN. The Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 6023) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to change the name of vessels under certain circumstances, have instructed me to report it without amendment, with a recommendation that it pass.

Mr. BURNSIDE. That bill will lead to no opposition and will require no discussion. It is simply to change the names of vessels. It is a unanimous report of the Committee on Commerce, and I hope the Senate will take it up for present action.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. INGALLS. I object.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made, and the bill goes on the Calendar.

Mr. BURNSIDE. It is a very simple bill and I hope the Senator from Kansas will withdraw his objection. It will not require any discussion at all.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will report the first bill on the Calendar at the point reached when it was last under consideration.

CLAIMS FOR HORSES AND EQUIPMENTS.

The bill (S. No. 351) to extend the time for filing claims for horses and equipments lost by officers and enlisted men in the service of the United States, was announced as being first in order upon the Calendar.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the time for filing claims for horses and equipments lost by officers and enlisted men in the military service of the United States, which expired by limitation on the 31st day of December, 1875, be, and the same is hereby, extended to two years from and after the passage of this act; and that all such claims filed in the proper Department before the passage of this act shall be deemed to have been filed in due time, and shall be considered and decided without refiling.

Mr. WITHERS. Let the bill go over.

Mr. GARLAND. I believe if the Senator from Virginia will consent to the consideration of the bill for a few minutes we can pass it.

Mr. WITHERS. The only objection I have to it is that it seems to reopen a class of claims which has been excluded by the statute of limitations for six years.

Mr. GARLAND. I will state to the Senator from Virginia that on the 9th of December the further consideration of the bill was postponed for the purpose of getting some data in reference to this class of claims in my State. Since then I have got a list of them, and I find in looking over the matter that it has been exaggerated. According to the report of the Third Auditor there has been scarcely a fourth of the claims presented that were supposed. There is another mistake. The act of 1874 extended this class of claims for two years. The class of claims that I represent particularly are those of constituents of mine, some thirty-five or forty in number, who live in a section of the country where it was difficult really at that time, owing to deficient mail service, to know of the law; and it was in many cases absolutely impossible for them to know of this law and know what they had to do under it in order to perfect their claims. All these claims of which I speak directly are now on file and proof made. There is nothing to be done but simply to extend this time, to enable them to be taken up and passed upon.

Mr. WITHERS. If the object of the bill was to restrict its operation to just that class of cases, it would be a very good thing; but as I understand, there is no restriction on it. It opens the door for the admission of all claims.

Mr. GARLAND. There is a good deal in the suggestion of the Senator from Virginia. I am only speaking particularly of the claims in the State of Arkansas, of which, of course, I have knowledge; but according to the calculation of the Third Auditor there would not be all told a thousand claims more produced than are now before the Department.

Permit me to say that the act of 1874 was an amendment to an act existing ever since 1849, and if we do not give this extension we put ourselves in the anomalous condition of cutting out soldiers from this relief, when now the citizens who had property impressed can present claims for payment by the Department and get pay for them, while the soldiers cannot get pay for their horses. It is a curious piece of legislation, if we had time to go through with it; but I state as a matter of fact to the Senator from Virginia that if this is not done and if these soldiers cannot get pay for the horses but are cut out, while citizens can get pay, under the act of 1849 and the amendments to it, for property impressed, it is an unjust distinction toward the soldiers, of course not intended but by mere oversight of legislation. I wish to call the attention of the Senate to it. I have looked at the data in reference to the State of Arkansas. There are some thirty or forty cases now filed in the Department, and there is nothing to do but to extend the act in order to allow them to be settled, adjusted, and paid.

Mr. INGALLS. I ask, Mr. President, that the order of the Senate relative to debate hitherto made may be enforced.

Mr. GARLAND. I do not think I spoke quite five minutes.

Mr. INGALLS. I did not refer to the Senator from Arkansas, but to debate hereafter that may arise.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Virginia withdraw his objection?

Mr. WITHERS. I withdraw it in order to enable the Senator from Arkansas to make the statement that he desired to make of the facts.

Mr. COCKRELL. I will add that the statement made by the Senator from Arkansas is correct, and in view of the inequality and injustice of the law I have prepared an amendment which I propose to the bill adding a new section. I will read it:

SEC. 2. That all claims arising under the act approved March 3, 1849, entitled "An act to provide for the payment of horses and other property lost or destroyed in the military service of the United States," and all acts amendatory thereof, which shall not be filed in the proper Department within two years from and after the passage of this act, shall be forever barred, and shall not be received, considered, or audited by any Department of the Government.

That would be placing a limitation after due notice upon all classes of claims under the act of 1849.

Mr. WITHERS. I withdraw the objection.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The objection is withdrawn and the bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, the pending question being on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri, which will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. At the end of the bill it is proposed to add as an additional section:

SEC. 2. That all claims arising under the act approved March 3, 1849, entitled "An act to provide for the payment of horses and other property lost or destroyed in the military service of the United States," and all acts amendatory thereof, which shall not be filed in the proper Department within two years from and after the passage of this act, shall be forever barred, and shall not be received, considered, or audited by any Department of the Government.

Mr. WALLACE. This is a bill to open the door when it has been closed by the statute of limitations to a class of cases that might have been filed while the door was open. It seems to me the bill is improper in its character. The amendment of the Senator from Missouri simply gives two years within which to file all these claims. I call the attention of the Senate to the character of the bill.

Mr. THURMAN. I think we ought to have some idea of how much money will go out of the Treasury if this bill should pass. These claims must have originated before April, 1865, when the war closed, or certainly before September, 1865, when the last of the volunteer troops were mustered out of the service. That makes fifteen years or more in which these parties had a right to prefer their claims or those who were barred by the statute of limitations had a right to come to Congress and ask for relief, for an extension of time generally, or each one on his own particular merit, showing the reason why he had not presented his claim in time and asking Congress to afford him relief.

The Senate has, without a single exception, in what I think is a much more meritorious class of claims, the claims under the captured and abandoned property act, refused to extend the limitation to persons claiming for cotton that had been seized by the troops of the United States, which was sold and the proceeds turned into the Treasury, when it was not abandoned at all, and the persons who owned it were entirely loyal. We have, without a single exception I think, refused to extend the statute of limitations in those cases. Under those circumstances, it seems to me that before we open this door as wide as this bill will open it to claims from one end of the United States to another after the lapse of more than fifteen years we ought to know how wide a gap we are likely to make in the Treasury.

Mr. GARLAND. I do not think there is any well-grounded fear as to the number of these claims. I have here the report of the Third Auditor, in which he says that the total number of claims of officers and enlisted men in the United States service during the late war, filed in his office under the act of March 3, 1849, was only 18,344. Of this number four hundred and sixty have been filed since January 1, 1876. The number of claims allowed up to December 1, 1879, is only 11,290. From that he goes on and makes the calculation that probably there would not be exceeding one thousand more filed. If we do not pass this bill we shall present ourselves in the strange condition, I repeat, that the citizen can have his remedy under the act for property impressed when the soldier cannot for loss of a horse.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. CONKLING. I ask that it be read.

The Chief Clerk again read the amendment of Mr. COCKRELL.

Mr. CONKLING. Two additional years are to be given?

Mr. COCKRELL. Only two years, and then it bars a class of claims which never have been barred, citizen claims.

Mr. CONKLING. And if we do not add the two years, they would be barred anyway?

Mr. COCKRELL. No, they have never been barred before. The claims of citizens, under the act of 1849, will never be barred unless some bar is placed on them, but the claims of soldiers under that act have been barred, and this is simply to give the soldiers two years, and to give the citizens only two years, and place them all on an equality.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. The amendment gives effect to the body of the bill, but limits its operation to two years.

Mr. COCKRELL. It limits it to two years as to another class of claims not barred.

Mr. CONKLING. That I may be sure I understand the Senator from Missouri, the fact as I infer is that a large number of these claims is barred?

Mr. COCKRELL. Of soldiers only.

Mr. CONKLING. As my friend repeats that, I will read:

That the time for filing claims for horses and equipments lost by officers and enlisted men in the military service of the United States, which expired by limitation on the 31st day of December, 1875, be, and the same is hereby, extended to two years from and after the passage of this act; and that all such claims filed in the proper Department before the passage of this act shall be deemed to have been filed in due time, and shall be considered and decided without refiling.

The effect of that is to extend as to all those here described the time for two years, and to cure any defects in non-filing heretofore. The honorable Senator from Missouri offers an amendment, the effect of which, as I understand, is as to others to extend for a certain time, and bar after that time.

Mr. COCKRELL. Not to extend it at all, but to give a limitation at the same time these will be limited.

Mr. CONKLING. That is, to fix the same limit, to wit, two years from now?

Mr. COCKRELL. Yes, sir.

Mr. CONKLING. The practical effect of all of which will be that as to officers, soldiers, and everybody else, two years more are to be conferred upon them within which to present their claims?

Mr. COCKRELL. And under the law now a certain class have an indefinite time; no bar at all.

Mr. GARLAND. The soldier is barred.

Mr. COCKRELL. The soldier is barred.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Missouri, [Mr. COCKRELL.]

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to extend the time for filing claims for horses and equipments lost by officers and enlisted men in the service of the United States, and for other purposes."

CLAIMS OF GEORGIA FOR FRONTIER DEFENSE.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I ask unanimous consent to take up the bill (S. No. 1134) to repay to the State of Georgia $27,175.50, money advanced by said State for the defense of her frontiers against the Indians, and not heretofore repaid.

Mr. COCKRELL. I call for the regular order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The regular order is demanded.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. If in order, I will move to postpone the pending and all prior orders with a view to take up that bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I will state to the Senate that it is a small bill to reimburse the State of Georgia the sum of $22,000, but printed in the title here $27,175.50. The report of the committee shows it to be $22,000, every dollar of which is proved by the original vouchers, and the repayment of which is admitted never to have been made by the Secretary of the Treasury. There is no doubt in the world about it. The State is entitled to it. It is a small sum which we advanced to the Government sixty years ago. Other States have been paid similar claims, and there is no objection to this claim from the Treasury Department. We ask no interest whatever on the amount for the whole time. I ask that the bill be taken up. It is a Senate bill. If it is not taken up now it cannot get through the other House at this session. It will take but a few moments to pass it, for there is no opposition to the bill from the Treasury Department. They admit that the money was paid; the records show that the money was paid; and we are prepared to show by the record why it has not been passed upon previously. The truth is, the vouchers were lost for many years. They were recovered in 1857 or 1858. Then it was that the Legislature of Georgia called the attention of the Senators and Representatives from that State to the fact, and a resolution was offered to authorize the payment in 1860. That resolution was pending when the State left the Senate and the House. There is no doubt about the justice of the claim. Here are the original vouchers for every dollar, and we ask no interest on it whatever, and as it is in favor of a State, I submit to the Senate that it ought to be passed upon.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, this is a motion to take up a bill to settle a claim for the defense by the State of Georgia of her frontier against the Indians in the year 1795 and from that year on down to 1818. The last expenditure under it is seventy-two years old. The attention of Congress was called to it, according to the statement of the honorable Senator from Georgia, about 1857, when the vouchers, which had previously been lost, were discovered by the State. Now, whatever may be the intrinsic merits of this claim, it is difficult to see why, at this time in the session, the Senate should be asked to take it up and consider it, and deal with the various legal and equitable questions which it involves when it cannot in the nature of things in the existing condition of the public business be expected to pass both Houses of Congress at the present session. It is a denial of justice to a large number of pension applicants, to a large number of individual claims which have the greatest merit, which must be thrust over if the time of the Senate is occupied in this manner.

I desire to say for one that I am opposed to the payment of any more of these ancient State claims by themselves. The State of Massachusetts has a large claim arising in the war of 1812; our citizens have their claims against France and men have died in poverty by reason of the denial by the United States Government of their claims, which the Government has had the benefit of as much as if it had received the money into the Treasury, in settling with France. The only answer I have ever heard made to these claims was that the old federalists behaved abominably in the war of 1812 and no claim of such a State as that ought to be paid.

It seems to me that Congress ought to authorize all the States of the Union that have matured claims that have gone into the past to go into the Court of Claims and there have a hearing; let the Government be heard on the other side; and let that court, not enter a judgment as it does in the case of ordinary claims, but let that court report to Congress, with such set-off as the Government may establish on the hearing, the nature, and foundation of such claims and the facts on which they are supported and the equities which relate thereto, and then let Congress deal with the entire subject in a mass and wipe out from the claims against the Government all these ancient State claims.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. If the Senator from Massachusetts will allow me just a moment, I desire to say that I supposed this claim would have passed within the time already consumed. I did not desire to consume the time of the Senate, and, as we are still in the morning hour and several Senators around me have asked that I shall not press my motion at this time, I withdraw it.

Mr. HOAR. I will permit the Senator to withdraw the motion, and yield for that purpose, when I have said one other sentence; and that is, that the Senator will see that this claim of the State of Georgia will involve some very serious considerations as to what she has got from the Indians within her borders, in defiance of the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States. It is a claim which will involve discussing, perhaps, some very interesting historical questions. I now yield.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I say to the Senator from Massachusetts that when the case is fully understood, I expect with a great deal of confidence to secure the co-operation and assistance of the Senator from Massachusetts in support of this claim. I think he will consider it just. I withdraw the motion for the present.

NEW YORK AND CONNECTICUT BOUNDARY.

Mr. CONKLING. Having been detained in committee meeting until after reports from committees were in order, I ask leave to make a report at this time. ["No objection."]

The bill (H. R. No. 6514) concerning the settlement of boundary lines between New York and Connecticut, which was referred a long time ago to the Committee on the Judiciary, I am instructed to report back without amendment; and if the Senate will indulge me an instant further, I should like to add that that bill relating as it does to nothing but the fixing of a boundary between those two States, to which the two States are agreed as the papers show with all the formalities, as it is quite important that that boundary should be fixed, if there be no Senator who has any criticism of the bill and as it will take but a moment to concur with the House, I venture to ask for the immediate consideration of the bill. If it leads to any debate or objection, of course I shall not press it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. HARRIS in the chair.) Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WITHERS. I call for the regular order. If we make an exception in this case we shall have to make it in others. I am anxious to go on with the Calendar.

Mr. CONKLING. I hope then the Senator and others at some more convenient time will allow me to have the bill acted on.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be placed on the Calendar, and the Senate will proceed to the consideration of the next bill on the Calendar.

SCHOOL LANDS IN COLORADO.

Mr. HILL, of Colorado. There is a bill on the Calendar which has been here for over a year, and was passed in my absence without prejudice. I refer to Senate bill No. 769, and I ask to have that bill considered this morning.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Colorado calls for the present consideration of the bill (S. No. 769) to enable the State of Colorado to take lands in lieu of sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections found to be mineral lands.

Mr. KERNAN. I hope we shall proceed with the Calendar in the morning hour. People are pressing me to death in regard to cases which will soon be reached if we go on regularly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Colorado states that the bill called up by him is one heretofore passed over without prejudice.

Mr. KERNAN. Then I shall not interpose.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 769) to enable the State of Colorado to take lands in lieu of sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections found to be mineral lands.

The Committee on Public Lands reported the bill with amendments.

The first amendment was stated to be, after the word "attached," in line 12, at the end of the bill to insert:

Provided, That such selections shall be made from lands returned as agricultural, and upon which, at the date of selection, no valuable mineral discoveries have been made: And provided further, That the right of the State shall be construed and held to be complete in all sections 16 and 36 in townships surveyed prior to the admission of the State into the Union, on the date of such admission, unless at that time valuable mineral discoveries had been made thereon, or the same were returned by the deputy surveyor as mineral lands; and to all sections 16 and 36 in townships surveyed after such admission, on the date of the approval of the plat of the survey thereof by the surveyor-general, unless valuable mineral discoveries at that time had been made thereon.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, to add as section 2 the following:

SEC. 2. That it shall be the duty of the deputy surveyor, at the time of executing the survey of any township, to make a critical examination of the character of sections 16 and 36, and to embrace in his field-notes a full report of any and all mineral discoveries found, to the surveyor-general, who, at the time of approving of such survey, shall decide whether the whole or any part of either of said sections is mineral in character.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move to amend the amendment after the word "who," in line 6, by striking out "at the time of approving of such survey, shall decide," and inserting "shall report to the Secretary of the Interior;" so as to read:

That it shall be the duty of the deputy surveyor, at the time of executing the survey of any township, to make a critical examination of the character of sections 16 and 36, and to embrace in his field-notes a full report of any and all mineral discoveries found, to the surveyor-general, who shall report to the Secretary of the Interior whether the whole or any part of either of said sections is mineral in character.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. TELLER. I have submitted an amendment to the bill and ask to have it read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add as a new section the following:

SEC. —. That the State of Colorado may select an amount of land, equal to 30,000 acres for each Senator and Representative which said State is entitled to in Congress, from any public land in said State not double minimum priced land; or selections may be made from said double minimum lands, but in the latter case the lands are to be computed at the maximum price, and the number of acres proportionally diminished, but no mineral lands shall be selected.

Mr. TELLER. I will say that that section is a bill which stands on the Calendar as Senate bill No. 1468, order of business 998, reported unanimously by the Committee on Education and Labor. If it is put on this bill there is a probability that it may become a law at this session. It is a proper thing for this bill, and I ask to have it put on.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Colorado, [Mr. TELLER.]

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to hear some reason for the amendment.

Mr. TELLER. Under the act donating lands for agricultural-college purposes and the amendment to that act it was provided that each new State when it came in might take the same amount of land; but this land must be taken from the offered lands. The Committee on Education and Labor examined the bill, which was submitted to them, and reported to the Senate that there were not sufficient offered lands in the State; and we could not take scrip because we had some offered lands in the State. The land that has been offered is arid and cannot be available. We have already established an agricultural college at a large expense without anything from the Government, and this is to put us simply on a footing with the other States; that is all. There is a written report, which can be read if the Senator wants to hear it; but the facts are as I have stated.

Mr. COCKRELL. Other States have had the land?

Mr. TELLER. Other States have had the land.

Mr. COCKRELL. Has Colorado selected any portion of hers?

Mr. TELLER. None at all, because the selection must be from the offered land and the offered land is what we call arid land.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HILL, of Colorado. I think there are some further amendments of the committee which were overlooked.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out in lines 10, 11, and 12 the words "prior to the time at which the right of the State thereto would otherwise have attached."

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHIEF CLERK. The next amendment is in section 1, line 15, after the word "made"——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair calls the attention of the Senator from Colorado in charge of the bill to the fact that the amendments now proposed by him are amendments to other amendments reported by the committee. The committee amendments have already been adopted by the Senate. The Senator had better move to reconsider the vote by which the committee amendments were adopted, so that he may proceed to amend them.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move to strike out a part of that amendment and insert the other. That will be in order.

Mr. TELLER. I suppose all this may be done by unanimous consent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Certainly.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move to strike out in line 15 all after the word "made" down to line 25, and insert in lieu thereof what is in the amendment of the Senator from Colorado, [Mr. HILL.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Clerk will report the amendment suggested.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out, in the committee amendment, all after the word "made," in line 15 of section 1, as follows:

And provided further, That the right of the State shall be construed and held to be complete in all sections 16 and 36 in townships surveyed prior to the admission of the State into the Union, on the date of such admission, unless at that time valuable mineral discoveries had been made thereon, or the same were returned by the deputy surveyor as mineral lands; and to all sections 16 and 36 in townships surveyed after such admission, on the date of the approval of the plat of the survey thereof by the surveyor-general, unless valuable mineral discoveries at that time had been made thereon.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

And all such selections shall be reported to the Secretary of the Interior, who shall, if he is satisfied such lands so selected are not mineral, so certify, and thereupon the right of said State to such selected lands shall finally attach; and the Secretary of the Interior shall also ascertain whether any of such sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections are mineral lands, and shall certify their character, which certificate shall determine the matter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on this amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. TELLER. I ask to send with this bill when it goes to the House of Representatives the report accompanying Senate bill No. 1468, which will explain the amendment adopted on my motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That will be done.

Mr. TELLER subsequently said: Senate bill No. 769, which passed this morning, is erroneous in a slight particular, and I ask to have the bill reconsidered for the purpose of offering a formal amendment. Let the bill be considered as reconsidered, if there is no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection the order reconsidering the vote by which the bill was passed will be agreed to. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. TELLER. Now I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. TELLER. I move after the word "Colorado," in the first line of the section which I offered, to insert "in selecting land for agricultural-college purposes under the acts of July 2, 1864, and July 23, 1866;" which is necessary to make the bill intelligible.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

POST-TRADERS.

The bill (S. No. 1123) to amend section 1113 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relative to post-traders at the military posts of the Army, was announced as being next in order.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I have my doubts about the propriety of passing that bill. However, it may be that some one can answer the objections I have to it. At the present time there are post-traders who have a right to trade with the soldiers and others in camp or around and about military headquarters. There are traders also appointed for the Indians. Each set of traders have different rights; one set of traders are allowed to sell liquors; as a general thing the post-traders are, but the others are not. If you invite Indians to come into a military camp where liquors are sold there will be trouble that will counterbalance all the profits that might be gained by this arrangement.

Mr. BURNSIDE. If the Senator from Nebraska will yield to me to make objection to the present consideration of the bill, I will object to it.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I only want to state what my objection is here.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I object to its further consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection being made, the bill goes over under the rule.

RICHARD H. SMITH.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 169) authorizing the settlement of the accounts of Richard H. Smith, deceased; which was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes the proper accounting officers of the Treasury to adjust and settle the accounts of Richard H. Smith, deceased, late lieutenant in the Third Regiment United States Artillery, who lost his life in the wreck of the steamer San Francisco in the year 1853.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOSEPH B. CAMPBELL.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 445) for the relief of Joseph B. Campbell; which was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, in line 17, after the word "for," to strike out "court and witness fees" and insert "costs;" so as to read "it being the sum expended by said Captain Campbell for costs in defending said suit in State and United States courts."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WITHERS. I should like to hear the report read, or an explanation of the facts of the case.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. MCMILLAN] reported the bill.

Mr. MCMILLAN. There is a report accompanying the bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. The report is a long one. I hold it in my hand, and can give a statement of the material part of it.

Mr. WITHERS. That is all I desire.

Mr. COCKRELL. The report was made on the 5th of May, 1880, by the Senator from Minnesota, [Mr. MCMILLAN,] and the following is the material part of it:

In August, 1874, Captain Joseph B. Campbell, Fourth Artillery, United States Army, was ordered to the military command of Alaska, and remained in such command till June, 1876. In October, 1874, in the discharge of his duties and in obedience to the orders of his superior officers, he arrested, among others, one Hugh Waters for a violation of the laws of the United States. Such proceedings were had thereafter that Waters was discharged, and in 1876 brought suit in the State court in Oregon, Clatsop County, against Captain Campbell for false imprisonment in such arrest and imprisonment. The action was removed from the State court to the circuit court of the United States for the district of Oregon, and there tried. On the 4th of September, 1877, judgment was rendered in favor of Waters and against the defendant, Campbell, for $2,000 damages and $100.50 costs taxed. The bill provides for the payment of this judgment, and an additional sum of $191.35 expended by Captain Campbell in defending said action.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. May I interrupt the Senator from Missouri? The same bill precisely passed both Houses at the last session, and was signed by the President.

Mr. MCMILLAN. There has been but one case before the Committee on Claims, and this is the report made.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. The same bill was referred to me by the Military Committee, and on examination I found it had been already passed.

Mr. MCMILLAN. The bill in this case was introduced by the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. EDMUNDS,] who is detained from the Senate by illness, and it was referred to the Committee on Claims, and this report was made at the last session of Congress. It was not reached upon the Calendar, but went over. That is all I know of the case. It was before the Committee on Claims and I made the report myself.

Mr. MAXEY. A bill precisely for the same purpose, as I understand this bill, was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs by myself for the relief of Captain J. B. Campbell, Senate bill No. 317, with a long report from me; and it passed the Senate, was returned as passed by the House, signed by the presiding officer, presented to the President and approved by him, as recorded in Senate Journal second session Forty-sixth Congress. I therefore do not understand this bill at all.

Mr. MCMILLAN. If that was a bill for relief on account of the same facts, of course it should not be duplicated.

Mr. MAXEY. When I heard the bill read I knew it was precisely the case that the Military Committee had up with regard to the same judgment growing out of the same arrest and I investigated the case very closely, made a report in its favor, and the bill was passed through the Senate and passed the House and was approved by the President.

Mr. COCKRELL. Then I suggest that the case be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection being made the bill goes over for the present. The next bill on the Calendar will be stated.

Mr. COCKRELL subsequently said: I move that the bill (S. No. 445) for the relief of Joseph B. Campbell, which was passed over, be indefinitely postponed. I have examined it and find that it was reported from the Committee on Claims by the Senator from Minnesota, [Mr. MCMILLAN,] and I find that another bill was reported by the Committee on Military Affairs and passed, precisely the same as this; and therefore I move that the bill be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I think that is the proper action.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the bill is indefinitely postponed.

GEORGE E. PAYNE.

The bill (S. No. 1720) to refer the claim of George E. Payne to the Court of Claims was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes that the claim of George E. Payne for the alleged wrongful seizure, use, and occupation of his sugar plantation and other property in the parish of Saint Charles, Louisiana, by the orders of military officers of the United States in 1862, with his petition and all papers filed therewith and relating thereto, including such as are on file in the Treasury and War Departments, be, and the same shall be, referred to the Court of Claims, which court is authorized to hear and determine, without regard to lapse of time, according to the then existing laws, after considering all competent evidence, the liability or non-liability of the United States, and if liable, then the amount, if any, due to Payne, and to render judgment as in other cases.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ABRIDGMENT OR DENIAL OF SUFFRAGE.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 1721) to enforce the provisions of section 2 of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. ANTHONY. I move that that bill be indefinitely postponed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Rhode Island moves the indefinite postponement of the bill. The bill will be read.

Mr. GARLAND. The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALLACE] who reported the bill is not in his seat. I ask that it go over.

Mr. ANTHONY. He has no desire to press the bill.

Mr. GARLAND. I do not suppose he has; but let it go over.

Mr. ANTHONY. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

DEAD-LETTER OFFICE AT SAN FRANCISCO.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 1496) to establish a dead-letter office at the city of San Francisco; which was considered as in Committee of the Whole. In order to facilitate the delivery of letters on the Pacific coast, and the speedy return to the writers thereof of such as are refused or cannot be delivered, the Postmaster-General is by the bill directed to establish at the post-office in the city of San Francisco, California, a dead-letter office, and to prescribe such rules and regulations for the management thereof as he, in his judgment, may deem proper and necessary.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BASIL MORELAND.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 1152) for the relief of Basil Moreland; which was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs, with an amendment, in line 5, to strike out the words "five thousand five hundred" and insert "two thousand two hundred and twelve;" so as to make the bill read:

That there be paid, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Basil Moreland, of Mankato, Minnesota, the sum of $2,212, in full for all claim he may have against the United States for his land and improvements in Blue Earth County, Minnesota, taken by the United States for the Winnebago Indians.

Mr. THURMAN. Let the report be read.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. WILLIAMS May 6, 1880:

The Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill for the relief of Basil Moreland, report as follows:

In March, 1854, Basil Moreland settled on the unsurveyed public lands in the Territory of Minnesota, on Blue Earth River. He built a good house and fenced and cultivated a considerable portion of said land. At the time of this settlement no right of pre-emption as to the unsurveyed public lands existed, but in that same year, August 4, 1854, Congress passed an act authorizing such pre-emption. On the 17th March, 1856, Moreland, having continued to reside on and cultivate said land, went to the land office with his witnesses to prove his settlement and right of pre-emption, and offered to pay the money, which was refused by the register of the land-office upon the ground that this land was embraced in a boundary recently set apart as a home reservation for the Winnebago Indians, in accordance with a treaty of February 27, 1855. He continued to reside upon and cultivate said land until the fall of 1856, when he was evicted by the agent of said Indian tribe. In the fall of 1861, the Indians having been removed to another reservation, he returned to said farm, and continued to reside on and cultivate the same until it was sold for the benefit of the Winnebagoes for $1,212 in 1863.

The treaty with the Winnebagoes did not locate the reservation, but provided it should be on Blue Earth River, and it was surveyed and located so as to include Moreland's land, after Moreland's settlement, and after the passage of the act of August 4, 1854, by which he acquired a clear vested right to pre-empt said land, and of which his expulsion could not divest him, and when he returned to it in 1861 his rights were as complete as when he was forcibly expelled from it.

He made another effort to perfect his title by an appeal to the Secretary of the Interior, Hon. Caleb Smith, and offered to locate the land with a military land warrant. The Secretary, after a full examination of the case, in April, 1862, decided that Moreland was entitled to pre-empt said land, and directed the Commissioner of the Land Office to allow him to perfect his title by locating the same with a military land warrant; which was done and the patent actually issued, dated April 10, 1863, but was arrested in its transmission by order of Secretary of the Interior J. P. Usher, who had succeeded Caleb Smith in the Department of the Interior.

The entry was canceled and the land warrant returned on the ground that the treaty with the Indians was the supreme law of the land. The reasoning of the Secretary is not satisfactory, but admitting its force as a matter of law, it does not affect Moreland's equitable claim for damages. There can be no doubt of his right to pre-empt said land, and that he did all the law required of him to perfect his title, but lost his land and improvements and has never been paid for either.

An act of Congress of July 14, 1862, directed the Secretary of the Interior to examine and audit the claims of persons damaged by the treaty with the Winnebagoes. Then pre-emptors to the number of twenty presented the claims which were allowed by the Secretary, and have all been paid except Moreland, (see letter of Secretary Usher to Commissioner of Indian Affairs of date April 22, 1865.)

The land sold for $1,224, the improvements were valued at $1,200, and the committee believe that Moreland is justly entitled to this sum less the value of the land warrant, which was returned to him, say, $200; and they therefore recommend that the bill be amended by striking out the words "$5,500" and inserting "$2,212," in full satisfaction of all claim of said Moreland in this behalf.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The facts of the case are simply these: This man unquestionably when he went there did acquire a right to pre-empt that land; he did offer to do so; and he appealed to the Department of the Interior at Washington when Mr. Caleb Smith was the Secretary of the Interior, who decided that he was so entitled. He settled upon the land. The law of Congress authorizing the pre-emption right was passed before the treaty was made with the Winnebagoes, and the man was living on the land. He received a patent for his land, which was canceled by order of the successor of Mr. Smith in the Department of the Interior, and he lost his land. It was put up and sold under the treaties with the Indians for the benefit of the Winnebagoes. The committee directed me to report that Mr. Moreland was clearly entitled to what the land brought at the sale made for the benefit of the Indians, less the value of the land warrant that he had put upon it—I forget what the amount was, but it is stated in the report. I do not think there can be any doubt about it in the world. It was his land unquestionably. A right to pre-empt is a vested title as good as any other. The man's land was taken from him, sold, and the money turned into the Treasury and held for the benefit of the Indians. The committee propose to give him what the land actually brought. There were a number of other cases of the same sort, and all the others were paid.

Mr. COCKRELL. What did the land bring when it was sold?

Mr. WILLIAMS. The committee state the exact amount in the report. Everything is of record. All the facts that I mention appear of record.

Mr. COCKRELL. Were there other cases of the same class settled?

Mr. WILLIAMS. They have all been settled but this. There was an appropriation which was not enough to cover this.

Mr. COCKRELL. Am I to understand that this land when sold by the Government sold for $5,000?

Mr. WILLIAMS. No; it sold for $1,200, and we did not allow the whole claim. The claim was $7,000 or $8,000, and we allowed him just what the land sold for less the value of the land warrants.

Mr. COCKRELL. How much is the amount in the bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is to strike out $5,500 and insert $2,212.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let me ask how much the agents who were authorized to value the improvements on this land estimated Moreland's improvements at?

Mr. WILLIAMS. It has been so long since I made the report that I am not now familiar with the facts, but they are stated there.

Mr. COCKRELL. I have had occasion to examine this whole question. An agent was sent there; the agent made a valuation upon these lands. The party had a right to surrender the pre-emption and take other lands. Mr. Moreland and two others refused on the ground that there was a valuable mill-site on this land, which made it of great imaginary value.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Moreland paid for the mill-site $2,000, and the books showed that fact; but the committee did not think proper to allow him that. The land was sold for the benefit of the Indians, and Mr. Moreland was turned out of it. The committee thought it proper to give him the value of the land.

Mr. COCKRELL. Does the Senator remember what the valuation of the land was?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not remember now.

Mr. COCKRELL. Were not the improvements estimated in the value of the lands when the lands were sold; and was not the $1,200 a full equivalent for the lands and improvements?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I think not.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is my recollection in regard to it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It has been a good while since I made the report. I know that that was the basis on which the report was made, and I think the report so states. I am so far off that I did not hear its reading distinctly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REFERENCE OF A BILL.

Mr. TELLER. I want to call the attention of the Senate to a bill which came from the House and was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. I think the bill should have gone to the Committee on Mines and Mining. There is no question of law in it. I have called the attention of one member of the Committee on the Judiciary to it, the only one I could see at the time, and I believe he agrees with me. I ask to have the order vacated, and have House bill No. 1280 referred to the Committee on Mines and Mining.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the vote by which the bill (H. R. No. 1280) to amend section 2326 of the Revised Statutes, relating to suits at law affecting the title to mining claims, was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary will be reconsidered, and the bill referred to the Committee on Mines and Mining.

ROSE M. WOOD.

The bill (S. No. 1471) granting a pension to Mrs. Rose M. Wood was announced to be next in order on the Calendar.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let that be indefinitely postponed; there is an adverse report.

Mr. CALL. Let that bill be passed over. It was put on the Calender.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

SALE OF CERTAIN LOTS.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 1367) to authorize the commissioners of the District of Columbia to dispose of the ground in square 446, in the city of Washington, belonging to said District, for market and school purposes.

Mr. ROLLINS. This should be indefinitely postponed, as a schoolhouse has already been built on one corner of this lot, and a provision has been inserted in the District appropriation bill providing for another school on the lot. I move therefore that the bill be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. McMILLAN. I think the bill had better be passed over without any such action.

Mr. ROLLINS. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

OSAGE INDIAN TREATY.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 1021) to carry into effect the second and sixteenth articles of the treaty between the United States and the Great and Little Osage Indians, proclaimed January 21, 1867.

Mr. INGALLS. Let that be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

CHEROKEE STRIP LANDS.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 1164) to graduate the price and dispose of the residue of the Cherokee strip lands in Kansas; which was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that all of the lands known as the Cherokee strip lands, on the southern border of Kansas, remaining unsold on the 30th of June, 1880, shall be reduced in price from $1 to 75 cents per acre, and all remaining unsold on the 1st of January, 1881, to not less than 50 cents per acre.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with amendments.

The first amendment was in line 13, after the word "as," to strike out "under the act of Congress for the disposal of the same, approved," and insert "provided by section 2 of an act entitled 'An act to provide for the sale of certain lands in Kansas,' approved February 28, 1877;" so as to read:

And the Secretary of the Interior shall dispose of such residue in the best manner to secure a prompt sale; and proceeds of such lands shall be, and are hereby, appropriated for the same purposes, and in the same manner, as provided by section 2 of an act entitled "An act to provide for the sale of certain lands in Kansas," approved February 28, 1877.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. THURMAN. I think we ought to have some explanation of the bill.

Mr. INGALLS. This land belongs to the Cherokee Nation of Indians, and under existing laws it has heretofore been offered for sale at a certain price per acre. The land not having any special value has remained unsold, and the Indians now desire that the price of the land shall be reduced so that it may be offered at the diminished price and disposed of. This is a bill that meets with the approbation of the Department of the Interior and the authorities of the Cherokee Nation.

Mr. THURMAN. Under what authority is the land to be sold?

Mr. INGALLS. Under the provisions of existing treaties made with the Cherokee Nation.

The Committee on Indian Affairs proposed to amend the bill by adding as section 2 the following:

SEC. 2. That this act shall take effect and be in force from the date of its acceptance by the legislature of the Cherokee Nation, who shall file certificate of such acceptance.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HEIRS OF ROBERT G. HATFIELD.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 1575) to authorize the Commissioner of Patents to hear and determine the application of the legal heirs of Robert G. Hatfield, deceased, for the extension of his patent.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let that be passed over; there is an adverse report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

JOSEPH POTTS.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 293) granting a pension to Joseph Potts.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let that be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

SUITS FOR PATENT INFRINGEMENTS.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 4412) to regulate practice in suits brought to recover damages for infringement of patent; which was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that hereafter in any suit brought in any court having jurisdiction in patent cases for an alleged use or infringement of any patented article, device, process, invention, or discovery, where it shall appear that the defendant in such suit purchased the same in good faith for his own personal use from the manufacturer thereof, or from a person or firm engaged in the open sale or practical application thereof, and applied the same for and to his own use, and not for sale, if the plaintiff shall recover a judgment for $5 or less as damages, the court shall adjudge that he pay all costs of suit; and if the plaintiff shall not recover the sum of $20 or over the court shall adjudge him to pay all his own costs, unless it shall also appear that the defendant at the time of such purchase or practical application had knowledge or actual notice of the existence of such patent.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Patents with amendments.

The first amendment was in line 10, after the word "sale," to strike out "if the plaintiff shall recover a judgment for $5 or less, as damages, the court shall adjudge that he pay all costs of suit."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 13, after the word "and," to insert "not in any manufacturing process."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 14, after the word "over," to strike out "the court shall adjudge him to pay all his own costs" and insert "he shall recover no costs against the defendants."

Mr. CONKLING. Let us hear the provision read as it will stand when that amendment is adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The provision will be reported as it will stand if amended.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

If the plaintiff shall not recover the sum of $20 or over, he shall recover no costs against the defendant, unless it shall also appear that the defendant at the time of such purchase or practical application had knowledge or actual notice of the existence of such patent.

Mr. CONKLING. I am to understand, then, that provision to mean that whenever a patentee brings a suit for an infringement of his patent, he shall not even recover costs, although it may appear that his patent was infringed, unless he can show that the particular person whom he sues knew all about it from the start?

Mr. HOAR. Perhaps the Clerk had better read the whole sentence.

Mr. CONKLING. I should be glad to know a little more about it. If it means that, I should think it radical legislation.

Mr. HOAR. Let the Clerk read further.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Clerk will report the amendment as it would read if amended.

Mr. CONKLING. Will the Chair be kind enough to let the Secretary begin at the beginning of the sentence so that we may hear the whole provision?

Mr. HOAR. Read the whole bill as it will stand if amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Clerk will read the whole bill as it will stand if amended, in case all the amendments shall be agreed to.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

That hereafter in any suit brought in any court having jurisdiction in patent cases for an alleged use or infringement of any patented article, device, process, invention, or discovery, where it shall appear that the defendant in such suit purchased the same in good faith for his own personal use from the manufacturer thereof, or from a person or firm engaged in the open sale or practical application thereof, and applied the same for and to his own use and not for sale, and not in any manufacturing process, if the plaintiff shall not recover the sum of $20 or over, he shall recover no costs against the defendant unless it shall also appear that the defendant at the time of such purchase or practical application had knowledge or actual notice of the existence of such patent, or unless the defendant puts in issue the plaintiff's right to recover anything in the action: Provided, That nothing contained herein shall apply to articles manufactured outside of the United States: And provided further, That this act shall not affect suits commenced prior to its passage.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I understand the provisions of this bill are to limit a patentee's right to recover costs if he does not recover a judgment for $20 in a suit brought against a party who has made a purchase of a patented article in open market and without notice. So far as I am concerned, I do not hesitate to say that I would limit the right of the patentee to recover solely to the party who had manufactured the article which was an infringement of his patent right. There are hundreds and thousands of men engaged in agricultural pursuits who are compelled to buy agricultural implements that have no means of knowing whether the party who offers them for sale in open market has the right to sell them or not, and they buy a reaping-machine or a plow or a mower, or anything of the kind, and the patentee brings suit against the party in whose possession he finds the article on which his patent has been granted for the infringement of his right. The innocent purchaser ought to be protected. If he buys in market overt he has a right to be protected, and he is certainly an innocent man, with no intention to do wrong to the patentee, and we ought not to legislate so as to enable the patentee to recover as against him. I would, if I had the power to do it, put in the bill a clause providing that he should make no recovery of any amount, whether as damages or costs, if the defendant established the fact that he was an innocent purchaser of the article in open market, and used it in the cultivation of his own farm. I would deny the right to recover costs, and I would deny the right to recover a single dollar from any man who had bought the article in open market without knowledge that there had been an infringement of the right of the patentee.

Mr. KERNAN. If that should be made the law, inventors to whom we profess to secure the exclusive right to manufacture and sell the articles invented by them would have no right at all.

Mr. SAULSBURY. The patentee would have a right against a man who manufactured the article in contravention of his patent. I would give him that remedy.

Mr. KERNAN. But you would then find men engaged as manufacturers of the articles from whom the patentee could not collect a dollar. The House, doubtless moved by abuses in suing men and recovering $5 or $10 and costs, sent us a bill which was far more objectionable to persons having patent rights than this as now amended.

Now, I will state to the Senator from Delaware that if he buys a horse in open market that was stolen, he may have to return it to the real owner, no matter how honest he was; but it seems to me that while we profess to protect inventors, and while they cannot go into any court except a United States court to vindicate their rights, this bill guards purchasers sufficiently. It provides that any man who purchases a patented article "in good faith for his own personal use from the manufacturer thereof, or from a person or firm engaged in the open sale or practical application thereof, and applies the same for and to his own use and not for sale," shall not be subjected to any costs if the party does not recover $20 or over as damages. I think that is a sufficient protection. It will not affect men who buy in the ordinary course of business machines for their own use and not for sale. My friend says there ought not to be any damages in such a case. It will be a new idea that Congress, which guarantees to a man that he shall have the exclusive right of making and selling an invention, carries out that pledge by saying to him, "You shall have no costs where the party recovers slight damages." If we say that, and also that a man who buys in good faith shall not be made to pay at all, I do not think that is good law or good practice. I think it will be found in practice that this bill as amended will relieve communities from the abuse of petty suits, and will only subject men to suits who knowingly violate a patent right or who put in issue the right to recover at all and are beaten on that issue. I think this bill should pass as amended, and not the bill of the House; that would really destroy all rights of patentees.

Mr. VOORHEES. Mr. President, there is a system that cannot be described accurately by any milder term than blackmail going on upon the farmers of this country upon a scale of magnitude beyond computation and beyond forbearance. It consists in this: Patentees of articles stand by and see other persons manufacture the same article and sell it until it is spread all over a vast extent of country and in general use. Then their agents commence visiting those who have purchased these articles and have them in use. A farmer when notified that he has in use an article the manufacturer of which it is claimed has infringed some patent right, with the alternative of paying the man who visits him from fifty to one hundred dollars or being dragged to a United States court from fifty to two hundred and fifty miles away, with a prospect before him of big lawyers' fees, witness fees, and possible damages, settles up, and the man goes on to the next.

I sympathize in the protection of men of genius in the right to their productions; but I submit to the Senator from New York that it is quite as competent for patentees to hunt up the men who are infringing their patents by manufacturing as it is to hunt up the innocent farmers who have purchased the articles. It is not difficult to find out where a manufacturing establishment is going on; not as difficult as it is to find where a man puts up a fence of barbed wire or puts into his well a pump—certainly not any more difficult. The only difference in the difficulty is that it is less difficult to alarm a farmer with the prospect of a lawsuit than it is to alarm a manufacturing company. The manufacturing company will stand on its legal rights and go into litigation quite as cheerfully as the other side, while the plain people of the country shrink from law, and justly so, as they would from contagion, small-pox, or any other great calamity.

I submit to the Senate whether it would not be better to hold that the patentee of an article shall first hunt up the manufacturers who are infringing his patent and sue them, rather than to allow him, as the custom now is, to pass by the original sinner, to pass by the first violator of the law, and hunt up the innocent man who has not intended to infringe, but has bought his thrashing-machine or some other article of husbandry in perfect good faith.

I have recently seen the decision of a court with regard to an article of immense importance, where the farmers have resorted to the barbed-wire system in lieu of timber. The decision to which I refer holds that the wire now generally in use has been manufactured by an infringement of the original patent, and that decision has turned loose upon the West agents of the original patentee company to assess and pillage and blackmail the farmers to the extent of over six million dollars.

Mr. CONKLING. What did the Senator say the court held?

Mr. VOORHEES. The court held that the barbed wire now generally in use and generally purchased throughout the prairies of the West had been manufactured by an infringement of the original patent; that is, that the farmers had purchased wire that was made by an infringement upon the original patent of the inventor of the barbed wire. They have paid for it once, and they have to settle now with the original patentee. I say that that decision turns loose upon the prairie farmers, who have inclosed their farms and their yards with this barbed wire, these agents, and the farmers are at their mercy to the extent of over six million dollars, which they will have to pay.

So in regard to other articles, notably in regard to what is called the "driven-well pump." Articles of husbandry of all kinds are also made the instruments of this system of blackmail.

Mr. BECK. Will the Senator from Indiana allow me to suggest to him that a report was made which I have read in regard to that pump? The manufacturers of it furnished a list of all the little farmers they sold it to, and the agents of the patentees went and levied blackmail on each farmer.

Mr. VOORHEES. That is because the farmer will not go to the Federal courts and the manufacturer will. So these agents can get the money from the farmer, and it is easier to frighten him than to recover damages from the manufacturers.

I yesterday introduced a bill which corresponds with the views so well expressed by the Senator from Delaware, [Mr. SAULSBURY,] and if I am in order in doing so I will move that bill as a substitute for the bill now under consideration. I do not regard the bill under consideration as of much value. It is simply a protection of parties from costs where the recovery is not more than $20. I would hold the manufacturer who infringes a patent responsible; the innocent purchasers I would not. If I can do so in order, I offer the following bill as a substitute for the bill under consideration——

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I hope the Senator will withdraw that until we get at the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Such a motion would not be in order until the committee's amendments have been acted on.

Mr. VOORHEES. Very well. I give notice that at the proper time I will offer it.

Mr. KERNAN. Senators will remember that the law now is that if a patentee sues the infringer of a patent and recovers six cents, he gets full costs, and they are very large. This bill is intended as a step in the direction to prevent just such suits as I have heard of in the West about the driven well, where the whole damage cannot be more than $5, and yet the plaintiff gets large costs. Senators should bear in mind that this bill is a great improvement on the law as it now is, and protects the very large body of the farmers and people who buy articles for use from costs; but we did not think it was wise to say that a man should not pay anything; that he should not pay $5 if he had got another man's property to that value. We simply agreed that he should not pay any costs unless there was an infringement that made the damages $20.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I should like to ask why it is necessary that the farmer be brought into court at all. There is no bill that will reach this trouble unless it goes to the very bottom; and let the liability for violating the patent rest entirely upon the manufacturer, and not on the purchaser.

Mr. KERNAN. That is a question which I do not propose to go into. The law has been so from the beginning of the Government. This is a bill to modify the law; and I myself only wish to say that the committee did believe that there should be this relief. They thought it would relieve very largely innocent purchasers who bought patented articles. We submit it to the Senate.

Mr. VOORHEES. I wish to say to the Senator from New York that I expect to vote for his bill, it being a step in the right direction; but after that bill is made as good as it can be, I propose to substitute another which is better.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I happen to know something about this thing. I have seen its practical working on my people. There is not an article of household furniture, there is not an implement on our farms, that there is not a patent right to, and two or three royalties behind for improvements of all kinds on the different parts. I have known fellows to come around and sell to our people farming implements and implements that belong to the kitchen and the hearth, and I have known the purchasers to be as many as three times blackmailed rather than to be carried into a court to defend themselves. The farmers do not know what will come of a suit against them on such a matter. A man gets up and establishes some factory and sends agents out in peddlers' wagons all over the country. The uninformed country people who buy his wares do not know who is the genuine patentee; they have no means of learning. It will cost them a lawyer's fee if they go to town to inquire, and they can hardly find a lawyer in a village who is familiar with the patent laws.

I say the responsibility and liability for damages should stop with the man who manufactures an article, and the bill should be so amended by a substitute as to provide that no innocent purchaser without notice should be liable to the patentee for the use of an article he buys in the ordinary course of business. There is hardly anything that has not got a patent on it. I was invited one day by the manufacturer of a magnificent engine in the city of Springfield to look at it as the model of an engine, and he said to me, "Do you know that the patents on the different parts of this engine cost me as a manufacturer $15,000 for this one single engine?" It is so with nearly everything. I remember one case of a man who had been blackmailed three times upon a washing-machine. He paid the hush-money, $5 each time, to the agent, who came around and who preyed upon his fears by telling him that he was liable to be mulcted in heavy damages. After paying three times, the fourth fellow came around to blackmail him, and he took him to the wood-pile and chucked him in. I remember myself of buying a seed-grass gatherer, and I brought it home, and a fellow came around and wanted me to pay him for a patent right on the machine.

Mr. EATON. Did he get it?

Mr. WILLIAMS. No, sir; he did not get it; but I know of hundreds of instances where people do submit to paying for such things. I am in favor not only of putting these restrictions on, but I am in favor of removing entirely the liability of the innocent purchaser of any patented machine whatever.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, sympathizing with the Senator from Indiana and the Senator from Kentucky as I do in the views they have expressed on this subject, I appeal to them whether the better course to pursue is not to vote down the amendments proposed by the committee and accept the bill that came from the House as being the most practicable thing we can do in the present condition of the public business.

There is no question that great injuries are continually inflicted upon the people of the West by vexatious and blackmailing suits to recover damages for the use of patented articles. It extends all over the whole scope of human activity and enterprise; and I am myself in favor of exempting by law innocent purchasers of patented articles from all damages, and should be in favor of a measure much more rigid than that proposed by the House; but in order to take one step and relieve these people from a part of the burden upon them, I suggest to the friends of this view of the case that we had better disagree to the amendments proposed by the Committee on Patents, which, in my view, are wholly in the interest of the monopolists and the holders of patents, and accept the bill as it came from the House.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Just one moment, if the Senator please. I understand the bill as it came from the House provides that unless the plaintiff recovers a judgment for $5 or more he shall have no costs; and yet he may take the innocent farmer into the Federal courts, two hundred miles away, perhaps, from his residence.

Mr. INGALLS. I am discussing a practical question. We want some relief; we want more than this bill will grant us. But the question is, how much can we get now?

Mr. WILLIAMS. We can get all now.

Mr. INGALLS. Is not this an improvement on the present condition of the law? And considering the fact that if we amend this bill it must go back to the House and run the chances of a committee of conference, had we not better vote down these amendments, accept the bill as it came from the House, and wait for further legislation to accomplish what we desire?

Mr. VOORHEES. Mr. President, in support of the view taken by the Senator from Kansas, I will observe to the Senator from Kentucky that this limitation which provides that unless a man recover $5 judgment he shall not recover costs will restrain thousands of people from bringing suits at all. It will be a sensible limitation of the number of suits and will relieve the people from harassment to a large extent. I am inclined strongly to concur with the Senator from Kansas on this subject, for if we should amend this bill and send it to the House we should get nothing this session. If we vote down the amendments proposed by the Committee on Patents of the Senate and concur in the House bill, we shall get at least one step toward substantial justice and relief, and we can take the other steps hereafter as soon as possible. So I shall vote with the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. President, I shall not be able to give eloquent utterance to my sympathies for the farmers,—they have been especially mentioned,—and for all the rest of mankind and his wife who are overtaken by claimants of patent rights; but I wish the Senate to do me the favor to consider that I have said to the utmost of my ability all that I should say in that regard did I know as well how to say it as my eloquent friend from Indiana, [Mr. VOORHEES.] I should be restrained in that particular, if by anything, only by the consideration that I was infringing the patent of the Senator from Minnesota, [Mr. WINDOM.] This pump which has played so large a part this morning is the pump of the honorable Senator from Minnesota; not that he patented that pump as a hydraulic apparatus; but it is his pump in the part it plays in the considerations of the Senate and in all that it fills of the public eye on this subject, because that honorable Senator first operated that pump with a force which has never been applied to it in the Senate since, as an argument touching the patent law. Therefore if I should go much into that, I should feel that I was infringing the right of that honorable Senator. But then again I do not know enough myself about that pump to be as sympathetic as the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] was in regard to it. However, I want to sympathize all around with all the people who like to buy the inventions of somebody else and use them and not pay for them, be the same more or less.

But, Mr. President, I do not mean to vote for the bill as reported by the committee, and certainly not for the bill as it came from the House. By as much as I am a friend of the present users of patented articles, I shall not vote for either of these bills and for several reasons, to two of which I want to call attention. The bill provides as amended by the Committee on Patents that a patentee shall in an infringement suit "recover no costs against the defendant unless it shall also appear that the defendant at the time of such purchase or practical application had knowledge or actual notice"—I stop there to observe that that means, if I understand it, that the onus probandi, as lawyers say, is to be on the patentee, the man who brings the suit. He is to prove that the defendant had knowledge or actual notice. I should object to that, but the objection is lost in importance, as it seems to me, in the next objection: Of what is this person to have knowledge or actual notice? "Of the existence of such patent." Why, sir, on every patented article, by law as well as by custom, is stamped the fact of the existence of the patent; and thus under pretense of serving innocent purchasers and bona fide users of articles bought in open market, although they may be pirated, comes a statute putting over them a shield in case they have no notice of that which in lawyers' phrase appears on the very face of the papers. The mold-board of a plow, nearly all the patented articles susceptible of wearing a stamp have labeled upon them "patented" of such a date, and usually the name of the patentee, which is not at all important under this bill. A barbed wire, two slender strands twisted with barbs projecting a foot apart, for aught I know, might not admit of a plain and obvious stamp that it was patented, and yet I will venture to say that upon that article in the original package, as it is bought in a coil or otherwise, upon some badge is printed the fact that that is the subject of a patent, and the date of the patent is given.

I should like to know what protection is to come out of this bill in any of the cases which have been stated. A man buys a clevis, a colter, a mold-board of a plow, the wood-work of it, the handle; he buys a cultivator, a mower, a reaper; he buys a catch to put on a door, which will lock it in a moment; there are a good many such, and one of them has been the subject of a good deal of controversy. On the metal, small as the article is, is plainly printed that it is patented. Is not that actual notice of the existence of a patent? And if it is what is a provision of this kind except a plant, in Western phrase, out of which is to come a fresh variety of litigation?

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator from New York permit me to say a word?

Mr. CONKLING. Certainly.

Mr. HOAR. I think he is dealing very clearly with an idea which is not the idea of the bill, and which, I think, is not expressed in the bill. If a man buys an article which is patented, and somebody else claims that the manufacture of that article by the person who sold it is infringing another patent, he does not get notice of the existence of the other patent by the mere fact that the article bears an impress that it is manufactured under the patent of a certain date. It is the plaintiff's patent that the plaintiff is to charge the defendant with knowledge or actual notice of, not actual notice that there is some patent claimed to cover it.

Mr. CONKLING. Will the Senator from Massachusetts and me a little further in understanding this provision? Suppose I, a farmer, if that varies it, buy a mold-board of a plow, or a clevis, on which is stamped "patented" such a date; by-and-by John Doe or Richard Roe brings suit against me alleging that that article infringes his patent. The case comes up to be tried, and the facts are as I state them, and I stand upon the fact that I had no notice. Will the Senator tell me on which side of the line under this provision I should fall? Does he mean that if I were sued under the patent which is referred to in the stamp, it would be one thing, and if I were sued under another patent not referred to, it would be the other?

Mr. HOAR. That is exactly it, as I understand the Senator from New York. I suppose that the criticism which the Senator from New York made originally, if I understand it correctly, would have force in regard to the case where a man has got a patent plow-board, or any other article which was made secretly, surreptitiously, in clear violation of the patentee's rights and the patentee's claim to his patent was stamped on it by the maker. But take the case of an invention which is profitable, and a man in a distant part of the country manufactures the article and palms it off as a proper and genuine manufacture, though that is a very rare case in practice, almost unknown so far as I am aware. The case which ordinarily exists is the case of a person who manufactures an article pretending that he has a right to do so under a patent which he has got, which is in fact an infringement of the real patentee's patent, in conflict with it, or where the manufacturer defies the original patent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The morning hour having expired——

Mr. HOAR. Now, this bill——

Mr. CONKLING. I hope the Senator from Massachusetts will be allowed to conclude what he has to say.

Mr. HOAR. This bill as I understand it protects the innocent purchaser of the article, the farmer in the case the Senator from Kentucky put, from the obligation to pay any costs of suit in that case unless when he purchased or used the article he had reason to know that there was an existing patent covering the article.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The morning hour having expired the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business of yesterday.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. What is the unfinished business of yesterday?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be read by its title.

The CHIEF CLERK. "A bill (S. No. 1988) authorizing the construction of a building for the accommodation of the Congressional Library."

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I hope the Senate will go on with this bill which is under consideration. I admit the importance of the Library bill, but it cannot compare in importance with this.

Mr. VOORHEES. Allow me one moment. If it does not displace this bill, if on the conclusion of the consideration of the bill now before the Senate the Library bill will come up without any obstacle being thrown in its way, I shall not object to this discussion going on until this important measure is disposed of.

WILLIAM HAMILL.

Mr. WITHERS. I rise to a privileged question to present the report of a conference committee.

Mr. VOORHEES. I yield for that purpose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Virginia submits a report from a committee of conference, which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 3788) granting an increase of pension to William Hamill, having met, after a full and free conference have agreed to recommend, and do recommend, to their respective Houses as follows, namely:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the said amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same.

R. E. WITHERS,
DAVID DAVIS,
S. I. KIRKWOOD,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
ROBERT L. TAYLOR,
GEO. R. DAVIS,
JAMES W. COVERT,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was concurred in.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. GEORGE M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to some and disagreed to other amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 6972) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, and for other purposes.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to some and disagreed to other amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 7035) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. No. 7172) to admit free of duty two watches presented to Joseph Upton and G. W. Curtis, for rescuing the crew and passengers of the steamship American; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House had concurred in the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 7036) to establish post-routes.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice-President:

A bill (S. No. 1349) for enlarging the City Hall for the accommodation of the courts and records in the District of Columbia;

A bill (S. No. 1292) to provide for the removal of the terms of the United States circuit and district courts now held at Exeter, for and within the district of New Hampshire, to the city of Concord;

A bill (H. R. No. 192) granting a pension to Hulda L. Barnard;

A bill (H. R. No. 624) granting a pension to Robert S. Goodall;

A bill (H. R. No. 2123) granting a pension to Albert N. Jack;

A bill (H. R. No. 2290) granting a pension to William Bowman;

A bill (H. R. No. 3100) granting relief to Samuel B. Huchinson;

A bill (H. R. No. 4572) defining the verification of returns of national banks; and

A bill (H. R. No. 4887) granting a pension to Rosalie Louis.

NEW YORK AND CONNECTICUT BOUNDARY-LINE.

Mr. CONKLING. A few moments ago having reported back a bill touching the boundary-line between New York and Connecticut, the consideration of which will take but a moment, the Senator from Virginia [Mr. WITHERS] thought he ought to insist on the regular order and did so. I think now that the morning hour has concluded no Senator will object to the occupation of perhaps half a minute in doing what is quite important to those two States. Unless some Senator does object, I should like to have the bill disposed of.

Mr. VOORHEES. I yield with great pleasure for that purpose.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 6514) concerning settlement of boundary-lines between New York and Connecticut.

Mr. THURMAN. I have no amendment to offer nor any opposition to make to the bill, although I am a little doubtful about one of its provisions. I am a little doubtful whether there is not a cession of jurisdiction over part of the high seas, though I do not object to that although there may be a monopoly of all the fish therein. But the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. EDMUNDS,] absent on account of illness, when I last spoke to him upon the subject said that there was occasion for some amendment, I do not know what. I shall therefore not oppose this bill at all, but I want to say to my friend that if the Senator from Vermont is of that opinion yet, I shall feel it my duty if he comes in within the two days during which I am entitled to move a reconsideration of the bill, to give him a chance.

Mr. CONKLING. Very well; let that be done.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PENSION APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BOOTH submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 6532) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend, and do recommend, to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment numbered 4, and agree to the same with amendments, as follows: After the word "home," in line 3 of said amendment, insert the words "upon security given to the satisfaction of the managers;" and in line 4, after the word "pensioners," insert the words "without deduction for fines or penalties;" and in line 10 strike out all after the word "or" to the close of the paragraph and insert the words "children, or in default of either, to his legal representatives;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 5, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: Insert before the words "and for other purposes" the words "for deficiencies;" and the Senate agree to the same.

NEWTON BOOTH,
R. E. WITHERS,
W. B. ALLISON,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
JAY A. HUBBELL,
WILLIAM H. FORNEY,
J. A. McMAHON,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. INGALLS. As it is impossible to tell by the recitation of these amendments numerically what was done by the two Houses respectively, I ask the Senator from California what action was taken on the amendment of the Senate in regard to the Indian pensions?

Mr. BOOTH. The House concurred with the Senate amendment.

The report was concurred in.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRIS in the chair) laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives, agreeing to some and disagreeing to other amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 6972) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, and for other purposes.

On motion of Mr. WALLACE, it was

Resolved, That the Senate insist on its amendments disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and ask a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

By unanimous consent, it was Ordered, That the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the Presiding Officer.

The PRESIDING OFFICER appointed Mr. WALLACE, Mr. BECK, and Mr. BOOTH.

DISTRICT APPROPRIATION BILL.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 7035) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, and for other purposes.

On motion of Mr. WITHERS, it was

Resolved, That the Senate insist on its amendments disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and ask a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

By unanimous consent, it was Ordered, That the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the Vice-President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT appointed Mr. WITHERS, Mr. HARRIS, and Mr. WINDOM.

WATCHES FREE OF DUTY.

The bill (H. R. No. 7172) to admit free of duty two watches presented to Joseph Upton and G. W. Curtis for rescuing the crew and passengers of the steamship American was read twice by its title.

Mr. HOAR. I ask unanimous consent of the Senate to consider and pass that bill now. It will take but one moment. These are two Essex County seamen, who at great personal peril rescued the crew of this steamer, and these watches have been sent to them from abroad. The Secretary of the Treasury in a communication to the House committee recommends the passage of the bill.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CAPTAIN WILLIAM D. WHITING.

Mr. McPHERSON. I ask to have considered the bill (S. No. 2074) for the relief of Captain William D. Whiting, United States Navy. While the Secretary is looking for the bill I think I can give all the explanation desired about it. Captain Whiting is now a bureau officer; he will be examined in a few days for promotion to the grade of commodore. Being physically incapacitated, he cannot pass the examination. I think there will be no objection to the bill.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I wish to understand the condition of the business of the Senate. At the close of the morning hour the patent bill, so called, was unfinished. Will the taking up of this bill by general consent disturb that on to-morrow?

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. HARRIS in the chair.) At the close of the morning hour the patent bill went over under what is known as the Anthony rule, and the unfinished business of yesterday was laid before the Senate, and is now the regular order of the Senate.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. But the Chair does not understand me. I wish to know what position the patent bill will occupy to-morrow morning at the close of the morning business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It stands at the head of the Calendar; and whenever the Senate proceeds to the consideration of the Calendar it will be the first bill in order.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. Will the consideration of the bill asked by the Senator from New Jersey affect that order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. By no means will it.

Mr. WINDOM. I want to ask another question with reference to the patent bill before we pass from it. Is it in order to move to postpone the pending order in order to proceed with the patent bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair knows of no reason why it is not as much in order to move to postpone the pending and all prior orders to take up that bill as to take up any other bill. The Chair thinks it is in order.

Mr. WINDOM. I think I shall make that motion in a few moments.

Mr. McPHERSON. I ask the Senator from Minnesota to let the Senate take action on the bill I have called up. There will be no objection to it.

Mr. WINDOM. I do not object to it. I am waiting for the Senator to have that bill acted upon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Jersey asks the Senate to consider the bill he has named. Is there objection?

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 2074) for the relief of Captain William D. Whiting, United States Navy. It provides that Captain William D. Whiting, having been promoted for faithful and efficient war service, and having served in the Navy faithfully for thirty-nine years and upward, shall, when ordered for examination preparatory to promotion to the next higher grade, in the event of being found physically incapacitated, such incapacity having been contracted on duty or being incident thereto, be promoted to the next higher grade on the active list notwithstanding such physicial incapacity, and shall then be placed upon the retired list of the Navy.

Mr. LOGAN. What is proposed to be done?

Mr. McPHERSON. Captain Whiting is now a bureau officer. He has been rendered incapable by disease contracted in the service from passing a physical examination. He will be called on in a few days for examination to be retired preparatory to being put on the grade of commodore. He cannot pass the physical examination, and consequently we wish to retire him on the grade of commodore. He is now in the service and performs all the services of a bureau officer, but is absolutely blind and cannot of course pass the physical examination.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. VOORHEES. I rise now to call for the regular order, and I wish to say a word in anticipation of the motion which my friend from Minnesota will make. The patent bill is a House bill.

Mr. WINDOM. Perhaps if the Senator will permit me to make a remark we may save time. I will say that if the patent bill can be taken up to-morrow morning immediately after the conclusion of the routine business I will not make the motion I indicated.

Mr. VOORHEES. Of course it can; it stands at the head of the Calendar.

Mr. WINDOM. It does not necessarily come up. We do not go to the Calendar once a week sometimes, and I want an understanding that it shall come up, or else I wish to test the question now.

Mr. INGALLS. A majority of the Senate can bring it up at any time.

Mr. VOORHEES. There will be no trouble about going to the Calendar to-morrow morning. I am just as anxious about that bill as the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. WINDOM. If I can have unanimous consent that that shall be done I do not want to make the motion; otherwise I shall feel bound to test the question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. COCKRELL in the chair.) Does the Senator submit that request?

Mr. WITHERS. It will be the regular order to-morrow on the call of the Calendar.

Mr. WINDOM. I have had a good deal of experience of the regularity with which the Calendar comes up, and would rather have an understanding if we can have it or else know whether we are to pass the bill or not.

Mr. VOORHEES. I was going to observe to the Senator from Minnesota that the patent bill is a House bill, and we can speedily conclude action upon that measure; whereas if the Library bill is delayed longer there will not be time for the concurrence of the House. There has been not only a great deal of labor in the matter which I have in charge, but there has been a very considerable appropriation of money spent. I do not want the work to come to naught in my hands. The Library bill has to go to the House, whereas the patent bill, the importance of which nobody magnifies more than I do, has simply to be acted upon here, and is at an end one way or the other. It stands at the head of the Calendar. To-morrow morning it will be the regular order, and I anticipate no trouble whatever in getting it up to-morrow when the morning business is completed. I do hope the Senator from Minnesota will allow me my chance in court to-day.

Mr. WINDOM. What is the decision of the Senate upon the request I made a few moments ago?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has had no opportunity to submit it. The Chair now submits to the Senate the request of the Senator from Minnesota, which is that by unanimous consent an agreement be made that the patent bill shall be taken up immediately after the disposal of the routine business to-morrow morning. Is there objection?

Mr. CONKLING. I do not wish to make any objection exactly, but I propose at least to make a statement. A Senator who is not here now said to me that he wanted to be heard upon the patent bill; he had some suggestion which has not been referred to; and in the absence not only of that Senator but I think I may say of a majority of the Senate (for I do not think a majority is here) I do not think there ought to be an agreement that the bill shall be taken up at a particular time. I shall do nothing to delay it; indeed I will go with other Senators to take it up at the proper time; but I do not believe my friend from Minnesota had better ask us here in a minority now, to conclude everybody by agreeing that the bill shall be taken up just at that time and no other. Let the Senator give notice that he will ask to take it up then, and I do not think he will have any difficulty.

Mr. VOORHEES. We all know that if the Senator from New York will help us to take it up at that time, it will be taken up.

Mr. WINDOM. I give notice then that immediately after the close of the routine business to-morrow, I shall move to take up the patent bill, and I hope I can get the floor for that purpose.

Mr. TELLER. If we go to the Calendar, it will come up. All the Senator needs is to have the Senate go to the Calendar.

Mr. WINDOM. But we do not go to the Calendar once a week sometimes.

Mr. VOORHEES. I wish to call the attention of the Senate to the regular order of business.

Mr. ALLISON. Before the Senator proceeds will he yield to me?

Mr. VOORHEES. I am in a most yielding mood this morning.

Mr. ALLISON. If the Senator will give way to me I will ask to take up the fortification appropriation bill, which I think will take but very little time. It is one of the necessary bills.

Mr. VOORHEES. Will it not provoke debate?

Mr. ALLISON. I do not think it will provoke much debate. I am in entire sympathy with the Senator in reference to the Library bill, and I think both bills can be disposed of to-day.

Mr. VOORHEES. The two things combining, the persuasive powers of the Senator from Iowa, and my liking for him, as well as the nature of the business he proposes to bring before the Senate, and the assurance that it will take but little time, I ask that the Library bill may be informally and without prejudice laid aside, subject to my call.

Mr. ALLISON. I am much obliged to the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Library bill will be informally laid aside.

FORTIFICATION APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the fortification appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 6529) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, and for the armament thereof, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, and for other purposes.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask general consent that the amendments of the Committee on Appropriations may be considered as they are reached in the reading of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be read, and action had upon the amendments as they are reached, if there is no objection.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 1, before the word "hundred," to strike out "one" and insert "two;" so as to read:

That the sum of $200,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the protection, preservation, and repair of fortifications and other works of defense, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, the same to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 9, after the word "War," to insert:

And the Secretary of War is directed to make report of the condition of the fortifications, and what number of them, if any, can be dispensed with.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 18, after the word "rifles," to strike out "and the manufacture of four improved breech-loading twelve-inch rifled guns, four hundred," and insert "two hundred and fifty;" so as to read:

For the armament of sea-coast fortifications, including heavy guns and howitzers for flank defense, carriages, projectiles, fuses, powder, and implements, their trial and proof, and all necessary expenses incident thereto, and for machine guns, including the conversion of smooth-bore cannon into rifles, $250,000.

Mr. MORGAN. I ask the Senator from Iowa, in charge of the bill, if he can state to the Senate what proportion of this $250,000 is expected to be applied to the conversion of smooth-bore cannon into rifles?

Mr. ALLISON. I have not at hand exact information upon that subject, but I should say from $125,000 to $150,000 of it. Probably wholly $150,000 of it can be so disposed of.

Mr. MORGAN. Is that supposition based upon some estimate by the Ordnance Department?

Mr. ALLISON. Yes, sir; it is based upon information received from the Chief of Ordnance, General Benét.

Mr. MORGAN. The Senator thinks from $125,000 to $150,000 will be used for the purpose I have named?

Mr. ALLISON. Yes, sir; at least that.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, to insert in line 20, after the word "dollars," the following clause:

And the President is authorized to select a board, to consist of one engineer officer, two ordnance officers, and two officers of artillery, whose duty it shall be to make examination of all inventions of heavy ordnance and improvements of heavy ordnance and projectiles that may be presented to them, including guns now being constructed or converted under direction of the Ordnance Bureau; and said board shall make detailed report to the Secretary of War, for transmission to Congress, of such examination, with recommendation as to what inventions are worthy of actual test, and the estimated cost of such test; and the sum of $25,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated for such purpose.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 46, after the word "sales," to insert "and he shall make statement of his action under this provision in his next annual report;" so as to make the clause read:

And the Secretary of War is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to exchange the unserviceable and unsuitable powder and shot on hand for new powder and projectiles, or to sell the same and purchase similar articles with the proceeds of the sales; and he shall make statement of his action under this provision in his next annual report.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary resumed and concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. ALLISON. There are no other amendments to be offered on the part of the Committee on Appropriations.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

Mr. DAWES. I should like to hear the reasons for the amendment in lines 18 and 19, striking out the item for the manufacture of four improved breech-loading rifle guns, and reducing the total from $400,000 to $250,000.

Mr. ALLISON. In response to the inquiry of the Senator from Massachusetts, I simply desire to say that inasmuch as the committee decided to strike out the provision for the construction of four new guns, it was thought prudent and wise to reduce the appropriation to the extent it is reduced here. The Senator from Massachusetts of course will remember that last year we authorized the construction of four new guns of 12-inch caliber. Those guns are being constructed. It will take all this year and a portion of next year to construct them. Although they are built upon an improved pattern, still there may be some question, at least the question was raised, as to the serviceability of these guns after their construction; and the committee thought it prudent to wait at least until next year before ordering any additional guns.

Mr. DAWES. Let me inquire is there sufficient appropriation to pay for the guns in process of manufacture at this time?

Mr. ALLISON. Ample. The appropriation last year will pay for all the guns in process of construction, the four new guns.

Mr. DAWES. Does the amendment contemplate the abandonment of the manufacture of guns in this country?

Mr. ALLISON. By no means; it is only a measure of prudence in order that we may have a fair opportunity of testing the guns that are now being constructed before ordering additional guns.

Mr. DAWES. If the Senator will indulge me in a little conversation in this way, I should like to inquire whether the Ordnance Department are of the opinion that it is necessary to have further tests of the guns?

Mr. ALLISON. I would say, in response to that inquiry, that I think the Ordnance Department are thoroughly satisfied that the guns that they are now building, these new guns, will be serviceable and will answer every purpose intended; but still they have never been tested; that is to say, no 12-inch gun such as these guns which are now being manufactured has ever been tested. It is true that we have converted the 10-inch, and 15-inch, and 11-inch guns, respectively, and 8-inch guns, have been tested, but inasmuch as the guns that we would order by this bill could not be constructed until Congress again convened, it was thought wise to complete the guns already in process of construction before providing for more.

Mr. DAWES. I do not want to delay the passage of the bill, but if the Senator from Iowa will indulge me a little further let me ask: Will not this reduction have the effect in completing the construction of these guns to work the discharge of all the men employed in the manufacture of guns and the abandonment of the shops before the meeting of the next Congress?

Mr. ALLISON. As I learn from the Chief of Ordnance, the first gun of these four was to be completed within sixteen months after the signing of the contract, which contract I think was signed last August; the next gun perhaps in twenty months; the next one in twenty-two months; and the next one in twenty-four months; so that I suppose the men who are employed in manufacturing these guns will still be employed upon them when Congress meets again.

Mr. DAWES. And the work will be going on until the next Congress will have this question before it?

Mr. ALLISON. There is no doubt of it. I think the Senator from Massachusetts will agree with the committee that it is wise to postpone at least to another session the question of manufacturing these large guns.

Mr. DAWES. I do not want, as I said, to obstruct the passage of the bill; and if this reduction does not break up the establishments and scatter the hands I feel some force in the argument which has been submitted by the Senator from Iowa.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senate concur in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole separately or in gross? If there be no objection the question on concurring in the amendments will be taken together.

The amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

MEMORIAL SERVICES OF HON. FERNANDO WOOD.

Mr. KERNAN. I ask that the resolution received from the House of Representatives inviting the Senate to attend the observance of the ceremonies in memory of the late Hon. FERNANDO WOOD be laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution of the House of Representatives, which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Ordered, That next Sunday, February 27, at three o'clock p. m. be set apart for the observance of the ceremonies in memory of Hon. FERNANDO WOOD, late a member of this House from the State of New York.

Ordered, That the Clerk communicate the foregoing resolution to the Senate with an invitation to the Senate to attend in the House at said hour and participate in said ceremonies.

Mr. KERNAN. I submit the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Senate accept the invitation of the House of Representatives to attend the observance of the ceremonies in memory of Hon. FERNANDO WOOD, in the Hall of the House, on Sunday next, at three o'clock in the afternoon.

The resolution was agreed to.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had this day approved and signed the following acts:

An act (S. No. 711) amending the charter of the Freedman's Savings and Trust Company, and for other purposes;

An act (S. No. 1802) granting a pension to Ann M. Paulding;

An act (S. No. 1070) granting a pension to Jacob H. Eppler;

An act (S. No. 1928) to provide for remitting the duties on the object of art awarded by the Berlin International Fishery Commission to Professor Spencer F. Baird;

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 152) granting the use of artillery, tents, &c., to be used at the soldiers' reunion to be held at Lincoln, Nebraska, in the month of September of 1881; and

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 162) to grant the use of artillery, tents, &c., to be used at the soldiers' reunion to be held in Maine in 1881.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. MORGAN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. No. 7099) making appropriations for the Agricultural Department of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. ALLISON, Mr. BOOTH, and Mr. PLUMB submitted amendments intended to be proposed by them, respectively, to the bill (H. R. No. 7203) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, and for other purposes; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. COCKRELL submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. No. 7104) making appropriations for the construction, completion, repair, and preservation of certain works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

CONGRESSIONAL LIBRARY BUILDING.

Mr. VOORHEES. I now ask that the Library bill be proceeded with.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 1988) authorizing the construction of a building for the accommodation of the Congressional Library.

Mr. VOORHEES. It will be remembered that night before last we terminated the consideration of this measure by ordering the amendment offered by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] to be printed for the use of the Senate. Yesterday the Joint Select Committee on additional accommodations for the Library of Congress took the amendment of the Senator from Vermont into consideration, and with great and valuable assistance from other Senators besides members of that committee, we submitted sundry amendments which are printed in the amendment of the Senator from Vermont as it is on Senators' desks to-day. Our object was to make a safe legal settlement of all the questions relating to the purchase or condemnation of the property in view. I feel instructed by the overwhelming vote of the Senate the other evening to proceed to perfect the will of the Senate in regard to the location of the Library.

I know that it is more pleasant for every Senator in this body to listen to his own voice than to mine, but inasmuch as Senators will have to vote on this qestion perhaps it would be as well for their own sakes, I ask nothing for my own, to give their attention a little to this matter. It only involves $1,000,000; and a passing silent, quiet observance of five or ten minutes might be of use even to the wisest Senators present in making up their minds how to vote upon a question involving so much money.

I say that we took pains to consider every question connected with the proposed purchase of a site for the Library, and we have submitted such amendments in connection with the amendment offered by the Senator from Vermont that I apprehend the best legal minds in this body will say that we have made, if I may use such an expression, a water-tight piece of proposed legislation.

I will ask, therefore, that the Secretary read in his best, most deliberate, and intelligent tone of voice, so as to be heard by everybody, the amendment of the Senator from Vermont, as now proposed to be amended by the committee, which amendments as proposed by the committee have been accepted by the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. MORRILL. I desire formally to accept the amendments of the committee incorporated in my amendment, so that a separate vote will not be required on any one of them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont modifies the amendment offered by him, which will be reported.

Mr. CONKLING. This is the amendment of the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. VOORHEES. It is the amendment offered day before yesterday by the Senator from Vermont, with sundry amendments now printed in that amendment, which were acted upon by the select committee on the construction of a new Library building yesterday, and proposed by me. The Senator from New York will find on his desk, under the title of Senate bill No. 1988, the amendment printed. It was printed yesterday and reprinted this morning with the amendments in it which I proposed yesterday on behalf of the committee.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to insert:

That in order to provide a suitable site for a building for the Library of Congress, and for other public purposes, the following parcels of land, situated east of the Capitol Grounds, shall be purchased by the Secretary of the Interior, or taken for public use, namely: Squares designated on the plan of the city of Washington, as numbers 728 and 729, and triangular parcels designated thereon as numbers 726, 727, 730, and 731; the whole being bounded on the north by B street north, on the east by Second street east, on the south by B street south, and on the west by First street east, and supposed to contain 455,130 superficial feet, exclusive of avenues, streets, and alleys.

SEC. 2. That a sum of money sufficient to pay for said land, in the mode hereinafter provided, is hereby appropriated therefor out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated: Provided, That the land and the structures thereon which may be purchased or condemned under this act, and all damages for the taking thereof, shall not exceed $1,000,000.

SEC. 3. That the Secretary of the Interior shall be authorized to purchase said land, or any part thereof, as soon as practicable, at such prices as may be fixed by agreement between the said Secretary and the respective owners, not exceeding the actual cash value thereof nor the prices at which the respective owners shall have consented in writing to sell the same to the United States; and payment therefor shall be made to the respective owners, on the requisitions of the Secretary of the Interior, upon the release and conveyance of said lands to the United States by good and sufficient deeds executed in due form of law: Provided, That no money hereby appropriated shall be expended for the purchase of said land or any part thereof, or for the erection thereon of said Library building, until the written opinion of the Attorney-General shall be had in favor of the validity of the title to said land.

SEC. 4. That if the Secretary of the Interior shall be unable to purchase the whole of said land by agreement with the respective owners within thirty days after the passage of this act, he shall, at the expiration of such period of thirty days, make application to the supreme court of the District of Columbia, at a general or special term, by petition, containing a particular description of the property required, with the name of the owner or owners thereof, and his, her, or their residence as far as the same can be ascertained, which court is hereby authorized and required, upon such application, without delay, to appoint five commissioners, freeholders of the District of Columbia, who shall, before entering upon their duties, take and subscribe an oath, before some officer in the District of Columbia authorized to administer oaths, that they are entirely disinterested in the purchase or sale of said real estate, and that they will well and truly discharge their duties as such commissioners; and they shall then proceed to make a just and equitable appraisement of the cash value of the several interests of each and every owner of the real estate and improvements thereon necessary to be taken for the public use in accordance with the provisions of this act, which appraisement shall be subject to ratification by said court; and if at the expiration of thirty days after the passage of this act said court shall not be in session in general or special term, a special term shall be held, commencing on the day next thereafter, for the purpose of making the appraisement and ratification herein provided for: Provided, That written notice of the time and place of appraisement shall be given by said commissioners to each owner of real estate the purchase of which is contemplated by this act, at least thirty days before proceeding to appraise the same; and in the case of a non-resident owner a similar notice shall be given by publication in two daily newspapers of general circulation published in the city of Washington; and if it shall appear that any owner or party otherwise interested in any portion of said real estate be a minor, or otherwise incapacitated, said court shall, before proceeding to the appointment of said commissioners, appoint some suitable person as guardian ad litem to represent such person in all further proceedings in reference to such portion of said estate under this act.

SEC. 5. That the fee-simple of all premises so appropriated for public use of which an appraisement shall have been made under the order and direction of said court shall, upon payment to the owner or owners respectively, or to such person as shall be authorized to receive the same for any such owners, of the appraised value, or in case the said owner or owners refuse or neglect for fifteen days after the appraisement of the cash value of said lands and improvements by said court to demand the same from the Secretary of the Interior, upon depositing the said appraised value in said court to the credit of such owner or owners respectively, be vested in the United States; and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and required to pay to the several owner or owners respectively, or to such person authorized as aforesaid, the appraised value of the several premises as specified in the appraisement of said court, or pay into court by deposit as hereinbefore provided the said appraised values.

SEC. 6. That said court may direct the time and manner in which possession of the property condemned shall be taken or delivered, and may, if necessary, enforce any order or issue any process for giving possession. The cost occasioned by the inquiry and assessment shall be paid by the United States; and as to other costs which may arise, they shall be charged or taxed as the court may direct.

SEC. 7. That no delay in making an assessment of compensation, or in taking possession, shall be occasioned by any doubt which may arise as to the ownership of the property, or any part thereof, or as to the interests of the respective owners; but in such cases the court shall require a deposit of the money allowed as compensation for the whole property or the part in dispute. In all cases, as soon as the United States shall have paid the compensation assessed, or secured its payment by a deposit of money under the order of the court, possession of the property may be taken.

SEC. 8. That before payment shall be made for any part of the grounds herein described the terms of all contracts therefor and the amount of all appraisals thereof shall be submitted to the President for his approval; and if in his judgment the sum to be paid for any parcel, either under contract or judicial proceedings, shall be unreasonable, he shall, in respect to the same, suspend all further proceedings under this act till further action by Congress: Provided, That there shall not be taken or paid for under this act less than the squares numbered 729, 730, and 731, on the south side of East Capitol street, or the squares numbered 726, 727, and 728, on the north side of said street.

SEC. 9. That the Secretary of the Interior shall report to Congress, at the commencement of the next session, a detailed statement of all the proceedings under the provisions of this act.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. HARRIS in the chair.) The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] which has just been read.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CONKLING. I ask the Senator from Indiana who has told us that he adopted as far as his own approval went this amendment and reported it, what is the meaning in section 2 of the words in italics beginning with the proviso:

Provided, That the land and the structures thereon which may be purchased or condemned under this act, and all damages for the taking thereof, shall not exceed $1,000,000.

I will show the Senator my object by inquiring whether he means that $1,000,000 shall cover not only the land but the buildings?

Mr. VOORHEES. Yes, sir.

Mr. CONKLING. Then I venture to say to the Senator that the words ought to be transposed, so that the proviso shall read:

Provided, That the land which may be purchased or condemned under this act, and all damages for the taking thereof and the structures thereon, shall not exceed $1,000,000.

Mr. VOORHEES. If the Senator from New York will put it in that shape I will accept it.

Mr. CONKLING. I suggest to the Senator that the words ought to be transposed.

Mr. VOORHEES. I think that is an improvement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator repeat his amendment so that the Clerk may get it?

Mr. CONKLING. It is merely to strike out the words "and the structures thereon" where they occur, and put them in on line 6, so that the proviso shall not be held to mean that this covers only such buildings as are taken, as distinguished from those which are to be demolished.

I understand the effect of the amendment which has been adopted as in Committee of the Whole to be that four squares are to be purchased. No doubt the bill would show this if read carefully, but I ask the Senator from Indiana to assist me so much as to tell me whether it be true that the two squares opposite here, the large squares, parallelograms as they are, and also the two more or less wedge-shaped squares, one on the north and one on the south, are embraced in this proposition?

Mr. VOORHEES. I so understand it.

Mr. CONKLING. So that we are to buy all the way from B street on the north to Pennsylvania avenue on the south.

Mr. VOORHEES. Yes, sir.

Mr. INGALLS. From the street beyond Pennsylvania avenue.

Mr. VOORHEES. No.

Mr. CONKLING. If the Senator will let me put it in this way, we are to buy all the way from the street on which the stone houses built by General Butler stand, which is Pennsylvania avenue, all the way across to the street which runs up where the street cars turn over on the north. We are to buy whatever there is between those points on the north and south sides of East Capitol street?

Mr. VOORHEES. Yes, at an expense not exceeding one million dollars.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. For the building?

Mr. CONKLING. The million dollars does not cover the building.

Mr. VOORHEES. The whole million dollars is for the location of the site.

Mr. INGALLS. B street south is south of Pennsylvania avenue on the map.

Mr. McPHERSON. Will the Senator from New York yield to me for a question?

Mr. CONKLING. Certainly.

Mr. McPHERSON. Do I understand the Senator to say that we are to buy the block fronting upon the square on the right side and also the block on the left-hand side of the square and beyond it on the opposite side?

Mr. CONKLING. If the Senator will look at this very small plot, which I will send him in a moment, as marked here, he will see that under the amendment (as I take it to be under the instruction of the Senator from Indiana, I have not been able to follow all the reading) we are to buy from B street north first a three-cornered bit of ground which lies north of Maryland avenue; and then we are to buy another irregular bit of ground which lies south of Maryland avenue, before coming to the large squares east of the Capitol grounds. Then we are to buy the two large squares lying opposite the Capitol on the east. Then we are to buy an irregular piece of ground between A street south and Pennsylvania avenue; and then we are to buy another irregular block of ground south of Pennsylvania avenue. I will send this book to the Senator from New Jersey, and if he will look at the blue mark he will see what this covers. So then, instead of being a piece of ground in width as great as the Capitol from wing to wing, it is in addition to that, because it includes land north of Maryland avenue and south of Pennsylvania avenue.

I ask the Senator from Indiana where the proposed Library building is to stand?

Mr. VOORHEES. I have an amendment which at the proper time I intend to offer. If we consent to take this ground, I propose to insert in the bill:

And the President of the United States, with the advice of the Librarian of the Library of Congress and of the Architect of the Capitol Extension, shall determine and fix the site of the Library upon the ground herein described, and the same shall be taken and paid for under this act.

That I propose to offer as an amendment, to come in at the end of the eighth section, because if we agree to purchase this ground the exact locality and precise place where the Library ought to be located to the best advantage can only be determined by somebody so authorized to do, and we know no person better than the President of the United States, advised by the Architect of the Capitol and the Librarian of the Library of Congress.

Mr. CONKLING. To which President does the Senator refer?

Mr. VOORHEES. The one about whose election there is no question whatever; the one who will be inaugurated on the 4th of March. I suppose the Senator from New York will not object to my proposition to enlarge the sphere of his duties enough at least to fix the site of this building.

Mr. CONKLING. I have no doubt that the Senator from Indiana has been judiciously wise in selecting the particular official to whom he refers in such just and historic terms, and I am glad to have it appear as a part of this debate, historical as it is sure to become, that in the opinion of my honorable friend there is no doubt in the world that we have elected a President now. I know the honorable Senator from Indiana has heretofore been disquieted by certain vague and ill-founded doubts on that subject in respect of a past election; and if we have reached the point when even he is satisfied, I am very glad to have that appear in connection with this building, permanent as it will be; and when these three officers come to lay the foundation-stone, I hope among the coins and memorials going into that will be a copy of the speech of the honorable Senator now made, that part which will chronicle the fact that there is no doubt about the result of the late election. In fact, to be entirely candid, I had no doubt about it myself, but after hearing the honorable Senator I know exactly how it went.

But, sir, my delight over the final authentication of the election which we have now wrung from the Senator from Indiana at last, is not such as to lead me to favor this bill or even the bill as it will be with his amendment. I do not believe that to the President of the United States, however distinguished a person he may be, and to the Librarian of Congress, and to the gentleman who so long, and I will not deny so well, has discharged the functions whatever they may be of Architect of the Capitol, a completed building, should be committed the duty of going out and wandering all over this great expanse of ground which we are to buy, greater than I realized when we were talking about it the other evening, greater I think than any Senator will realize unless he will go out and look and see how far it extends north and south, and make up their three minds conclusively past the revision of Congress where this building shall be put. I do not think it should be left indefinite in the bill or should be committed to these persons to put a building opposite this wing of the Capitol and leave a great expanse of ground to the south to be occupied in some other way hereafter, or to put it in the middle of the ground opposite the center building of the Capitol, or on the south as they may elect. I do not see why the Senator from Indiana, and although I know much less about it myself, I do not see why I should not express my seventy-sixth part of an opinion upon that subject. I do not believe that the Librarian of Congress, with entire respect to him, knows any better to say the least of it, than the Senator from Indiana, where it would be wise to put this building. Therefore as to the proposed amendment I have to say that it will not aid me at all in supporting the bill.

If I were familiar enough with the terms of this bill I should move an amendment, and I hope that the Senator from Kansas, [Mr. INGALLS,] or some other Senator who is familiar with it will move such a one, certainly to strike out the land north of Maryland avenue and south of Pennsylvania avenue. What can be the purpose of committing to any three men the right to obliterate these two avenues? This amendment would do it. As I understand, it was admitted clearly the other night that it gave the power to close up East Capitol street. East Capitol street exists by no higher title and no lower title than that which dedicates Pennsylvania avenue and Maryland avenue to the public use. Can it be that my honorable friend from Indiana wants to repose in three officers, although one of them is the first officer of the Government, the right by their ipse dixit to close up Maryland avenue here and to close up Pennsylvania avenue? If not, (and the Senator shakes his head,) why do we want what in the country would be called a heater-piece, a piece of ground something like a smoothing-iron in shape, lying over on the south side of Pennsylvania avenue and lying over on the north side of Maryland avenue, which by no possibility can ever be connected with the bulk of this land to be purchased, unless you do obliterate both of those avenues?

Mr. VOORHEES. What are the two avenues the Senator speaks of?

Mr. CONKLING. I speak of Maryland avenue, north of which you buy, and Pennsylvania avenue, south of which you buy; and I say that those two irregular pieces of ground when condemned are going to be forever cut off from the main body of the land unless by obliterating those two avenues you join the parcels together. What is the excuse for that? I wish my honorable friend would tell me. I am not making these criticisms by way of carping at the bill or displaying my ingenuity, but merely for information.

Mr. VOORHEES. I would rather not talk as an interruption to the Senator.

Mr. CONKLING. My honorable friend will not interrupt me. I can do nothing so well as to follow him. "They also serve who only stand and wait."

Mr. VOORHEES. If I took the floor now, I might want to say some other things besides merely answering the Senator's inquiry.

Mr. CONKLING. The joy of hearing my honorable friend say some other things is such that I will stop to hear him.

Mr. VOORHEES. Well, Mr. President——

Mr. MORRILL. If the Senator from Indiana will allow me, as I am perhaps more familiar with the result which this bill will bring about, I will endeavor to explain, and I think I can do so to the entire satisfaction of the Senator. When we took the other squares for the addition to the present park east of the Capitol, we took Pennsylvania avenue and absorbed it to the extent of an entire square. If we take these triangular blocks we shall in point of fact leave Pennsylvania avenue in a more symmetrical state than it now is, for it will be right at the point; and the railroad connection will continue down B street south, and on the north Maryland avenue will touch at the point of these grounds. That will enlarge the amount of the present park east of the Capitol. It is proposed to take grounds exactly corresponding in width with the grounds that we now have. Any Senator by examination will see that it is proposed to take from B street north to B street south, and from First street east to Second street east. It is expected that the Library will be located either north or south of East Capitol street, and that there will be, if all the land should be purchased or condemned, an amount sufficient to erect another building upon the other end of the ground.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I desire to ask the Senator how much land is embraced in the boundaries described in the bill. My calculation is that there are about ten acres of land which it is proposed to buy for the purpose of erecting this building. Is there any necessity for the purchase of so much land? We ought not to simply go and speculate upon land and acquire more than we need for the purpose of this building, in my opinion. A prudent man would only buy for his own use such property as was necessary for the purposes for which he desired it. There certainly can be no necessity of acquiring ten acres of land for the purpose of building a library building upon it. If there are any other public improvements to be made upon it, which are necessary to be made, it may be wise and proper to purchase the land; but at present, so far as I am informed, there is no demand for the acquisition of more property in that direction than is absolutely necessary for the purposes of the Library building.

Mr. BAYARD. I understand in the proposed purchase one advantage to be gained by the Government is that already the bend of several streets and large avenues forms part of the proposed site for the improvement aimed at in the construction of a Library. The ground covered by these public streets will not have to be bought; the fee-simple is vested in the Government already. By this bill in the proposed improvement there will be a vacation of portions of Pennsylvania avenue, Maryland avenue, and certain of the streets; and wherever that vacation occurs it will be without cost to the Government. The question simply is as to the land we must buy and for which we must pay.

I am very glad to think that as far as an affirmative vote of the Senate can settle anything we have agreed as to the location of this projected public work, and that the ground selected east of the Capitol, fronting on the present Capitol grounds, will be the site for the Congressional Library. I esteem it to be an advantage growing out of this selection that the area at present covered by avenues will be occupied by public buildings in the future, if not in the immediate future.

As to the objection made by my colleague that it is proposed to buy more land than we want, I do not see that there is more here than is needed; I do not say for to-day or for the next generation, but in dealing with public questions we must not consider simply the present; the future is always to be considered. We have had experience to tell us that we ought to have made provision for the purchase of this land long ago, long before it reached its present high value, the value of which each year may be expected to increase. I suggest to my colleague that one reason is obvious why the amount of land cannot be restrained to precisely the necessary portion on which to erect a Library building. In buying you must buy up to certain street lines or else have private holdings crowded over upon adjoining public grounds. That is not to be desired. A public building ought not to be put up in such a situation. There ought to be no private interest in the block of land which is to be the site of this future Library. No private use and no private right should join this great public work. For that reason, in my judgment it would be unwise to exclude these small rectangular pieces of land lying to the north of Maryland avenue and to the south of Pennsylvania avenue, because it would give an irregular holding to the public Library and would abut upon private property, a thing that is not to be desired.

The proposal of the committee is to extend the boundary so as to throw an additional and a rectangular shaped block of land into the control of the Government. The effect would be precisely as though the present Capitol grounds which are delineated before our eyes by the boundaries of these streets were extended one block further back. Upon that block and at any part of that block this great public improvement may be made.

I hope sincerely that not an inch of the ground will be abandoned by the committee, but that purchase now, in the spirit of wise prevision and economy, may be made of the whole of the ground proposed.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I agree in the main to what the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD] has said. I believe it is best to purchase the whole that is proposed, if we do purchase any ground; but I call the attention of the Senator having charge of the bill and also of the Senator from Vermont to the proviso in section 8, in order that I may inquire what it means. I ask the Secretary to read the proviso, so that the Senators may understand what I wish to have explained.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That there shall not be taken or paid for, under this act, less than the squares numbered 729, 730, and 731, on the south side of East Capitol street, or the squares numbered 726, 727, and 728, on the north side of said street.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. It will be noticed that it provides that there shall be purchased three squares on either side, that is three squares on the north or three squares on the south, and not that the whole shall be purchased. In other words, if the whole ground cannot be obtained by paying a million dollars for it, one-half of the original amount shall be paid, taking the three squares first named or the three squares last named, just as it suits best. I understood the other night that the whole ground would be purchased by the expenditure of a million dollars. If we are to purchase but half the ground, the amount ought to be half a million and not a million, because it was so intended by the Senate, as I understood it the other night; and when expression was given to the effect that a million dollars would probably be the amount that would be required, it was stated that it was a purchase of the entire six squares and not of three squares.

Of course, before I move any amendment I shall hear from the Senator having charge of the bill, or from the Senator from Vermont who specially spoke of this portion of it as to the amount of ground it is expected to purchase. I intend to support the measure; I believe a Library building ought to be erected, and I intend to vote for one somewhere; but I do not think the Government ought to pay a million dollars for three squares on one side or three squares on the other side. The sum of $1,000,000 is to be paid for the entire six squares, as was stated by both Senators having charge of the bill, as I understood them the other evening, and not for three squares. It will be noticed in line 12 of section 8, after the word "three" is the word "or." Or what? "Or the three squares numbered" so and so, the three other squares, which of course only means three squares in the end, and not six squares as we all intended.

Mr. MORRILL. I merely desire to say that this section is not deemed to be necessary by the committee, but it has been introduced out of abundant caution, and because of some of the criticisms of the Senator from West Virginia and others, in relation to a possibility that an extravagant price may be paid for these squares. It is proposed therefore to leave the matter to the approval of the President of the United States, and if he should find that the price offered by contract or the appraisal was unreasonable, then it was all to be suspended until the further action of Congress; but if he should find a sufficient amount of the ground, that is one-half of it, upon which it would be proper to place the Library, offered for a reasonable price, then it was proposed that we should take it, and leave the remainder for the further action of Congress.

Mr. VOORHEES. The point made by the Senator from West Virginia had already been called to my attention by the Senator from New York at my side. I consider the point well taken, and I think it calls for an amendment which the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. GARLAND] has kindly furnished, and which I will read to the Senate.

At the end of line 15 of section 8, which provides for the possibility of taking less than the whole six squares, the amendment is to add:

But whatever portion may be taken shall be paid for only in proportion the part so taken shall bear in value to $1,000,000.

Mr. CONKLING. To the whole amount; not to $1,000,000.

Mr. VOORHEES. That is the idea.

Mr. CONKLING. But if the Senator will think a moment it is to the whole amount, not to a million dollars.

Mr. VOORHEES. I am satisfied we shall get it all for a million.

Mr. President, the eighth section of the bill I was willing might be put in here as a measure of safety. The Senator from New York criticises the power given to these three gentlemen to determine whereabouts on the ground procured the building shall stand. The task will have to be performed by somebody. After procuring the ground somebody has got to determine where the building shall stand. I am perfectly willing that the President of the United States, advised as the amendment which I hold in my hand proposes, by the Librarian of Congress and by the Architect of the Capitol, shall perform that duty. The President-elect is a man of books, a man of learning, a man of taste, and I know no one more competent to perform a task of this kind than he. The criticism made by the Senator from New York, I think I do not use an improper term when I say is hypercritical.

This measure has been prepared with as much care as good lawyers could give it. I do not speak of myself in that category, but I have had the assistance of men of legal acumen and of great care and conscientiousness. I believe this is as safe a measure as ever passed this body to procure a site for a public building. It does not propose to close either one of the avenues spoken of by the Senator from New York. While it proposes, for the purpose of giving proper shape to the ground that we procure, to take a little bit of land on either side of these avenues, yet it does not propose to close the avenues at all. There is nothing of the kind proposed.

I would be perfectly willing that the bill should not contain section 8, but section 8 cannot injure the bill, it cannot render it any more unsafe, and if we should only buy part of this land it is very easy to say that we will only pay a part of the million dollars appropriated by the bill for that purpose.

Mr. CONKLING. May I ask the Senator what is the object of buying now that part of the ground that we do not need?

Mr. VOORHEES. I do not know that we propose to buy any ground we do not need.

Mr. CONKLING. When I say "need" I mean ground we do not need as the site of this building.

Mr. VOORHEES. I do not know but what we need all we propose to buy for the site of the building. It is the easiest thing in the world to beat a man in an argument if you assume your facts and he admits that they are so, especially a man so gifted as the Senator from New York.

Mr. CONKLING. I think a man only as gifted as the Senator from New York might assume that the Library building is not going to spread all over this land.

Mr. VOORHEES. The Senator from New York, with all his amiability and good humor, is surely in a fault-finding disposition, and he can ask me questions that it would be very troublesome for anybody to answer.

Mr. CONKLING. Suppose I begin with this one: Does the Senator propose to put a building all over this land?

Mr. VOORHEES. You may end with that, too.

Mr. CONKLING. So I thought; and yet the honorable Senator seemed to think that my premises were wrong when I assumed that the object is not to put this building north of East Capitol street and south of East Capitol street too. It seems that I was pretty near right about that, as the honorable Senator rather subsides when a suggestion is made to the contrary, and says I may put that to begin and to end with. I have no doubt it is true that the building is to be north or south of East Capitol street and not on both sides.

The Senator also says that these avenues are not to be closed up. I think he may be right in that, if he would allow me to understand it, and yet if I am not mistaken I heard another Senator who is a member of this committee say that they are both of them to be closed up. When two senatorial and literary authorities so eminent as these differ, what the lay members like me are to think, I do not know. I did understand my honorable friend to say with some emphasis that neither Maryland nor Pennsylvania avenue is to be closed; and another Senator, if I mistake not, has said within ten minutes here on the floor that both of them are to be closed as part of this plan; and yet the Senator says that I am in a fault-finding mood because I hesitate a little, in a state of case like that, to go forward. In the absence of at least one-third of the Senate, and with the presence of the two-thirds selected, if they have been as carefully and judiciously as my honorable friend usually does assort his troops when he is about to head a hunt or lead a foray, I do not know but that this can be done; but I believe it ought not to be done. I do not believe there is any excuse whatever for purchasing two of these blocks of land, even looking to the far future. I believe that to buy twice as much land as we need, in a separate parcel, because at some future time we may want it for something else, is worse than a blunder. I have heard no apology made for it at all.

I said the other night and I will not repeat myself, though I see Senators here who were absent then, that although a private purchaser might gain by buying land which he did not want until a future time, the Government can gain nothing, because having the power to condemn it there can be no refusal to sell to it hereafter which would be guarded against by purchasing now. Therefore I believe even if this building is to be erected on the ground talked of, the utmost justifiable action now would be to buy that part of the ground on which it is to stand, with all the margin round about it on every side which might be deemed well; but to pass over intervening streets and buy separate parcels of land, to cost as much more and more than as much more as the utmost quantity recommended for this purpose, seems to me wholly unjustifiable. Yet that this bill does; and does upon the theory, as stated by one Senator, that these avenues are to be closed so as to put the whole thing in command; and as stated by another member of the committee, nobody thinks of doing any such thing but that the avenues are to be left as they are now, so that you will have here six separate pieces of ground, one of which is to be occupied by a Library building. Yet my amiable friend from Indiana thinks that a Senator is fault-finding to whose mind these facts suggest anything.

I do not wish myself to sail against the northwest wind, and next to the northwest wind, as to his irresistible power, is the Senator from Indiana when he has the Senate with him, and that part of the Senate which is likely to be against him absent; so that I would like to turn over to my able-bodied friend from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS] or some other man of ardor, the opportunity to contend for a short time with the Senator from Indiana and see what luck he has with him.

Mr. INGALLS. Is the amendment that has been offered by the Senator from Vermont now open to amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Vermont has been agreed to as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. INGALLS. Very true.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks it is not open to amendment at this time, but it will be open to amendment in the Senate.

Mr. INGALLS. I understood that the bill had been reported to the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill has not been reported to the Senate; it is still in committee and open to amendment.

Mr. CONKLING. It is open, I submit, to all amendments by way of addition. You cannot strike out in Committee of the Whole what has already been agreed to, but you may add to it.

Mr. INGALLS. The amendment I desire to offer is one of subtraction and not of addition.

Mr. CONKLING. That will be in order in the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Of course any amendment in addition is in order now, as the Senator from New York suggests.

Mr. INGALLS. I think the bill is fully large enough now; I do not want to add to it.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I call the attention of the Senator having charge of the bill to the proviso in section 8. It certainly needs some amendment.

Mr. VOORHEES. I suppose this is the proper time to make the amendment. In section 8, line 15, after the word "street," I move to add:

But whatever portion may be taken shall be paid for only in the proportion the part so taken shall bear in value to the value of the whole of the real estate mentioned in the first section of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VOORHEES. Immediately after the amendment in section 8 which has just been adopted I move to add:

And the President of the United States, with the advice of the Librarian of the Library of Congress and of the Architect of the Capitol Extension, shall determine and fix the site of the Library upon the grounds herein described, if the same shall be taken and paid for under this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CONKLING. May I inquire what amendment was agreed to so quickly a moment ago?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the amendment.

The amendment was read.

Mr. CONKLING. Is it too late to demand the yeas and nays on that amendment?

Mr. VOORHEES. I am willing that the yeas and nays may be taken.

Mr. CONKLING. I am willing to take them in the Senate just as well.

Mr. INGALLS. Let it be reserved.

Mr. CONKLING. I will take them there. I want to have a separate vote on putting the location in the discretion of these three officers.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no further amendment as in Committee of the Whole the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senate concur in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole?

Mr. INGALLS. It is plain to the most casual scrutiny that the land proposed to be purchased by this bill is far beyond the requirements either of necessity or symmetry. Nothing that is rendered necessary by the location of the building or by the demands of taste requires that all the territory east of the present public grounds of the Capitol should be purchased for the purpose of a Library. In order to test the sense of the Senate whether it desires to commit the Government to the acquirement of a vast amount of valuable territory admitted to be unnecessary, I move to strike out in section 1, line 9, after the words "729," the words "and triangular parcels designated thereon as numbers 726, 727, 730, and 731." In line 13 I move to strike out "B" and insert "A;" so as to read "the whole being bounded on the north by A street north." In line 14 I move to strike out "B" and insert "A," and to strike out all after the word "east," in line 15, in the words "and supposed to contain 455,130 superficial feet, exclusive of avenues, streets, and alleys;" so as to make the section read:

That in order to provide a suitable site for a building for the Library of Congress, and for other public purposes, the following parcels of land situated east of the Capitol grounds shall be purchased by the Secretary of the Interior, or taken for public use, namely: Squares designated on the plan of the city of Washington as numbers 728 and 729; the whole being bounded on the north by A street north, on the east by Second street east, on the south by A street south, and on the west by First street east.

The object of my amendment is to confine the purchase provided for by the bill to the two entire blocks that stand directly east of the Capitol, excluding the two corner blocks which are penetrated by the avenues diagonally, and which, by the admission of every Senator who has spoken on this subject, are unnecessary for the purpose of the construction of a Library building.

Mr. BECK. If those amendments are adopted, would it not be necessary to close up the streets A north and A south?

Mr. INGALLS. No, sir; not upon any plan for the construction of the Library and the judicial building that I have seen submitted. The room will be ample both for ground accommodation and for light and air, and for landscape gardening effect.

Mr. BAYARD. May I suggest to the honorable Senator that it is not the simple question of finding barely room enough for the Library but it is that there shall be a sufficient curtilage to give proportion to the architecture of the new building. The proposition now of the Senator is to carry the exterior lines of the parallelogram which composes the block in which the Capitol is the center to be carried out one block farther to the east, thus allowing, as I have said, to a private holder to abut his holding upon the public ground.

The advantage in making a purchase from all the adjacent private holders of this property is, that whenever the Government pleases it can close such portions or all portions of the avenues and streets as intersect the land which has been thus bought; I submit to the honorable Senator, if he will cast his eye upon the map of the town,—the one I have here shows much better, I will send it over to the Senator presently——

Mr. INGALLS. I have studied the map carefully.

Mr. BAYARD. On this plot the present Capitol grounds are delineated by green lines. The proposed purchase under this bill will extend the dimensions of this plot east and west one block farther east. The Senator's plan of excluding what I may call these jib lots, the corners say, that which is south of Pennsylvania avenue and north of Maryland avenue, would leave an irregular holding.

Mr. INGALLS. The Senator misunderstands me. My purpose is to exclude both the corner blocks which are intersected or bisected diagonally by Maryland and Pennsylvania avenues on the southeast and northeast, respectively.

Mr. BAYARD. That would leave the two solid blocks in the center.

Mr. INGALLS. The two solid blocks would be in a line directly east of the Capitol, making a parallelogram, of which the Senator from Delaware appears to be so much enamored.

Mr. BAYARD. More or less enamored; not heatedly so.

Mr. INGALLS. Not as a passion.

Mr. BAYARD. Rationally so. My idea is plain, that it would create an irregularity and a disproportion in the Government holdings, unless we did control what I call the entire front of our present Capitol grounds; and I do not see in that an extravagance or anything that is undue in proportion to the object which we have in view.

A Senator asked the last time this bill was up whether or not it was proposed that other buildings than the new Library should occupy this space. There is very strong probability, I think, that the Supreme Court of the United States would find its quarters at no very late day upon the grounds so purchased; and I have, judging by the experience of others rather than myself, heard it regretted that many years ago when a proposition was made to buy all this land, at a mere fraction of what it will cost us now, to acquire it, it had been rejected by the Senate; and the same reason which would make us regret now that we had not purchased twenty-five years ago will, in the course of twenty years, make those who are to succeed us regret that we did not buy the land embraced in this proposition. By looking at this map it seems to me that you will have an irregular holding, bounded by different streets from those proposed by the bill and which to-day mark the whole of the Capitol grounds.

The Senator from Maryland [Mr. WHYTE] also draws my attention to the fact that by extending the east holding in the way proposed by the bill, you will have the Capitol itself nearer the center of the entire block.

I hope the amendment extending these triangular lots will not be adopted.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, the predominant passion of the American mind has been declared to be a hunger for horizon, and that passion never received a more striking illustration than in the terms of this bill and in the speech of the Senator from Delaware, [Mr. BAYARD.] The charm of this city, so far as it has any charm, as I have heard it defined, consists in its irregularity, not that it is a series of parallelograms and rectangles like a chess-board, but that it is divided off into irregular spaces, charming the eye by the sense of incongruity and affording vent and alleys for the admission of sunlight and air on all sides. And yet the Senator from Delaware proposes that in this particular case we shall depart from what has been recognized as the controlling plan of this city, obliterate these beautiful triangular spaces here at the corners of the Capitol grounds, and reduce the holdings of the Government, as he calls them, to one dead level of rectangular uniformity. Mr. President, I am very much surprised that the Senator from Delaware should be reduced to arguments like that in support of this untenable proposition. If we are to acquire everything that is necessary, as he calls it curtilage for the purpose of showing the architectural proportions of the building, where are we to end? There is always something abutting on a Government holding, and until we extend the boundaries of our property here on the eastward away over the brow of the hill and down to the East branch, sweeping away all intervening obstacles, we shall still be exposed to the difficulties pointed out by the Senator from Delaware. I have as much fondness for the beautiful as most men, but I submit that it is hardly well to indulge in the enjoyment of one's æsthetic sense at the expenditure of so many unnecessary millions from the public Treasury. There is no plan that has been submitted for the construction of both these buildings, one that is before us and the other of which looms up in the dim but perhaps near future, that requires anything more than the ground which would be specified in the bill if any amendment were agreed to.

I do not wish to contend against the expressed desire of the Senate that this building shall be located on Capitol Hill. My view was otherwise. I believed the Capitol ought to have been enlarged by the extension of its axis, so that the building east and west would have been as long as it is north and south; which would have accommodated both the Legislature and the Library for generations to come. Failing in that, I would have had the Library on some of the public reservations of the city that were reserved for that purpose. I am entirely opposed to the purchase of vast tracts of land covered with valuable property, unnecessary for the uses of the Government, for this purpose; but having been overruled I submit and I now only contend that this bill should be so curtailed of its extravagant and superfluous proportions as to limit the acquisition to that which is required for the purposes that are favored by the promoters of this measure.

Mr. BLAIR. The ludicrous, serio-comic sort of gravity with which the Senator from Kansas has delivered himself of his address to the Senate ought to be replied to in a similar vein. I am quite incompetent to understand how he can be serious in making the amendment which he has moved. The ground of opposition to this bill has all the while been, as I understood, that we were taking too much land, and should confine ourselves, if we took any at all, either to the north or to the south side of East Capitol street, and purchase no more than should be necessary simply for a Library at this time. Now, the Senator moves as an amendment that we take enough south of East Capitol street for the Library building and at the same time, abandoning the original ground of opposition, purchase enough north of East Capitol street whereon to place the foundations of the proposed Department of Justice, it may be in the far distant future. Gentlemen seem to have abandoned the original and substantial ground of their opposition to the bill itself, and are reduced simply to the question of the amount of land which it is necessary to take for either one or the other of these buildings. It is not proposed, in other words, to place the Library building upon both these lots, but either to the south or to the north of East Capitol street. It is not proposed to close up East Capitol street in any event.

Then the question would arise, assuming that the Library building is to be placed wholly north or wholly south, whether a single square is sufficient for the purpose. I do not know precisely how large a structure is necessary at the present time to accommodate the books of the Library; but the library of France covers about four acres; if I do not misrecollect that of Great Britain covers to-day eleven acres. There can be no question that in the course of the next fifty years this Library building must be as large as either of them, as large as the larger of the two; probably in the course of the next one hundred or two hundred years, it must be much larger than even that of Great Britain, and in that case, unless it is to be extended across East Capitol street, we shall be obliged to have even more than both the squares which lie either to the north or to the south of that street, so there would seem to be no excuse whatever for the adoption of the amendment of the Senator from Kansas in the form in which he has submitted it to the Senate.

In regard now to the exclusion of these two corner lots, the southeast lot and the northeast lot as embraced in the bill now before the Senate as amended on the motion of the Senator from Vermont, those two lots would be penetrated by the avenues, and it does not require any very active imagination to see what a ridiculous holding they would be either for the public or for private interests. There they would be, two rectangular pieces of land projected into the parallelograms of the original plan of the Capitol grounds fit neither for public use nor for private use. They would be improper excrescences, to say the least, upon the fair face of the city and of the common east of the Capitol; and I have no doubt that not only would the public necessity require their removal very soon, but that the offense against good taste would be of so severe a character when it became fairly visible to the eye that we should purchase those blocks at no matter what extravagant cost might be placed upon them.

I do not myself think that there is any ground for the proposed judicial building unless we are to enlarge this Capitol. The architects say that the Capitol cannot be enlarged without great injury to it. That is the universal decision of experts so far as their views have been submitted to the Senate, on this occasion at all events. It is conceded and it was conceded the other night, as will be recollected, by the honorable Senator from New York, that unless the Capitol was enlarged it would be necessary very soon to have ground for a Department of Justice building, that it would be necessary to carry out the plan of this committee and that very soon by the purchase of the additional ground it is now proposed to take unless the Capitol is to be enlarged. I do not think that the question of the enlargement of the Capitol is now in issue; and it does seem to me that it is settled by the adverse action of the Senate, it is settled upon all the principles of good taste and the verdict of architectural experts. I do not think, however individual opinion may be in regard to it here and there, that is a question the discussion of which is yet open and to be considered with reference to the fate of this measure.

If that be so, is there any better time to take the land included in the bill of the committee than to take it now? We do not, to be sure, want the Department of Justice immediately; but it is fair to assume that we must purchase the location for it at some time, and that having located the Library where it is proposed, we shall remove the bad proportions of the common east of the Capitol by the purchase of the other section if we do not take it at the present time.

If we are to do that, then the question arises, is now the proper time to do it? The other night it was opposed on the ground that although a private individual would make the purchase at the present time and thus avoid a probable rise in the price of the property hereafter, yet the Government having the right of condemning this property under the principles of the law of eminent domain, might well wait until the distant future and then take it, and take it with as good advantage as it could take the property now by virtue of its supreme power of so doing. But no one should forget that the power cannot be exercised unless it is exercised justly. No great government can afford to do otherwise than to pay what the property is worth, and, therefore, the Government in taking this under the exercise of this right in the future must take it precisely as a private individual would purchase it, for what it is worth. So that the Government is subject to the evil of the rise of the land as much as a private individual would be.

Mr. CONKLING. Will the Senator let me interrupt him there?

Mr. BLAIR. Certainly.

Mr. CONKLING. The honorable Senator undoubtedly misunderstood or mistook the argument as I heard it the other night.

Mr. BLAIR. We heard it alike.

Mr. CONKLING. So I thought; we heard it alike; but the argument was that if a building were put up on one of these squares, the probability of a building some time or other being put on the other would be so manifest that private owners would not improve their property, that betterments would not be placed upon it, that it would not be occupied for extensive buildings, and that therefore instead of increasing and keeping abreast of other pieces of property it would stagnate and languish and be an injury to those who held it. I submit to my honorable friend that that argument entirely answers the one that he is making now, namely, that increase would go on and when the Government comes in future time to take it it must pay for it with that increase on its head.

Mr. BLAIR. The Senator has stated just about one-half of the argument. I had stated the other half and was about approaching the alternative. I think that the Senator, assuming that the property is to increase in value, will admit that his argument is answered; he cannot well upon consideration claim that the Government could take that property in the future with its increased value at a less price than it is worth, although it has the power of eminent domain, his argument the other night being, as will be recollected, that it was better to wait and to grab it in the future, although its value might be very much greater than what it would cost us to-day.

That was one horn of the dilemma which I put to the Senator the other night. The other which he now repeats to the Senate is based upon the supposition that the property will remain at its present value or will be depreciated in value for the reason that the Government is to continue and to strengthen its threat that at some time in the future it will be taken for public use, and therefore that the land would not be improved by private owners as it otherwise would be. Now, supposing that to be so, does it improve the position of the gentleman or does it improve the position of the Government in dealing with the citizens that we are to hold over them for all time to come the threat that we will take this property and thus depreciate its value, as we have through the last ten or fifteen years on all the squares east of the Capitol? Let any man go among the citizens who live there, let any man go upon the grounds and ascertain the prices at which land suitable for building is now held, and he will find that instead of being what they should be upon the most eligible location on the face of the earth, close by the Capitol of the United States, lots can be bought to-day very much more cheaply than they can at a distance of two miles from the Capitol; and what is the reason of it? Simply because, as any man may learn upon inquiry, the people there have been threatened year after year that the land was to be taken for public use, and expensive structures have not been placed there and they are not to be placed there in the future. Expensive structures will never be placed in the immediate vicinity of the Capitol grounds until the minds of the citizens resident along those grounds are settled firmly in the belief that the Government is not likely to trespass further in the future.

Now, unless we are to get this land cheaper in the future, why not take it at the present time? We cannot get it more cheaply unless by this continuous threat. By this continuous injustice we depreciate the value of that property, or prevent its natural increase. Then ought we not to take it? So it seems to me; and in either way that you look at the arguments of those who oppose the bill, and also the arguments of those who oppose the taking of the whole of this ground at the present time, it appears to me that they lose sight of the true interests of the public and of private individuals alike.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, I have examined as carefully as I could the plat which is now on the table, and I find that the proposed six blocks that the Senator from Vermont desires to take not only close East Capitol street, A street north and A street south, but close Pennsylvania avenue and Maryland avenue at each angle. I have never believed, and do not believe now, the property can be obtained irrespective of these streets and avenues, with the effect of closing to the people these streets, because I regard a building extending over these grounds as effectually shutting them out from the Capitol. But the Senator from Vermont said night before last—I read from the remarks:

> As I stated in my remarks, I have here the written contracts of over half the parties who own the property in these squares, and as near as we can estimate the amount, the whole proposed cost will be a round million of dollars. That will be the whole cost of the six squares.

I desire to ask the Senator from Vermont if he is willing to put upon the record the substance of the written contracts made with these parties, so that we shall know what ground is to be purchased, who the owners are, and what portions of it we are about to obtain under those contracts, and then we can estimate somewhat the value of the remainder. I do not believe that the most valuable portion of this property can be obtained for double what it is now being estimated at. There are portions of it of very little value. I expect that the Senator has obtained contracts from the men who own those portions that are of very little value. He has assumed that portions which we know to be very valuable can be obtained at the same relative proportion. These contracts of course must be public property for the benefit of the Senate, because they were obtained by a committee of the Senate whose duty it was to investigate the subject. I think the fact will appear whenever those contracts are exhibited and the prices agreed upon are laid before the Senate, that the parties who are offering to sell are men who bought the property up for speculation and are to be paid now probably double what they expended for it, and it is the least valuable portion of the whole.

Mr. VOORHEES. Will the Senator from Kentucky allow me to ask his attention for a moment?

Mr. BECK. Certainly.

Mr. VOORHEES. The Senator from Kentucky seems to be overlooking the fact that we have already adopted an amendment limiting all expenditure for the ground and the structures thereon, and all damages arising therefrom, to $1,000,000.

Mr. BECK. I understand that; and the meaning of all that will be that you will take the least valuable and the least eligible of the lots that are now held and have been purchased on speculation, and you will pay a million for them and leave out the most eligible and the most valuable because you are so limited; and you will not obtain the six squares that are now said to be necessary for the harmony of the whole, but will invest a million in the portion of it on which the old jail stands and on which other property that is of very little value stands, and leave the most valuable part of it unpurchased. You limit it to a million. If it is to be a million for all the six squares, that is one proposition. I want to see what contracts the committee has made, whom the committee has made them with, what portions they are to obtain, and I then can judge for myself whether they will obtain the rest. I presume each contract made with the committee is a public matter that the Senate ought to understand.

Mr. VOORHEES. There has been no contract made with the committee.

Mr. BECK. The Senator from Vermont used the language that I have just read. "I have here —that is in this Senate——

Mr. VOORHEES. I suppose the Senator from Vermont referred to a proposition made to him. It is well known, and the Senator knows, that of the six members of the joint committee five were in favor of Judiciary Square.

Mr. BECK. So I understand.

Mr. VOORHEES. The Senator from Vermont was in favor of Capitol Hill. The propositions that were made from property-holders on the Hill to induce the committee to act favorably on their suggestions were made to the Senator from Vermont, and I have no doubt, as the Senator from Vermont said the other evening, that the report in favor of Judiciary Square moderated the price claimed by the owners of property on Capitol Hill.

Now, while I am up, if the Senator from Kentucky will allow me, I will say a word further. I am reminded that one of the numerous acts of Congress on the subject of the Library which never came to anything, one of the numerous water-hauls, was an appraisement of property by the Secretary of the Interior two or three years ago with a view to the purchase of it for this purpose, which included all of this property that we are talking about now, and the assessment then, when real estate was a great deal better than it is now, was given at about one million dollars.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. For these six squares?

Mr. VOORHEES. For these six squares. So that there is no fancy price about this matter.

Mr. BECK. And still while the Senator from Vermont was in a minority of the committee, he seems to have been able to obtain a majority of the Senate to agree with him as against the majority of the committee.

Mr. VOORHEES. Oh, yes.

Mr. BECK. He had a very large vote with him, which I understand simply meant that we would not adopt Judiciary Square as the point for the building. Senators in order to prevent Judiciary Square being adopted had a perfect right to vote for the amendment of the Senator from Vermont, intending finally to vote against Capitol Hill as well. They struck out Judiciary Square and inserted this. That meant that Judiciary Square should not be selected, and meant nothing more. I suppose each gentleman who voted to strike out Judiciary Square and insert Capitol Hill feels at perfect liberty to vote against Capitol Hill finally; but Judiciary Square is no longer to be considered. All that vote meant, as I understand it, was "we will not go to Judiciary Square." I was of the seven or eight who voted against the proposition to go on Capitol Hill. I did not want it to be considered that I was going to locate it upon Judiciary Square because I gave that vote, nor do I suppose the gentlemen who voted against locating it on Judiciary Square and for putting it on Capitol Hill do not feel at perfect liberty to vote as they please afterward.

I do not believe that we ought to close up all these streets on Capitol Hill, East Capitol street, A street north, A street south, Maryland avenue and Pennsylvania avenue, and build a mass of buildings there, cutting off the people of Capitol Hill, who have a right to the use of these streets, from approaching the Capitol grounds, for that is what we do when we build a massive building. I assume that we are going to do that if we take all this ground, avenues and streets included. I believe that we ought not to erect a competing building with this Capitol there, the ground for which cost not one million merely, but probably two millions if we get it at all. I desire to see the written contracts—which it is said exist—for one-half of that property. I want to know what portion of that property we have written contracts for if the Senate is to act upon the information of the Senator from Vermont, and let them be placed before us, so that we can investigate and see whether they cover these angles, or whether they are for the old jail property, or whether they include the property occupied by Judge Field or by General Dunn, and then we can form some opinion ourselves how much it is likely to cost. I expect when the record is examined the property for which we have written contracts will be found to be the least valuable of all, and forms no sort of criterion as to what the rest of the property will cost.

I have been advised that one estimate is that a property can be had for $28,000, when the buildings on it cost $60,000. I am not one of those who believe unless we see the contracts themselves and know what property they embrace that we are going to obtain it at anything like that price. I think the Senate ought to know, if we are to be concluded by contracts already made, what the contracts embrace and whom they were made with, and we can then go to the records ourselves and ascertain what the property is worth by judging from the prices paid for it by these same people.

Mr. GARLAND. Mr. President, the other evening when we had this subject under discussion, there was a motion made by myself to recommit the whole matter to the committee; but that motion was withdrawn; and now I desire to say a word before the vote is taken on the amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas.

I voted the other night as one of thirty-nine for the selection of a site upon the Hill in preference to the site proposed on Judiciary Square. That was what my vote meant and was as far as I intended it to go. In the short time we have had to look into the matter I preferred a location on Capitol Hill to the location on Judiciary Square. I desired the matter to stop there for the purpose of examining the reports that had been read that night, both the majority and minority reports, and seeking from other quarters what information we could get before we acted on the subject finally. I desired also to subject to closer scrutiny and examination the important amendment to this bill which for the first time made its appearance then in the Senate, offered by the Senator from Vermont; that is the amendment providing for the machinery of condemning this property or any of it in case condemnation had to be resorted to.

It appears now that there is great doubt in the minds of gentlemen who are familiar—at least much more familiar than I am—with this property as to whether or not we should purchase all that is intended to be included in the bill. The minority report is clear and quite strong on that subject. Gentlemen who have examined it and know it thoroughly are in favor of taking the full quantity proposed; others doubt the propriety of it. The statement of the Senator from Vermont, as well as the statement of the Senator from Delaware, impresses my judgment very much; but in addition to that we are now preparing, or intending to prepare, to erect a building that will do for all time to come, at least as far as we can foresee.

My judgment is that in acting on this important subject we had better take too much ground than run the risk of not taking enough. I concur with the Senator from New York as he expressed himself the other night; I would much prefer that the Library should be within this building; but we have it, I think, upon tolerably good testimony, testimony sufficient for reasonable men in the ordinary transaction of their own affairs to act upon, that it cannot be placed in this building, that this building cannot be well extended or reformed or deformed, if you please, in a manner sufficient to admit the Library within these walls. Therefore I would give the benefit of this doubt to the squares mentioned in the bill, and would vote for them in preference to any other project which has been suggested. I infinitely prefer that the Library should be within this building for many reasons which I might state; but we might as well take a lesson now from the construction of this building. If it had been foreseen that this Library would have grown so enormously as it has grown, if its exigencies and its wants had been anticipated, probably this building would have been erected in a way to meet those wants at some future time; but it has not been. Let us not commit the same mistake either as to ground or as to the proportions of the building in erecting a library; in other words, let us anticipate time as far as we can in making provision on this subject.

The particular point to which I addressed myself the other night was the machinery of the bill in regard to acquiring this property in case purchase could not be made. The subject we all know is not free from difficulties; on the contrary, it is always surrounded with doubt, always surrounded with matters of great difficulty. Different States have different rules on the subject; but after all, the great point is that the owner may have an opportunity to be heard and know what is being done with the property; that he may have his day in court and be confronted with witnesses against him and see the appraisers or assessors of his property, and be able to present proof of its value.

While the bill was not recommitted on my motion, the committee have acted as if it had been, and have taken the bill and amended it in a way that I think is entirely satisfactory on all these points. It goes beyond any other measure that has been passed by Congress heretofore—and I have examined most of them—for the condemnation of private property. It throws more restrictions, more safeguards around it, both for the Government and for the owner of property; and it gives to every person, the owner known as well as unknown, every opportunity to be heard and know what disposition the commission is making of his property. It is fashioned after the indications and suggestions that were made by the Supreme Court in the latest case on that subject before it, the condemnation of post-office property in Cincinnati. Although the bill was not recommitted, the committee have taken the measure in reference to this matter under consideration and perfected it, and given every protection and every safeguard that both the Government and the individual can have in these proceedings, so that no one will be damnified under them.

In reference to the suggestion of the Senator from Kentucky, I think the word "contract" as used by the Senator from Vermont was a mistake in language, for no one was authorized to make a contract; it was simply an offer of proposals on which Congress might ground its action, I take it, looking afterward to the perfection of the contracts either by the proper authorities or under a proper system of condemnation.

That is all I desire to say. I deemed this much due to myself as well as to the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. WHYTE in the chair.) The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. President, it is quite unexpected to me that I say another word on the subject. I am moved to say it by the honorable Senator from Arkansas. He seems to have been both captivated and captured—I suppose by his immediate and fascinating neighbor in the Senate, the honorable Senator from Indiana. I am not going to object to the subjugation of the Senator from Arkansas as it has been achieved by the honorable Senator from Indiana. I am going, however, to refer to one branch of the remarks to which the Senate has listened.

As in two or three other instances, we have heard a sort of sighing preference given to the Capitol building as the continuing inclosure which should hold these books. But, says the Senator from Arkansas, we have evidence before us on which we may act to show that that wished-for alternative cannot be adopted. We are told that the Capitol cannot be enlarged or reformed or deformed, said the Senator pensively, so that room can be found for the books.

Mr. President, without being an architect or the son of an architect, I rise with the utmost modesty to dissent from that statement made by the Senator from Arkansas. I wish to deny that it ever has been established or asserted to the satisfaction of the Senate, or as I must think the satisfaction of anybody else, that this building cannot be feasibly, economically, and wisely enlarged so as to give abundant space for the Library or for any other use to which its enlargement might be put. And I do not forget—the Senator from Indiana alluded to it—that architects have been found, two of them, three of them, I believe, and I will add any other number to cover accidents, who have said that in their opinion it would not be wise, or so wise as something else, to enlarge the Capitol building; and speaking without forgetting that such statements have been made, I nevertheless venture upon my own individual responsibility to say that I do not believe and cannot believe any such thing.

To guard myself as I go along from the suspicion of rashness or immodesty, I wish to say that a number of architects whom I know, who have vindicated their professional title to respect in many monumental instances, have assured me orally and in writing, in general terms and also specifying with some definition their idea, that this building can be at any time enlarged in either one of several ways so as not to deform it, in the language of the Senator from Arkansas, but so as to preserve it, to extend it, and to increase its symmetry, its unity—that architectural respect in which it is now wanting—to inflict no injury upon it, but to answer the whole purpose. I venture in that ordinary and inexact sense falling within the province of one who knows no more than I do, to suggest two or three things of which I think we all may judge.

The Capitol originally consisted of a central building to which wings were added. In these wings, the design and the execution of that design, was a central building at once higher and larger than the wings. That shape of building is so common that it exists, I believe, everywhere on this planet where architecture, ancient or modern, has set its foot. In that day, and "there were brave men before Agamemnon," although I do not doubt the great acquirements of this day; before the present generation came there were men who knew a good deal about architecture, architecture being one of the arts which flourished long ago in as great proportion as it has even now attained; it was thought then that a central building projecting beyond the wings and being the chief feature of an edifice was defensible upon architectural principles. In later times, owing to the increase of population and the demands upon it, it came to be thought wise to construct two wings, in one of which we sit. It was thought admissible in the project to put a house within a house, an iron box within a building, and here it is, and we sit in it, from which iron box neither sky nor earth nor tree nor any other of nature's signs is visible. It was thought admissible also to extend these two wings both east and west far beyond the line of the central building, and so it has come that the central building which was originally the great feature of the Capitol is dwarfed, diminished, and thrown into the shade by the two wings which project on either side so far beyond.

Now, need a man be an architect to conclude that if the central building were again brought out to hold the same relation to the wings which at first it held, offense would not be done either to architecture or to common sense? I am willing to rest that inquiry, and to venture to allow it to proceed from myself to the judgment of all men of common sense, whether they ever took the trouble to study a principle of architecture or not.

I come next to a second feature, and I am going to be very brief. The dome rose until it out-towered St. Peter's; it is higher; and as you look at the building and the dome from any direction you see as the great feature the dome itself. So high and vast is it, so relatively small now is the central building, that the image presented to the eye and the effect produced upon the mind of the beholder is a dome upheld by a building or a platform, and not a building surmounted by a dome. The proportions have changed entirely under the process which I have narrated.

Suppose now the central building were lifted forty or fifty feet, another story added to it, it would resume in altitude the proportion first assigned to it, and vindicated by the men and the able men, the accomplished men who superintended the original erection of the Capitol. Suppose then the central building were extended eighty feet, if you please, and I think any of us could determine on the ground—I have often thought I was able to do so—where the extension should go and where it should stop; measuring it now in feet I may be a good deal out of the way; but suppose it were extended so far as would reassert the original design and proportion; suppose it were extended until it projected beyond those subordinate features, as they were designed to be, of the building known as wings, and it were raised in the same proportion; can my honorable friend from Arkansas suppose that that would deform the building? Can he doubt that it is practicable so to change the central building? There is room enough on either side; certainly there is room enough to proceed upward. What then, is the difficulty? The chief labor of the work would be in raising the dome, and we need not call for the statement of engineers to know how rapidly that could be done, for much more ponderous masses of architecture, masses much more dispersed and much more difficult to handle, have been raised in many instances, and very recently, instances so near my honorable friend from Indiana that I think they have not escaped his notice.

What is the difficulty, then, in making in that part of the building over which the dome now towers all the cubic space you please within rational supposition? None as I believe; none as I am assured by architect after architect who has given examination to the subject. I think without venturing upon ground so much within the domain of art or science that I may not go there, I may affirm that the elevation and enlargement of the central building would make this Capitol not only more majestic than it is, but it would make it absolutely without a rival on all this globe in its grandeur as a pile.

It may be economical to begin by paying at least a million for the ground on which brick and mortar or granite and cement are to be piled. I cannot see that. I cannot see why the building, the erection of walls may not go on as economically in connection with the central part of the Capitol and in order to extend it, as to cross the square and lay foundations and rear walls upon them there.

I am not going to argue this question; I am not presumptuous enough to insist that I have opinions about it of any value to the Senate or worthy to govern the action of anybody beyond myself, but I am entirely unwilling that there should go unanswered these repeated statements both that it is far more desirable than anything else could be to enlarge the Capitol and that it is impossible to do so. Speaking merely for myself and disclaiming any hope of inducing other Senators to adopt my views, I wish it to appear that there was at least one member of the Senate who did vote for this project upon the idea that this building is one impossible to touch; that it is the only structure on the face of this earth that with plenty of land all around it can neither be carried up by adding a story nor extended by enlargement.

Once more, I wish to have it appear that the Senate was reminded that as in the instance of other buildings, venerable, historic buildings, to which pilgrimages are made by architects and critics to learn by seeing them something more of the capacity and majesty of structures, without departing from the designs illustrated by such historic structures, it would be simple and easy to go down on a grade below this wing and there erect of such extent as you please a building connected with this and a companion building connected with the other wing of the Capitol, in which the House is sitting. In those two wings the two legislative chambers might sit, and a Senator might be allowed to enjoy the privilege enjoyed by every other man in the country save only convicts in the penitentiary—because the inmates of mad-houses are allowed to do it—Senators might be allowed to go to the window and look out and see the sky and the trees and those things, not to speak of fresh, common air, which nature gives to man, and you might in warm weather have the windows put down from the top and raised from the bottom in order that there should be a circulation, an agitation of the air, as I believe it is scientifically called, instead of sitting here where, through perforations in the floor is blown up a current of air under your feet to go out somewhere through a perforated roof.

I can remember, Mr. President, when a Senator from Missouri not now here used frequently to ask me why it was that coming here in the morning and feeling very well, after a short time he felt as if a cord was bound tight around his head over his eyes. I had wondered at that a good deal, too, and in a pilgrimage around the building one morning I discovered a little instrument which hangs on yonder wall, two or three of which had been bought by the Sergeant-at-Arms, and conveniently put away over in the far corner, put away a good deal as a petit jury is when a constable is sworn to take them to a private and convenient place and there keep them. I found this little instrument with two thermometers, one a dry bulb and the other a wet bulb thermometer to measure one sensible and the other mean temperature, designed to show by an index finger how many grains of moisture there might be in a cubic foot of air. We brought it in here and tried it; and where nature says that in summer time in the temperate zone there should be sixty grains of moisture, there were about nineteen; and as nineteen is to sixty so were some of the vitalizing qualities of the air which Senators for nearly a generation had been breathing. And then one of the subordinates of the Senate acted, with a willingness not always found among experts,—men who know how to run an engine and blow a fan, and therefore feel invaded in their prerogative if a man who does not know how to do that makes a suggestion lying within that domain. Some expert says he thinks you cannot enlarge the Capitol, and doubtless he will think it extremely presumptuous in me to entertain a doubt, nevertheless, whether it can be enlarged or not. This officer of the Senate, willing to listen to a suggestion or an outcry from those who were suffering, went down into the basement story and put pan after pan and coil after coil until an amount of water was brought into contact with the boilers down below and an amount of evaporation produced which had before been considered absurd and impossible. And now if Senators will go and look at that instrument which hangs yonder—I have not looked at it lately—they will see that in place of dying by the foot they are dying now only by inches.

I recollect an impeachment trial not a great while ago which took place when the mercury outside was one hundred and seven degrees in the shade. I remember the atmosphere here during day after day while these doors were closed in consultation. If I may make a further personal remark, Mr. President, I remember that it took one member of this Senate three years to rise from the blow which he received on the occasion of that impeachment. And when I am told that this building as it is now is as perfect as hand can make it, that you must not touch it for fear you will make an alteration, I am almost willing to hazard the assertion that in some respects almost any change would be for the better. And I believe that if two wings were built or two additions to these wings below furnishing nothing but area for the legislative chambers and the galleries surrounding them and outer air on every side, and leaving all this space for committee-rooms which very soon we are to need and be driven somewhere to find, that of itself would be, in reason, in good judgment, and in architecture, a plan which could be abundantly defended. And should that be done it would bring this building into resemblance to one of the most beautiful, one of the most memorable, and one of the most historic examples of architecture extant on this planet.

But, Mr. President, I have detained the Senate longer than I meant to do on this point. After hearing the Senator from Arkansas, knowing as I do the discernment and care of that Senator, say that unquestionably, in his estimation, the wisest thing to do would be to enlarge the Capitol but that he had evidence that it could not be done and he felt bound to succumb to that evidence, I felt minded once before this subject passed away to put on record the fact that there was one Senator uninformed enough, rash enough, presumptuous enough, or whatever it may be, to doubt that proposition; one Senator who was not ready to believe that this building among all its other peculiarities was the only one on the face of the earth which could not be changed without some terrible disaster resulting from that.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. President, merely a word. I desire to say that under the lead of my colleague, when he was chairman of the Committee on the Library, an estimate was obtained from Thomas U. Walter, the original architect of the Capitol extension, as to the cost of extending the front upon the east side two hundred and seventy-five feet, and his estimate was, for even that small amount of space to be obtained, that it could not be had for less than $4,000,000 in consequence of the style of the building and the materials to be used.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I do not doubt that the Capitol could be enlarged to its improvement and that it ought to be; and I have been one of the most stubborn in my resistance to the idea of the Library going to an outside building; but I became convinced by Mr. Spofford and by examination of the space already needed and likely to be required that if the entire Capitol were given up to the Library it would not be as large as the future demands; and therefore it is an extraordinary conception that you could enlarge this building to such an extent as to contain the Library of the future, when the whole building itself after it shall have been enlarged to the utmost limits that architectural propriety will permit (and I am persuaded that the building will never be what it should be until it is enlarged in the center) will not answer the demands of the future of the Library that is now to be constructed or to be begun. Therefore I gave up with reluctance—but I gave up wholly—the idea of attempting to combine with the Capitol the National Library of the future in the same building.

I hvve been among the most stubborn in the idea of giving the east front to the Library. I would have voted with the small minority that resisted it; I believe there were only half a dozen; but if we are going there, I hope the amendment of my friend from Kansas will not prevail, so that you can have a great building in the center and leave the wings to be built up with any kind of private structures to the great detriment of the appe arance of the whole building. It would be just like allowing a blacksmith's shop to be built adjacent to the Capitol at one end, trusting to the future that there will be necessity of warning off whoever may be there, and then have to pay treble the cost you can get the ground for now. If we are going there let us go there on a grand scale and not grudgingly and in a way that we shall repent of as soon as we have arrived there.

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. President, I understood the Senator from Vermont to say that extending the central building of the Capitol two hundred and seventy-five feet was estimated to cost $4,000,000. If I am wrong in that statement, I hope the Senator will correct me. I wish to ask the Senator from Indiana how much it is estimated that the proposed Library building will cost.

Mr. VOORHEES. The plan that we have adopted, together with the purchase of the ground, reaches the sum of about five million dollars. The projected extension spoken of by the Senator from Vermont, and estimated for by Mr. Walters, would not accommodate the Congressional Library for the next twelve years, and at the end of ten years other buildings would have to be commenced. It is a matter of calculation of feet and inches; it is not a matter of guess-work or anything of the sort. It is a matter of calculation that in the next sixteen years this entire Capitol will not hold the books we shall have.

Mr. CONKLING. I do not object to my honorable friend making a speech upon another point in answering the question that I asked him; but if he will pardon me for a word, I want to deal with his answer to my question.

The honorable Senator says, as if he shrank from such a total, that $4,000,000 might be the cost of extending the central building of the Capitol, and another Senator says that what it is proposed to do it is admitted will cost $5,000,000 to begin with. I will put these two sums together and compare them, for two purposes. First, I commend the statement of the honoroble Senator from Vermont to my friend from Arkansas, who, if I understand him, had accepted the idea that it would be impossible to change the Capitol building. It turns out now that it is not only possible, but that an estimate has been made for doing it; and I might say a word if it were worth while about that estimate, but I will not, though the estimate for doing it is $1,000,000 less than the confession of the cost of the building which is proposed.

My honorable friend from Connecticut [Mr. EATON] has reminded me that there is a difference between a willing and an unwilling witness, whether he estimates or testifies; but let that go.

As the field is one of art and science and of experts, it is rather hazardous to deal with it at all; but one who has ventured as far as I have may as well expose himself still further. I am willing therefore to have it written down as a guess of mine upon which I may be tried in the future, that $8,000,000 will not erect this building, and I would be willing to go further than that; I have no idea that $8,000,000 will ever do it at all.

The honorable Senator from Indiana says it is clear that such an extension as was proposed by this estimate would not accommodate the Congressional Library for the next twelve years. I venture to take issue with my honorable friend upon that, not as to his count and measurement of the increase of the Library, but because he assumes that a particular measure of the extension of the building is a basis of his calculation. Will the honorable Senator from Indiana tell me that if you raise the central building forty or fifty feet, whatever the just measurement should turn out to be, and make all over that building so much of added space, and then carry it out not to the east a certain number of feet, but carry it out both east and west in its original proportions to the original wing, you will not have space enough? Why, Mr. President, I believe the greatest building on earth extant now stands in Spain; I have forgotten its dimensions. I undertake to say that if you will raise this building so as not to misshape it by leaving it too low you can put a central building there and with as many cubic feet as is in the edifice to which I have referred. But as the Senator says if you extend it only two hundred and seventy-five feet in one direction and stop there and leave it as it is you will give so many added cubic feet, and then if the Library increases at the same ratio at which it has been growing in recent years, after twelve years or some other time they would be fall. That is true; but I submit to the honorable Senator it is no answer to the proposition.

Mr. President, if the object is to preserve the Library, to break the way for future ages in all of the accretions of the Library and at the same time to make shapely and complete the one building in which all the American people that are and are to be are interested, I will not commence my economy as a Senator at that point nor will I bestow it there; on the contrary I would rather vote to pay $12,000,000 to make this Capitol a building of absolute primacy in the world, to stand in a far hereafter as a monument worthy of so great a people, and in it to accommodate for all time the congressional or a national library. I would rather vote I say $12,000,000 or $20,000,000 for that than to vote six or seven or eight million to put a building a distance off in inharmonious proximity to the Capitol, detrimental to it, injurious to the ideas of architectural effect, and afterward to vote three or four or five million more to put another building adjacent to it so that this Capitol shall be like a mountain with foot-hills, a fringe of buildings round about it all to dwarf, impair, and diminish its effect. I insist that we might give not only the inadequate space of which Senators speak but abundant space, if you please all that you will get in a building put either north or south of East Capitol street, and that I believe is true economy.

I believe it would be if by count you could ascertain that it will cost now something more than the other building would cost now, looking to the long future, during which I take it this Capitol is to remain the center of all the governmental and legislative activities which belong to it now. You had better bestow more and have something adequate than to bestow less and have something disappointing. And I believe that this policy on which we are entering is one to serve for the time and disappoint in the end; and if the honorable Senator from Indiana would summon to his aid some one of the architects, who stand already recorded, their reputation staked upon what they could do, and let them make not a two hundred and seventy-five feet estimate, but an estimate for all the space that the Senator says the Library needs, he would connect his name with a measure and associate it with a work which would be looked upon with pride when those who sit in these Halls have left them forever and when the epitaphs of most of us have vanished utterly.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. President, four years ago I was unfortunately upon a commission charged with this matter of the Library. That commission devoted very much time to it, as the present one has. They found at that time the three elements which have been discussed here to-day. There was in that commission, as there was in Congress, a portion of its members who believed the Library could be accommodated in this building. There were those in that commission who believed otherwise and believed that the Library should be located upon Judiciary Square. There were others who believed it should be located on the hill about the Capitol. They were unable to agree. I saw clearly then the result of that disagreement, and I sought to solve the question by considering one at a time of these three questions; but I was unable to accomplish that in the commission, and the commission came before Congress, a majority of it with a proposition to locate the Library on Judiciary Square, a minority of it to locate it about the Capitol, and still another minority to keep it within this building. Those who were for Judiciary Square in this body and those who were for a building upon Capitol Hill were more than those who were for retaining the Library in this building, and they voted down that proposition. Then in turn those who were for the Library in this building and those who were for the Library on Capitol Hill were more than those who were for the Library in Judiciary Square, and they voted that down. Then, again, those who were for the Library in Judiciary Square and those who were for retaining it in this building were more than those who were for having the Library on the Hill, and they voted that down in turn.

So the distinguished chairman of that commission here in the Senate, one of the ablest of its members, not now a member of this body, went out, as the result, in a defeat all around. It was then suggested to follow the idea that was urged in the original commission, and eliminate one at a time these elements, and bring Congress, if possible, to pass upon one of them at a time; but it was determined by Congress that one of these questions should be determined by architects, and not by Congress. Therefore they provided a bill that a commission should be appointed, and that they should employ architects, first, to determine whether it was possible to keep the Library in this building, and if they should determine that in the negative, then the commission itself should determine whether it should be on Judiciary Square or about the Capitol. They selected their architects, and the architects in the atmosphere around them considered or felt that they were employed—I am afraid they felt influenced by the prevalent idea that it was impossible to keep the Library in this building—and therefore they reported against that plan.

I was always of the belief that it could be kept in this building. I never have been satisfied by any of the reasons given by architects why this building cannot be put in proper shape, as everybody admits it is not now, but put in such shape as it will ultimately be by those who come after us, if we do not do it ourselves, so that there will be ample room for the Library. But I agreed in the Senate to submit that question to experts, and I felt as if I would not set up my private opinion as against those experts. Those experts have pronounced against it; and when we come into the Senate with the conclusion of the commission to put the Library on Judiciary Square we find ourselves just where we were at the conclusion of the former commission.

Those who believe still and feel as if they were at liberty to vote according to their private judgment, notwithstanding the objection of the architects that the Library ought to be retained within these walls, and those who are in favor of a building on the hill about the Capitol, are too many for those who are for a building on Judiciary Square, and they vote that down, 39 to 7. Then we come back to the question, are we to have a Library at all or are we to have it in some building on the hill about the Capitol; for we have determined, whatever may be our own private judgment, against the policy of so enlarging and altering this Capitol as to keep this Library within these walls.

Having, according to the original idea of attacks upon this measure, overthrown, if I may use that phrase, the advocates of the Library within the building and the Library upon Judiciary Square, the only question is whether we will have a Library about the Capitol of such proportions and upon such grounds and so located as is suited for the Library, not only of to-day, but of the next half century. I have no doubt that, if we owned the land here as we own the land in Judiciary Square, if it were all ours about here, there would be no hesitancy, except with those who still believe the Library ought to be kept within these walls. Everybody would concur, it seems to me, in the conclusion that upon one or the other of these front corners the Library should be located, on such ample ground and of such dimensions as would be fit for the Library for all time to come that we can foresee and provide for.

Then the question is whether in erecting a structure that must cost four or five million dollars we will pervert the whole object, dwarf it, spoil it for fifty years because we are unwilling to pay the price of the ground it shall rest on. It is not for to-day, it is for the time to come. We are providing for those who are to come after us, and we should provide for them in some comprehension of the vastness of the future of this country and this capital and this great Library, and not haggle about a few feet of ground on which to put this Library.

It seems to me, sir, that we fail to comprehend that this is a work not for to-day alone, but for the long years that are to come, of additions to this Library and additions to this Capitol for the legitimate purposes of the Capitol and for additions in the administration of justice in the courts and all that will gather around this Capitol and make it continue to grow and rise in proportion and in grandeur, as it surely will in the keeping of those who comprehend the future of this nation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas, [Mr. INGALLS.]

Several SENATORS. Let it be read.

The SECRETARY. After the word "twenty-nine," in line 9 of section 1, it is proposed to strike out down to and including "thirty-one," in line 12, in the words "and triangular parcels designated thereon as numbers 726, 727, 730, and 731;" and in line 13, after the word "by," to strike out "B" and insert "A;" and in line 14, after "by," to strike out "B" and insert "A;" and after the word "east," in line 15, to strike out down to and including "alleys" in line 17; so as to make the clause read:

Squares designated on the plan of the city of Washington as numbers 728 and 729; the whole being bounded on the north by A street north, on the east by Second street east, on the south by A street south, and on the west by First street east.

Mr. COCKRELL. What will be the effect of that amendment, I should like to ask the Senator, the exact effect?

Mr. INGALLS. To exclude the two corner squares that are proposed to be purchased by the amendment offered by the Senator from Vermont, being the squares that are bisected diagonally by Pennsylvania and Maryland avenues, and which cannot be covered by the building or used for garden purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Kansas.

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CONKLING. I ask for a separate vote on that amendment which commits to three persons to put this building wherever they please on this ground.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. How shall the question be taken in respect to the other amendments made as in Committee of the Whole? ["In gross."] The amendment indicated by the Senator from New York will be reserved. The question is on concurring in the other amendments made as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendments were concurred in.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on the amendment reserved at the request of the Senator from New York.

Several SENATORS. Let it be reported.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. At the end of the first amendment inserted in section 8, it is proposed to add:

And the President of the United States, with the advice of the Librarian of the Library of Congress and of the Architect of the Capitol Extension, shall determine and fix the site of the Library upon the grounds herein described, if the same shall be taken and paid for under this act.

Mr. CONKLING. I ask for the yeas and nays on that.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. ROLLINS. Will it be in order to move to strike out "with the advice," and the words which follow?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks that would be in order.

Mr. ROLLINS. Then I move to strike out those words so as leave the matter to the discretion of the President alone.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The words proposed to be stricken out will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out "with the advice of the Librarian of Congress and of the Architect of the Capitol Extension."

Mr. ROLLINS. So as to leave it to the President alone.

Mr. VOORHEES. I am very anxious for a vote, and I do not want to say a word. I hope the motion will not prevail. I think it a very proper amendment as it stands that the President advised by the Architect of the Capitol and the Librarian shall select the spot on the grounds that we purchase to place the Library. I think it a very proper provision.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to perfect what is to be stricken out before the vote to strike out is taken. I move to substitute for the words "with the advice" the words "after consulting."

Mr. VOORHEES. I have no objection to that.

Mr. HOAR. The words "with the advice" have a certain technical meaning in our judicial legislative construction, which may mean that the President is required to take the advice of these officers and act upon it. I do not suppose that was the meaning.

Mr. VOORHEES. I accept the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. This being an amendment adopted in Committee of the Whole the Senator from Indiana cannot modify it. The amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts will be read perfecting the language proposed to be stricken out.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is moved after the words "and the President of the United States" to insert "after consulting," and strike out the words "with the advice of."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ROLLINS. I do not wish to deprive the President of the United States of the advice of these gentlemen, of the good suggestions they may make; but I do not think it necessary in this bill to provide for it. I think he can secure all the advice he may need from these parties without their being mentioned in the bill.

Mr. HOAR. I desire simply to say, as I suggested this phraseology, that the reason for it seems to me to be a very good one. Of course, it does not limit the President of the United States to take the advice of these two persons and nobody else; but it does give these two officials so connected with the subject, so capable of dealing with it, the right to be heard. It is like the right we give to the Secretary of the Treasury to report to us, and to the other heads of Departments to submit their statements and their views and considerations to the President. It is not a limitation of the President, but it is an official prerogative of the officers, and a very proper one, which the bill creates.

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. President, I should be inclined to vote for this amendment if I could understand what the prerogative is. I wonder if any Senator can tell what would be the function of these officials. Where does their authority begin and where does it leave off? Suppose they should both think the building should be put on the south side of East Capitol street and the President of the United States should think that it should be put on the other side, who is to prevail in that?

Mr. VOORHEES. The President.

Mr. CONKLING. That shows that these two officials then have no prerogative on earth under this amendment.

Mr. VOORHEES. Does it show that advice, although it may not be followed, is of no value?

Mr. CONKLING. It shows this, if my friend will permit me to make my own statement, that unless these two persons have some control about it, the only effect of the amendment would be to name to the President two persons with whom he was to consult. It shows that, and that I object to. If it shows any thing more than that, it clothes these two other persons with some power. The Senator from Indiana says, and I agree with him, that it clothes them with no power at all. Then what is the sense of saying to the President "we name to you one man and we name a second man whom you had better advise with." Look at it a moment. Suppose the President of the United States comes to act upon this; suppose there happens to be in the city of Washington Mr. Olmstead for example whose great reputation is as a landscape gardener. Suppose at the same time there should be either one of two or three architects whom I can mention who are supposed in the region of country in which I live to be very eminent in their profession; and the President of the United States should think that, utilizing their presence here, it would be very wise for him to get them to go upon this ground, to look it all over, and study it and make a plat and a profile and a façade of the building and a general outline of effects—I know this amendment would not cut him off, would not prohibit his doing that.

Mr. VOORHEES. Certainly not.

Mr. CONKLING. And he would do it in spite of it. So if he wants to confer with the Librarian or the Architect of the Capitol or the Supervising Architect of the Treasury, whoever he may be, he would do it; and why not put in the Supervising Architect of the Treasury too? If you put nobody in, the President will do—that is the presumption and that is my belief—the wise thing to get all the light he can about this. What then is the sense of naming two persons and nobody else and saying the President shall act upon consultation with them when they have no power at all?

If the amendment offered by the Senator from New Hampshire prevail these names will be stricken out, this responsibility will be put upon the President, and if the President thinks that the Senator from Indiana can aid him he will resort to the Senator from Indiana, and if the Supervising Architect of the Treasury he will resort to him, and if these two persons named to them, and so on. Why should we undertake here to guess who the persons are and confine it to two that the President had better consult?

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, we give to the Commissioner of Agriculture the right to make known his opinion as to the interests and wishes of his Department to both Houses of Congress before we legislate on those subjects; we give to every head of a Department the same privilege, the right to have his views in regard to the necessary legislation and present condition of his Department made known to Congress. Some Senators go so far as to think we should secure by law the right to be upon the floor and participate in our debates of all these officers. The reason for selecting these men and giving them by law the right to lay before the President their views for his consideration, without fettering his action, is this: the Architect of the Capitol has studied the architecture of the Capitol, as his office implies, for years, and in determining the question of a building to be placed in the neighborhood of this, the effect of which is to combine with the effect of the Capitol itself in a distant view of this height, and of the city, and which is to affect favorably or unfavorably the appearance of the Capitol itself, it is right we should reserve to him an opportunity to make known officially to the President his views. So in regard to the Librarian. He has studied this problem; he is one of the ablest and most accomplished men in the world in dealing with such a problem; and the question of its effect on the character of the building, or access to the building, or the convenient use of the building, and on the particular location, is one which it is not only reasonable but eminently, it seems to me, proper that he should have an opportunity to lay before the President.

Mr. ROLLINS. It was not my purpose, as I said before, to deprive the President of any advice of counsel or wisdom that he could get from these men, or any other men, but to leave the whole field open. Let him seek information where he will, and when he will, and how he will. Leave the thing entirely free. I see no necessity for putting this in the bill.

Mr. VOORHEES. If the Senator from New Hampshire will allow me, there is nothing in this point. If it is more acceptable to the Senator from New York than it is that it be left to the President, be it so; and of course he will consult with whom he pleases. I am perfectly willing that the names of the parties spoken of as his advisers may go out of the amendment, if that is the design.

Mr. ROLLINS. All right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs, will the Senate concur in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole as amended, upon which the yeas and nays are ordered?

Mr. VOORHEES. Since the amendment has been made offered by the Senator from New Hampshire, I understand it is not desirable on the part of anybody to have the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The yeas and nays have been ordered. By unanimous consent the question may be taken otherwise. Is there objection? The Chair hears no objection, and the call for the yeas and nays is withdrawn. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was concurred in.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Shall the bill be engrossed for a third reading?

Mr. CALL. Before the vote is taken I desire to say that while I shall not interpose for any delay in acting on the report of the committee and its bill, I am impressed with the force of the suggestions made by the Senator from New York. If I had an opportunity I should certainly vote for that mode of providing the necessary accommodations for the Library and its future increase by enlarging the Capitol. I am sorry that there is not some amendment or some mode in which I can express that opinion by my vote. I desire to place myself on record by saying that I regard the enlargement of the Capitol as by far the best mode of providing for the necessary increase of the Library.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read the third time.

Mr. BECK. I only desire to say that I want the yeas and nays on the final passage of the bill so that I can record my vote against it.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I am not going to detain the Senate at all. I propose to vote for the bill as it now stands. Nevertheless I am unwilling to allow the occasion to pass without saying that I concur very much with what the Senator from Florida has said. I regret very much that the suggestions of the Senator from New York cannot be carried out, and if I had an opportunity I should be very much inclined to vote according to those suggestions.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. INGALLS, (when his name was called.) I am paired on this question with the Senator from Mississippi, [Mr. BRUCE.]

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. ANTHONY. Upon this question I am paired with the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. THURMAN,] who is absent.

The result was announced—yeas 38, nays 18; as follows:

Mr. MORRILL. I desire to call the attention of the Clerk to the renumbering that will be necessary of the sections. My amendment follows the original bill and therefore should be renumbered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will attend to that.

Mr. TELLER. I move that the Senate take a recess until half past seven o'clock.

Several SENATORS. Let us adjourn.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Rhode Island moves that the Senate adjourn. The question is on the motion to adjourn.

Mr. TELLER called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 31, nays 27; as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, February 23, 1881.

The House met at eleven o'clock a. m.

The SPEAKER. The Chaplain of the House is necessarily absent. The Journal will be read.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted—

To Mr. STEPHENS, for to-day, on account of indisposition; and

To Mr. EWING, indefinitely, on account of sickness.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. DUNNELL asked unanimous consent that Agnes W. Hills be allowed to withdraw her papers from the files of the House, there having been no adverse report.

There being no objection, leave was granted.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WARNER. I call for the regular order, not to exclude business of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. BLACKBURN, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported back, with the amendments of the Senate, the bill (H. R. No. 6972) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, and for other purposes.

The report of the committee was read, as follows:

The committee recommend concurrence in amendments numbered 2, 4, 6, 7, 11 and 12, and non-concurrence in amendments numbered 1, 3, 5, 8, 9, 10, and 13.

The several recommendations by the Committee on Appropriations were agreed to.

Mr. BLACKBURN moved to reconsider the several votes concurring and non-concurring in the amendments of the Senate; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. COX and Mr. WARNER called for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the call of committees for reports.

The committees were called and no reports were presented.

JOSEPH UPTON AND G. W. CURTIS.

Mr. FRYE, by unanimous consent, reported back from the Committee on Ways and Means the bill (H. R. No. 7172) to admit free of duty two watches presented to Joseph Upton and G. W. Curtis for rescuing the crew and passengers of the steamship American.

Mr. FRYE. I was requested by the Committee on Ways and Means to ask unanimous consent that this bill might be put on its passage now.

Mr. COX. I call for the regular order.

Mr. FRYE. This bill merely proposes to remit duties on two watches presented to the captain and mate of an American bark for rescuing the passengers and crew of an English vessel.

Mr. COX. I have no objection to that.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to admit free of duties and customs charges two watches now in the custody of the collector of customs at Boston, Massachusetts, presented to Captain Joseph Upton, master of the American bark Emma F. Harriman, and G. W. Curtis, his first officer, respectively, for services performed by them in rescuing the passengers and crew of the British steamship American, which foundered at sea.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill; which was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

AMENDMENT OF REVISED STATUTES.

Mr. FRYE also, by unanimous consent, reported from the Committee on Ways and Means a bill (H. R. No. 7227) to amend section 2633 of the Revised Statutes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

EDWARD FITZPATRICK.

Mr. MORSE, from the Committee on Accounts, reported the following resolution; which was considered and adopted:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House of Representatives be authorized and directed to pay out of the contingent fund of the House to the brother and sister of Edward Fitzpatrick, late messenger of the House post-office, a sum equal to his salary for three months, and also the necessary funeral expenses of the deceased, not to exceed the sum of $250.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. COX. I call for the regular order. I desire the House to proceed with the unfinished business.

Mr. CONGER. What is the proposition?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] calls up the unfinished business.

Mr. COX. Which is what?

The SPEAKER. The bill known as the "apportionment bill."

Mr. CONGER. I raise the question of consideration in favor of the sundry civil appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan raises the question of consideration on the unfinished business, which is a bill the title of which will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House bill No. 7026 making an apportionment of Representatives in Congress among the several States under the tenth census.

The SPEAKER. The question is, will the House proceed to the consideration of this bill?

The question being put,

The SPEAKER said: In the opinion of the Chair the ayes have it. Is a further count asked?

Mr. CONGER. Of course. After we start in the Chair might assume that. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not know anything about "starting in."

The question being again taken, there were on a division—ayes 88, noes 63.

Mr. CONGER. I demand tellers.

Mr. COX. We might as well have the yeas and nays. No one will object to the yeas and nays.

Mr. CONGER. Yes; let us have tellers first.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. BURCH, its Secretary, announced the passage by that body of a bill (H. R. No. 7101) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, and for other purposes, with amendments in which concurrence was requested.

APPORTIONMENT BILL.

The SPEAKER. The question recurs on considering the apportionment bill, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 123, nays 5, not voting 162; as follows:

During the roll-call,

Mr. BLOUNT said: I ask unanimous consent to be allowed to vote.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is not able to ask that for the gentleman.

Mr. RICHMOND. I move to dispense with the reading of the names.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

The following pairs were announced from the Clerk's desk:

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee, with Mr. SHALLENBERGER, during Wednesday, on political questions, but not to break a quorum.

Mr. KITCHIN with Mr. RUSSELL of North Carolina, on the apportionment bill.

Mr. HUBBELL with Mr. MCLANE, for to-day, on all political questions.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Alabama, with Mr. WASHBURN, for this day.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I am paired with Mr. WASHBURN, of Minnesota, and, although the pair at the Clerk's desk does not so express it, the privilege was reserved to myself to vote when a quorum was in peril. That condition having arisen, I have exercised the liberty to discharge what I regard to be a duty in voting.

Mr. BLISS with Mr. HAMMOND of New York.

Mr. MILES, who is absent, with Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois, on all political questions, from and after this day until the 28th instant; the pair, however, under no circumstances to extend to breaking a quorum.

Mr. LE FEVRE with Mr. BELFORD.

Mr. CLAFLIN with Mr. EWING, indefinitely.

Mr. NICHOLLS with Mr. JOYCE, until further notice.

Mr. JAMES with Mr. O'BRIEN, until further notice.

Mr. ORTH with Mr. MYERS, on all questions except when necessary to make a quorum.

Mr. ROBESON, until further notice, with Mr. MCKENZIE—Mr. MCKENZIE reserving the right to vote to make a quorum.

Mr. KENNA. Mr. Speaker, my failure to vote on the last roll-call was occasioned by absence in the discharge of my duties in connection with the Committee on Enrolled Bills.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. I am paired with Mr. SHALLENBERGER, and withdraw my vote.

Mr. ATKINS. I hope not, as the gentleman reserved the right to vote in case a quorum was in peril.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. Certainly.

Mr. ATKINS. And that is the very question we have before us now.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. Very well; let the vote stand.

Mr. KITCHIN. I am paired with my colleague, Mr. RUSSELL, but reserved the right to vote when necessary to make a quorum. I have exercised that right to vote, as there is a question of a quorum.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. CONGER. Mr. Speaker, no quorum has voted.

LEGISLATIVE APPROPRIATION BILL.

On motion of Mr. ATKINS, by unanimous consent, the bill (H. R. No. 7101) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, and for other purposes, returned from the Senate with amendments, was taken from the Speaker's table, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and the Senate amendments ordered to be printed and numbered.

PENSION APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HUBBELL. I ask by unanimous consent to correct a clerical error in the conference report on the pension appropriation bill, in order to make that report conform to the report in the hands of the Senate conferees, as well as the statement which accompanied it.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the Senate amendment numbered 5, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: Insert before the words "and for other purposes" the words "for deficiencies;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Mr. HUBBELL. This is in accordance with the agreement of the conferees, and it is merely for the purpose of correcting a clerical error.

The SPEAKER. It is merely a clerical error which is sought to be corrected, as the Chair is advised by the gentleman from Michigan, and as he makes the statement to the House.

Mr. HUBBELL. That is all.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

APPORTIONMENT BILL.

Mr. COX. I ask the indulgence of the House for a single moment while I make a brief suggestion.

The SPEAKER. What motion does the gentleman from New York make?

Mr. COX. I wish to make a brief statement to the House to see if some arrangement cannot be arrived at in reference to the apportionment bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. COX. Before I move a call of the House I want to make a single statement if there be no objection.

Mr. CONGER. What is the proposition the gentleman from New York makes?

Mr. COX. If there be objection to the request then I shall move a call of the House.

The SPEAKER. What motion does the gentleman from New York make?

Mr. COX. I have asked consent of the House to make a brief statement.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks consent to make a brief statement in reference to the order of business. Is there objection?

Mr. CONGER. I have no objection to the gentleman from New York making a statement in reference to the order of business.

Mr. COX. Then I move a call of the House, if there be objection to my request.

A call of the House was ordered.

Mr. CONGER. I have stated that I had no objection to the gentleman making a statement in reference to the order of business.

Mr. FRYE. I want to make a suggestion to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. COX. I wanted to make a suggestion myself, but there was objection, I believe.

Mr. FRYE. If the gentleman from New York will hear me for a moment, it may save a great waste of time.

Mr. COX. That is exactly what I am after.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. The gentleman from New York ought to have an opportunity to make a statement first.

Mr. FRYE. I want him to have my suggestion first, and perhaps he will be willing then to waive his suggestion. I desire to state that the republicans were to have a conference last night, but it was necessarily postponed. They could not have it. Therefore, we are not in a condition to proceed with the apportionment bill now. If the gentleman from New York will allow other business to intervene, and at four and a half o'clock take a recess, as heretofore provided for, the republicans will, immediately after the recess is taken, meet here and have their conference, and it shall be determined then what will be their position in reference to the apportionment bill.

Mr. COX. Then I suppose there will be no more dilatory motions; no more filibustering.

Mr. FRYE. I do not say that. I am not prepared to answer for what gentlemen may think proper to do; but I do say that we will have a conference and determine our course.

Mr. COX. Then I will consent to the suggestion made by the gentleman from Maine, and I will trust to his honor to put the bill through without further delay.

Mr. CONGER. We did not hear the last remark made by the gentleman from New York.

Mr. FRYE. I have simply stated to the gentleman that we will have a conference. I do not desire to be understood as committing myself or any other gentleman to any special course.

Mr. CONGER. But there was a remark made by the gentleman from New York which might be misconstrued. We would like to have that repeated.

The SPEAKER. The Chair cannot undertake to repeat the argument of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. CONGER. If the gentleman from New York made a remark which requires the assent of this side of the House I should like to have it repeated.

Mr. COX. I now give notice that after the morning hour to-morrow I will endeavor to call up and proceed to the consideration with a view to disposing of the apportionment bill. And I desire to assure the gentleman from Michigan that there will be a quorum present. I will say further to him that when he asked a few days ago that this matter should be passed over and the agricultural appropriation bill taken up, his suggestion or request was readily complied with.

Mr. CONGER. And the gentleman acted wisely.

Mr. COX. Yes; and I am acting wisely now. When the gentleman proposed a caucus of his party the bill was postponed to meet his views, and was not called up in the House at the time that I had given notice I would call it up. Now I hope the gentleman will return the kindness, courtesy, and propriety which I have granted to him in this matter.

Mr. CONGER. That is our natural disposition. [Laughter.]

Mr. STEELE. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. STEELE. I understood that the House had ordered a call of the House. I would like to know if it is not in order to proceed with that call.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state, in response to the gentleman from North Carolina, that he yielded, as it is often necessary for him to yield, to the respective sides of the House in order to see if some arrangement could be arrived at whereby the call of the House might be obviated. It seems now that an arrangement has been made between the gentleman from New York and the gentleman from Maine in reference to this matter.

Mr. COX. I withdraw the demand for the call of the House if there be no objection.

There was no objection, and the order for a call of the House was withdrawn.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BLOUNT. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, to further proceed with the consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia, in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the pending amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out, in lines 473, 474, and 475, the following words: "And no more money shall be expended for the above purposes out of any appropriations heretofore made or by virtue of any previous law."

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I want to submit one thing to the gentleman in charge of this bill, and if he will listen to me for a moment, I think it possible that we can reconcile all differences. I propose that the whole of this paragraph go over until to-morrow, and in the mean time I can have a conference with him, and have no doubt that we can arrive at some satisfactory decision.

Mr. BLOUNT. I would like to accommodate myself to the wishes of my friend from Tennessee, but I think we had better proceed in the regular order with this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment proposed.

Mr. HAYES. I ask that the amendment be again read.

The Clerk read the proposed amendment.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 13, noes not counted.

Mr. KING. I demand tellers.

The committee refused to order tellers.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk read the following:

For aid to local quarantine stations and for aid to local and State boards of health, to be used in case of epidemic, $100,000: Provided, That $50,000 of the appropriation made by act of June 2, 1879, entitled "An act to prevent the introduction of contagious or infectious diseases into the United States," shall be applied to the same purposes, and no money shall be expended for the above service for the fiscal year 1881 other than that specifically appropriated by the act approved June 16, 1880, making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. I move to strike out the proviso in the paragraph just read. I discover that the House is very clearly with the Committee on Appropriations. I think they are mistaken; but I shall not press my opposition further. I desire, however, to say this while I am up: perhaps my remarks this morning may have been construed as containing some unkind expressions toward the gentlemen of the Committee on Appropriations. I beg to disclaim any such purpose. I believe they have discharged their duty faithfully and honestly. That they have made a mistake, however, is to me clearly apparent. If I had an opportunity, I think I could convince those gentlemen that it would be far better to direct how this money should be expended in detail than to make a wholesale, sweeping reduction in the appropriations asked for by the National Board of Health.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Tennessee withdraw his amendment?

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. I do not; but I see it is to be voted down, and I also desire to withdraw any and everything uttered by me in this debate that seemed in the slightest degree to reflect unkindly upon the action of the committee. I am quite sure that all of them are in full sympathy with the object sought to be attained by the appropriation; the difference between them and myself is only a question of method. In every effort I have made in behalf of the National Board of Health, I have always had the active co-operation of all these gentlemen, and especially of my colleague, [Mr. ATKINS,] the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations.

The question being taken on the amendment, it was not agreed to.

The Clerk read the following:

North American ethnology, Smithsonian Institution:

For the purpose of continuing ethnological researches among the North American Indians, under the direction of the Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution, $25,000.

Mr. KEIFER. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of line 493, add the following:

"Five thousand dollars of which shall be expended in continuing archæological investigations relating to mound-builders, and prehistoric mounds."

Mr. KEIFER. This amendment does not increase the appropriation.

Mr. BLOUNT. I submit it is new legislation.

Mr. KEIFER. It simply gives directions how a portion of the appropriation shall be spent.

Mr. BLOUNT. I raise the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like the gentleman from Georgia to show wherein the amendment changes existing law.

Mr. BLOUNT. It provides for a new line of inquiry not hitherto undertaken by the Government. This is a continuing investigation which has been going on for several years for the purpose stated in the paragraph. The proposition of the gentleman from Ohio is to divert part of this fund to other investigations not provided for and that have not been commenced.

Mr. KEIFER. The researches and investigations that the proposed amendment alludes to have been going on for a number of years in a feeble way under the appropriations made by Congress. A portion of the money that has been appropriated from time to time for ethnological researches has been devoted to investigations of the character indicated by the proposed amendment. Indeed, the amendment itself proposes only to dedicate a certain sum of money to that special investigation and to continue that investigation. Last year a portion, a very small portion, of the money thus appropriated was used in this way. In no sense does the amendment change existing law. It does not conflict with existing law in any sense. It is simply a dedication of a portion of this appropriation. I trust the gentleman from Georgia will not press his point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will again report the amendment.

The amendment was again read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not think this changes existing law, but is in the line of investigation authorized by law. The Chair therefore overrules the point of order.

Mr. KEIFER. The point of order having been overruled, let me say a word now on the amendment. It might well perhaps be left ordinarily to the discretion of the Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution to determine how this $25,000 of money should be expended. But that leaves him possibly exposed to trouble with various persons who are employed in making these very important investigations. Last year we gave him but $20,000 for these researches while this year it is proposed to give $25,000. The amount appropriated last year was not sufficient and therefore this particular matter of investigation was largely neglected.

I want to call the attention of the committee to the fact that these investigations have to be made in the settled portions of the country east mainly of the Mississippi River, largely in the Mississippi Valley, but not confined to that.

There are places where these investigations should go on in North Carolina especially, and in Georgia. In Tennessee there is a very interesting field for investigation. Arkansas and Texas are full of these mounds and they are found in the Ohio Valley. Being in the settled portion of the country they are disappearing.

Of such importance are they regarded in England and France that those countries are sending here scientific bodies of men to investigate our mounds, these evidences of prehistoric races. They are devoting hundreds of thousands of dollars to do the very thing that we ought to have done long ago. This small sum of money can be used very advantageously during the coming summer in making surveys and investigations and finally completing a work that has already been commenced that is of very great importance. I would like to have added a great many things that I think are of vast importance on this subject; but I have not time. I hope the committee will not object to giving a portion of the appropriation this special direction.

Mr. BLOUNT. I think we had better leave this fund where it has been all the while, under the direction of the Smithsonian Institution, leaving the special directions given to it discretionary. There may be investigations more important than the one my friend from Ohio sees fit to direct the attention of the committee to, and I think we had better leave this as it is. I care very little about it. But it does seem to me the diversion of the fund in this way tends to introduce new objects of inquiry very many of which may be useless.

Mr. ATKINS. I wish to make a single remark that in my judgment the application of this fund can be made already by the Smithsonian Institution in the way the gentleman from Ohio proposes, without the adoption of his amendment.

Mr. BLOUNT. So the gentleman from Ohio claimed himself, and I have said it would be better to leave it to the discretion of the institution.

Mr. KEIFER. I admit it can be done; but it may not be done. And the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ATKINS] will admit that in his own district there are some very interesting investigations that should be made or the time will soon come when they cannot be made.

Mr. ATKINS. I do not want to be understood as opposing it at all.

Mr. KEIFER. I hope the gentleman will vote for it.

Mr. PAGE. I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of saying that yesterday I made a point of order against a paragraph on page 14, which was ruled out of the bill by the Chair. I am informed that this morning an amendment similar in its provisions to the one which was ruled out of the bill yesterday was offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] and accepted by the gentleman from Georgia, [Mr. BLOUNT.]

I was unavoidably absent this morning, or I would again have made the point of order on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Illinois. But it has gone into the bill, and I suppose the money appropriated will be expended in the manner directed by the Committee on Appropriations. At some future time, on some proper occasion, I shall endeavor to present facts before this House or the next House in reference to this matter as now administered, that perhaps may put a different construction on some things that were discussed yesterday and on former occasions.

I withdraw my formal amendment.

The question was taken upon the amendment offered by Mr. KEIFER, and on a division there were—ayes 51, noes 29.

No further count being called for, the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WEAVER. I give notice that I shall ask for a separate vote on this amendment in the House.

The CHAIRMAN. That is the gentleman's right.

Mr. BRENTS. I move to insert after the amendment just adopted that which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

In order to facilitate the collection of customs duties and to prevent smuggling, the deputy collector of customs stationed at San Juan Island, in the Puget Sound district, in Washington Territory, is hereby empowered to enter and clear vessels and collect duties: Provided, That the Secretary of the Treasury, if he deem it necessary, may require said officer to give sufficient bond for the proper discharge of his duties.

Mr. BLOUNT. I make the point of order on that amendment that it is new legislation, does not retrench expenditures, and is not germane to this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. HOSTETLER. I move to amend by inserting after the amendment just adopted that which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to transport free of charge subsidiary silver coin when requested to do so, provided that an equal amount in coin or currency shall have been deposited in the Treasury by the applicant or applicants, and that there is hereby appropriated $20,000 for that purpose, and that the same shall be available from and after the passage of this act.

Mr. BLOUNT. I raise the point of order on that amendment that it is new legislation, and does not retrench expenditures.

Mr. HOSTETLER. I hope the gentleman will not raise a point of order against that amendment until I can make a statement.

Mr. BLOUNT. It is utterly impossible, as the committee will see, for us to have all sorts of propositions thrown in here and discussed, if we desire to make progress in our work. This is an appropriation bill, and the only way in which we can restrict it to its proper limits is by an enforcement of the rules.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Indiana upon the point of order.

Mr. HOSTETLER. The only matter to which I wish to call the attention of the committee is that, as the law now stands, there is no provision for the free transportation of subsidiary silver coin to the portions of the country where it is much needed. It now costs four or five dollars per thousand dollars to transport this subsidiary silver coin. The business men of the country and the bankers cannot afford to pay the cost of transportation simply for the accommodation of the people of the country. This is a question in which the entire country is interested, and I hope the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] will not press his point of order, but allow the amendment to be voted on.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment is objected to on two grounds; first, that it changes existing law, and, second, that it is not germane to the bill. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read the following:

Arrears of pay and bounty:

That with a view to the prompt payment of claims for arrears of pay and bounty due to officers and enlisted men of the regular and volunteer forces, and their heirs and legal representatives, there shall be, and hereby is, appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, so much as may be required to pay said claims under the following heads of appropriations: "Pay of two and three-year volunteers," "bounty to volunteers and their widows and legal heirs," and "pay, &c., of the Army:" Provided, however, That the Secretary of the Treasury shall report to Congress, at the commencement of each regular session, the amount that has been paid out under this provision during the preceding fiscal year.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I make a point of order against that paragraph that it changes existing law and is not in the line of retrenchment. My object in making the point is to obtain from some member of the Committee on Appropriations, if possible, the reasons for this legislation and why the purse strings of the Government should be loosened in this way.

Mr. BLOUNT. One statement will be sufficient to answer the inquiry of the gentleman. The House ordered this appropriation to be put into this bill, and it is here by virtue of the direction of the House. Unanimous consent was given for it, and that avoids all rules against it. There was no discretion left to the committee on the subject.

And further; it has been the practice for some years past to provide, sometimes in the deficiency appropriation bill and sometimes in the sundry civil bill, an appropriation to pay the accounts audited as shown by the report of the Secretary of the Treasury made on the assembling of Congress. All accounts audited from the time of that communication until the end of the fiscal year have been postponed until the following winter.

The House thought that where these amounts were due they ought to be paid at once on the auditing. There could be no specific sum designated for this purpose, and the provision was put in in this form in order that these accounts might be paid when audited. The accounts which are never disputed, which this House never undertakes to dispute, are the measures of this appropriation. That is the whole matter.

Mr. REAGAN. I desire to ask my friend from Georgia, [Mr. BLOUNT,] while he is up, how much it is supposed this item will cover?

Mr. WHITE. Not over three hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. REAGAN. I ask that question because we ought to know something about what we are doing.

Mr. BLOUNT. I cannot give the exact figures. My recollection is that according to the reports made to each session of Congress the sum required will amount to $200,000 or $300,000.

Mr. REAGAN. The footing of this bill states that it appropriates $20,004,205.42. Now, here is a provision making a permanent instead of an annual appropriation. It is put here, for aught we know, without any estimate, and certainly without advising the House how much is to be expended. It is said that probably the item covers an expenditure of $200,000 or $300,000. May it not cover $200,000,000 or $300,000,000?

Mr. BLOUNT. Oh, no; not at all.

Mr. REAGAN. Where can we find the estimates to tell us what it covers?

Mr. BLOUNT. I do not remember the number of the executive document, but there is one reported to this House showing what these expenditures have amounted to each year. The deficiency bill which became a law June 16, 1880, contained these items:

For payment of bounty to volunteers and their legal heirs, as certified by the Second Auditor and the Second Comptroller, under section 4, act of June 14, 1878, for the year 1871 and for prior years, $93,193.17.

For pay of two and three year volunteers, as certified by Second Auditor and Second Comptroller, under same section and act, for the year 1871 and for prior years, $48,563.51.

Those are the two items.

Mr. REAGAN. The Commissioner of Pensions, it is understood, estimates that the arrearages of pensions will amount to $500,000,000 or $600,000,000.

Mr. BLOUNT. This does not come from the Pension Bureau.

Mr. REAGAN. I understand that; but it covers arrears of pensions.

Mr. ATKINS. I think there is a letter on the subject; and I believe the committee has the letter.

Mr. BLOUNT. I think not. This provision was placed in the bill by order of the House, on a report, I believe, from the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. MCCOOK. No doubt this is a very interesting discussion, but not a man sitting near me can hear a word of it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hopes the Committee of the Whole will preserve order.

Mr. REAGAN. If this is a proper expenditure it is one for which the Department should be able to furnish an estimate. It has experience, it has knowledge of prior expenditures; why should not the Department in this, as in other matters, give us estimates for an annual appropriation? Why insert a permanent appropriation so obnoxious to just principles of legislation when it is convenient and easy upon proper estimates to make an annual appropriation so that the House may know what it is doing?

Mr. MCMAHON. If the committee will bear with me a few minutes, I think I can state the facts in reference to this question. At the opening of the present session there were reported to this Congress claims allowed for bounty to volunteers amounting to $164,000 in round numbers; for pay of two and three year volunteers $67,000, and for back pay of the Army $13,000; making a total of about two hundred and forty-five thousand dollars. This includes all claims of this character that had been audited by the proper Departments up to the date of the letter; and that letter is dated "Treasury Department, January 16, 1881."

Mr. REAGAN. That was for one year; but this is a permanent appropriation from year to year.

Mr. MCMAHON. Let me finish my statement. After the House had passed the resolution requesting the Committee on Appropriations to report an appropriation for all claims that might be allowed not only during this fiscal year but for the fiscal year which would terminate July 1, 1882, we received from the proper officer an estimate of what would be necessary to pay all claims during the balance of this fiscal year and for the whole of the next fiscal year. The total estimate was $300,000, of which——

Mr. REAGAN rose.

Mr. McMAHON. My friend must listen a moment. The total estimate was $300,000, of which less than $100,000 will be necessary to complete the service for the present fiscal year, and about two hundred thousand dollars for the next fiscal year.

Mr. REAGAN. Why not put the amount in the bill?

Mr. McMAHON. I will tell the gentleman why—because it is impossible to anticipate whether the claims will be $200,000 or $220,000 or $250,000; and the idea of the House and of the committee was that when these claims, the great bulk of them less than $200 each, had been audited—claims being due generally to poor men—the money should be paid just as soon as the claims were allowed in the proper office.

Mr. REAGAN. That is a very proper consideration; but why not insert in the bill an amendment which would cover the estimated expenditure, and make the appropriation an annual instead of a permanent one?

Mr. McMAHON. I will answer my friend in this way: suppose we should appropriate only $200,000 and the claims allowed should amount to $250,000; then people holding claims for $50,000 must necessarily wait twelve or eighteen months for their money.

Mr. REAGAN. If $250,000 is the estimated expenditure, let it be put in. Put in enough; but let there be a limit to the appropriation.

Mr. McMAHON. There is no danger of abuse about this matter. In my friend's imaginings about excessive claims for arrears of pensions and all that, he is entirely off the track.

Mr. SPARKS. Was there ever such a clause as this in any preceding appropriation bill?

Mr. McMAHON. We never provided for these claims till 1877 or 1878.

Mr. SPARKS. What objection would there be to inserting after the word "claims," in line 500, the words "not exceeding $250,000?"

The CHAIRMAN. This discussion on the merits of the proposition has proceeded by unanimous consent; the Chair does not feel it his duty to allow it to proceed further before deciding the point of order. As the Chair understands this clause was inserted in the bill by order of the House. This Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union is but a creature of the House, and therefore what the House has ordered to be put upon the bill the Chair has no right to rule out. By an order of the House, therefore, the Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. REAGAN. I ask the gentleman from Georgia to allow an amendment to be made saying the amount appropriated shall not exceed $250,000, and striking out that part which provides a permanent appropriation.

Mr. BLOUNT. I would be glad to do it except for the order of the House made by unanimous consent.

Mr. REAGAN. I never heard of any such order.

Mr. McMILLIN. Neither did I.

Mr. BLOUNT. I cannot help that; but the order was made nevertheless, and under that order the Committee on Appropriations have acted.

Mr. SPARKS. I move after the word "claims," in line 500, to insert the words "not exceeding $250,000."

Mr. BLOUNT. I wish to call the attention of the House to the fact that there can be no abuse. These accounts are audited by the Treasury. The Government is completely bound by it and there is a review of it in this House. This appropriation requires a report of the amount paid out under that order by the Treasury, so that the eye of every one is directed to it as distinctly as if the provision of my friend were incorporated into the bill.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. REAGAN. I move to strike out the following proviso:

Provided, however, That the Secretary of the Treasury shall report to Congress, at the commencement of each regular session, the amount that has been paid out under this provision during the preceding fiscal year.

Mr. Chairman, if that be stricken out, then I do not understand there will be any permanent appropriation made. The purpose I have in view is to try if possible to defeat anything like a permanent appropriation.

Mr. BLOUNT. I do not understand this is a permanent appropriation. It simply relates to this fiscal year and nothing more.

Mr. REAGAN. What is meant by the words "the Secretary of the Treasury shall report to Congress at the commencement of each regular session the amount that has been paid out under this appropriation during the preceeding fiscal year?" If that does not make a permanent appropriation, then I do not understand what language can.

Mr. BLOUNT. I have no objection to meeting the views of the gentleman from Texas by saying "at the commencement of the next regular session," leaving each year to be provided for by each succeeding Congress.

Mr. REAGAN. That does not change the fact that it is a permanent appropriation, and that the money is to be continually applied without appropriation by Congress.

The amendment was rejected, sixteen only voting in favor thereof.

The Clerk read as follows:

Rock Island arsenal, Rock Island, Illinois: For continuation of shop I, a wood-working and leather-working shop for the arsenal, $75,000.

For shop H, an iron-finishing shop for the armory, $75,000.

Mr. HENDERSON. I move to strike out "seventy" where it occurs in line 514 and insert "fifty," and add the following paragraph after line 514:

For shop K, the last of the armory shops, $20,000.

Mr. BLOUNT. I understand from the gentleman's amendment the proposition is not to increase the appropriation at Rock Island arsenal.

Mr. HENDERSON. It is not.

Mr. BLOUNT. It is only to reduce on one building with a view to commencing the construction of another. I have no objection to it in that shape.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For continuing boring the artesian well, or, if artesian water is procured, for putting down permanent iron pipe and turbine-wheel, to be run by flow of water, to pump up water to reservoir, $5,000.

Mr. BERRY. In line 539, after the word "reservoir," I move to insert the words "or for building or enlarging reservoir." I suppose there can be no objection to that.

Mr. BLOUNT. It is not estimated for and not asked for, and I hope it will not be adopted. These appropriations have been made largely after consultation with the officers in charge.

Mr. BERRY. Mr. Chairman, all I wish to say in reference to that is this: that for boring the artesian well there remains an unexpended balance. I notice here the committee provide for continuing boring the artesian wells, or, if artesian water is procured, for putting down permanent iron pipe and turbine wheel, to be run by flow of water, to pump up water to reservoir, $5,000. Water may be struck with the unexpended balance on hand, and that reservoir may need enlargement. This only provides with what may remain unexpended, after laying suitable pipes, this reservoir may be made of sufficient capacity to hold what water may be procured. It makes no additional appropriation but provides simply they shall not be bound down, but may use whatever unexpended balance may remain for the purpose of repairing, enlarging, or constructing a reservoir there, if that shall be found to be cheaper and more efficient. I see no objection to it and I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. BLOUNT. It creates additional expenditure. It reappropriates unexpended money. It has not been asked for so far as I know, and I trust it will not be adopted.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For abating nuisances, $500.

Mr. BLOUNT. I move after line 573 to insert the words "for improving various reservations, $10,000."

The amendment was adopted.

The Clerk read as follows.

Executive Mansion: For care of and repairs to the Executive Mansion, and for furniture, $30,000; fuel for the Executive Mansion and the greenhouses, $2,000; care and necessary repairs of the greenhouses, $5,500; in all, $37,500.

Mr. ATHERTON. I wish to offer an amendment to come in after the word "dollars," in line 581, and I desire to state to the House——

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "dollars," in line 581, insert "for constructing an elevator in the Executive Mansion, $500."

Mr. SAMFORD. Is that liable to the point of order?

Mr. BLOUNT. I make the point of order upon it.

Mr. ATHERTON. I wish to make a single remark in this connection.

Mr. SAMFORD. Then I withhold the point of order.

Mr. ATHERTON. The object is to construct an elevator in the White House, the machinery for which is already there. The object sought to be accomplished is to promote the convenience of the mother of the President-elect in ascending from the lower portion of the building to the apartments above. She is quite an invalid, and some such relief is necessary in this case.

I wish to say, Mr. Chairman, that I made a point of order on a previous occasion when this was proposed in another bill; but learning since then the beneficent object sought to be accomplished by the erection of this elevator, I desire, as I could not withdraw the point of order then, to offer this amendment here. I hope, this being so small a sum and being a question of considerable importance to this lady, that no objection will be made to it under the point of order.

Mr. SAMFORD. I make the point of order upon the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Ohio.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SAMFORD. Mr. Chairman, I made a point of order upon that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not understand the gentleman as insisting upon the point of order.

Mr. McMILLIN. I was sitting near the Chair and desire to say that I heard the gentleman from Alabama insisting upon his point of order. [Cries of "Too late!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to state that after the gentleman from Ohio had taken his seat the Chair waited some time to hear whether the point of order was insisted upon, but did not understand it so, and therefore put the question to the House.

Mr. SAMFORD. I was on my feet insisting at the time the question was put to the House.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman from Alabama insists that he was pressing the point of order at the time, the Chair will submit the question to the committee. [Cries of "Oh, no!"] The Chair must recognize the demand. Does the gentleman from Alabama insist upon it?

Mr. SAMFORD. I do.

Mr. ATHERTON. I think this is not subject to the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there a law authorizing the construction?

Mr. ATHERTON. There is no law that I am aware of; but the White House is there. It has been built and this improvement may be regarded as in the light of a continuance of works of improvement upon that building.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that under the circumstances it is in the line of necessary repairs to the White House and therefore in order. [Laughter.] The amendment is agreed to.

Mr. ATHERTON. I desire to offer a further amendment to correct this paragraph of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 584 strike out "$37,500" and insert "$38,000."

Mr. ATHERTON. This makes the paragraph conform to the amendment just adopted.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Lighting the Executive Mansion and public grounds: For gas, pay of lamplighters, gasfitters, plumbers, plumbing, lamp-posts, matches, and repairs of all kinds; fuel for office, for the watchmen's lodges, and for the greenhouses in the nursery, $15,000: Provided, That no more than $25 shall be paid per lamp for gas under any expenditure provided for in this act; and in case a contract cannot be made at that rate the engineer in charge is hereby authorized to substitute other illuminating material, and to use so much of the sum hereby appropriated as may be necessary for that purpose.

Mr. DE LA MATYR. I wish to offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "gas," in line 591, insert "including lighting, cleaning, and keeping in repair the lamps."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Telegraph to connect the Capitol and the Departments with the Government Printing-Office: For repair and care of the same, $500.

Mr. BLOUNT. I am directed by the Committee on Appropriations to offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 604 strike out "$500" and insert "$1,000."

Mr. HOSTETLER. I make the point of order against that amendment that it increases expenditures.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 52, noes not counted.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Continuation of the Washington Monument: Earth embankments, marble, granite, iron frame-work, machinery, tools, labor, and office expenses, $150,000.

Mr. BEALE. I offer an amendment to this paragraph.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert after word "dollars," line 614, "for completion of monument to Mary, the mother of George Washington, at Fredericksburgh, Virginia, according to plan recommended in report of select committee of the House of Representatives, to be expended under the supervision of the Secretary of War, $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary for such purposes: Provided, That no part thereof shall be expended until the site upon which said monument is placed shall have been ceded to the Government of the United States.

Mr. BLOUNT. I do not want to raise the question of order upon that amendment, but I would like to know if that is to be the last monument erected in Virginia.

Mr. BRAGG. I make the point of order upon it.

Mr. BEALE. I will say, Mr. Chairman, that it is probably the last monument to be erected in Virginia; and further that it is the first monument ever yet erected in Virginia to Mary, the mother of Washington.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Chairman, is not this the monument which is provided for by a separate bill appropriating $30,000?

Mr. BEALE. No sir; that is to mark the birthplace of Washington; this is to mark the burial-place of Mary, the mother of Washington.

Mr. BRAGG. I make the point of order upon it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BRAGG. I make the point of order that it is new legislation authorizing this appropriation not provided by law and does not retrench expenditures.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia will please state the facts.

Mr. BEALE. Mr. Chairman, in speaking to this question of order I might refer to the language of the amendment itself, that it provides for the completion of the monument, and to the last sentence of the third clause of Rule XXI. But, sir, I know that an exposé of the facts connected with this monument would not except it from the provision of that clause.

I hold in my hand a very interesting account of the history of that monument——

Mr. BRAGG. I raise the question of order that the gentleman is not discussing the point of order made.

The CHAIRMAN. Upon the statement made by the gentleman from Virginia that work is already begun——

Mr. BLOUNT. Has the work been commenced by authority of Congress and an appropriation made?

Mr. BEALE. It has not. Permit me to say in conclusion of the words I have uttered that I submit to the question of order which has been raised. Sir, the grace of the fashion of this flower would indeed be marred was there one single voice on this floor against the proposition. I simply asked this as a tribute from the great American people and trusted that every district represented in every State of this grand Union would have been proud of the opportunity to have offered this tribute to this Mary, the mother in our Israel, whose name will be held in highest reverence by every people wherever the free winds of heaven shall waft the fame of her son.

Mr. BRAGG. Although the amendment says this is for a continuance or completion of the work, it is conceded the work has not been begun nor yet authorized.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair, considering that the work has already been begun——

Mr. BRAGG. It has not been begun.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment implies that, and the Chair understood the gentleman from Virginia to say it had begun.

Mr. BEALE. The monument is not completed. It is erected on the spot where Mary, the mother of Washington, lies buried. It was commenced by a private individual, half completed, and left in that condition. The only action Congress or the Government of the United States has taken in reference to the matter was to raise a special committee under a resolution offered in the Forty-third Congress, which committee was furnished with an engineer by the War Department, who examined the monument and submitted an estimate of the cost of its completion. But no law has been passed by Congress with reference to the matter.

The CHAIRMAN. If no law has been passed by Congress authorizing the building of the monument the Chair is reluctantly constrained to rule the point of order is well taken, however much he may regret it has been made.

The Clerk commenced to read the next paragraph.

Mr. BEALE. Am I too late to take an appeal from the decision of the Chair? If not, I desire to take an appeal.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman says he intended to take an appeal from the decision of the Chair, the Chair would entertain it, notwithstanding that the reading of the next paragraph had been entered upon.

Mr. BRAGG. I submit that the gentleman's intent can only be shown by his action, and he did not take the appeal in sufficient time.

The Clerk resumed and completed the reading of the following paragraph:

SIGNAL SERVICE.

Observation and report of storms: For the expenses of the observation and report of storms by telegraph and signal for the benefit of commerce and agriculture throughout the United States; for manufacture, purchase, and repair of meteorological and other necessary instruments; for telegraphing reports; for expenses of storm-signals announcing the probable approach and force of storms; for continuing the establishment and connection of stations at life-saving stations and light-houses; for instrument-shelters; for hire, furniture, and expenses of offices maintained for public use in cities and ports receiving reports; for river reports; for maps and bulletins to be displayed in chambers of commerce and boards of trade rooms, and for distribution; for books, periodicals, newspapers and stationery; and for incidental expenses not otherwise provided for, $375,000.

Mr. BRENTS. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert after the word "light-houses," in line 626, the following: "Including the construction of a military telegraph line from Port Townsend to Cape Flattery, in Washington Territory, and the establishment of stations thereon for the benefit of commerce and agriculture, under the provisions of the acts approved March 3, 1875."

Mr. BLOUNT. I make the point of order there is no law for that amendment. It is a distinct proposition to erect a given telegraph line at a given point in the country for military and commercial purposes. It stands by itself, and of itself, and there is no law upon which it can be based.

Mr. BRENTS. The appropriations which have been made from year to year for this purpose are a commencement of this as well as every other such work. My amendment simply makes it specific at one point. The appropriation already made would perhaps include it; but the Secretary of War and the chief signal officer desired that the appropriation be made specific in these words. I would like to have read the correspondence from the Department in regard to that matter.

The Clerk proceeded to read the following:

WAR DEPARTMENT.
Washington City, January 26, 1881.

SIR: I have the honor to inclose herewith the reply of the Chief Signal Officer of the Army to your letter of the 11th instant, recommending the immediate construction of a military telegraph line from Port Townsend to Cape Flattery, Washington Territory, and the establishment of a signal station at the latter point.

The Department fully concurs with the Chief Signal Officer that the line proposed will be of eminent advantage to the United States, and I beg to request that steps be taken to obtain an appropriation from Congress of $20,000 for the purpose, in accordance with the recommendation of that officer, as follows:

"For the construction of a military telegraph line from Port Townsend to Cape Flattery, Washington Territory, and the establishment of stations thereon, for the benefit of commerce and agriculture, 'under the provisions of the acts approved March 3, 1875,' $20,000."

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

H. T. CROSBY,
Chief Clerk, for the Secretary of War, in his absence.

Hon. THOMAS H. BRENTS, House of Representatives.

[The words underscored should be embraced in the appropriation bill.]

MEMORANDUM.

For the construction of a military telegraph line from Port Townsend to Cape Flattery, Washington Territory, and the establishment of stations thereon, for the benefit of commerce and agriculture, "under the provisions of the acts approved March 3, 1875," $20,000.

MEMORANDUM.

The appropriation of this amount for the purposes stated is urgently recommended, as it is the wish of this office to establish stations of observation on the immediate coasts of California, Oregon, and Washington Territory at an early date, in order that the great commercial, agricultural, and other interests of the Pacific coast may derive advantages from the warnings of approach of wind and rain storms, &c., the same as the States east of the Rocky Mountains. Without these telegraphic facilities it will be utterly impossible to give that coast the necessary warnings.

WAR DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE CHIEF SIGNAL OFFICER,
Washington, D. C., January 21, 1881.

SIR: Referring to communication, received at this office, (dated House of Representatives, Washington, January 11, 1881,) of Hon. THOMAS H. BRENTS, recommending the immediate construction of a military telegraph line from Port Townsend to Cape Flattery, in Washington Territory, and the establishment of a signal station at the latter point, I have the honor to say that this office concurs in this recommendation, believing that the line proposed will be of eminent advantage to the public service.

I also submit, herewith, an estimate of the amount which will be required to be appropriated for the construction and establishment of the same:

For poles, insulators, and brackets, No. 9 galvanized iron wire, stringing of wire and construction of line	$17,800 00
For building at Cape Flattery	1,200 00
Tools and implements, battery material and implements, &c	1,000 00
Total	20,000 00

I respectfully request that immediate steps be taken to secure the proper legislative action for an appropriation for this purpose, and that for the sake of economy, (in purchase and transportation of material, &c.,) the same be made available immediately after the passage of the act.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

W. B. HAZEN,
Chief Signal Officer.

The honorable the SECRETARY OF WAR.
(Through the Adjutant-General of the Army.)

Before the Clerk had completed the reading of the above,

Mr. BLOUNT said: I submit this is a useless consumption of time. These papers do not relate to the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair asks the committee to come to order.

Mr. HAWLEY. Is the Chair deciding the point of order? I could not hear what the Chair said.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair was asking the committee to come to order, so that all gentlemen might hear. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] has made a point of order on the amendment. The Clerk will again report it.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. BRENTS. Now, Mr. Chairman, this, as will be observed, is simply the continuation of an appropriation that has been made from year to year for the extension of this system of telegraphic lines over this country. If the point of order is good against this amendment, then it is good against the appropriation in this bill, because an appropriation for the establishment of the extension of every line is an appropriation for an original work, if you take it by piece as is here proposed. In this case I have simply named the particular work and portion of this improvement proceeding under the direction of the War Department. It is a continuation of this same system to one certain point as has been requested by the Signal Officer himself. The law is named in the amendment under which this appropriation is to be made. It is to be made under the law approved on the 3d of March, 1875. I think it would be straining the rule to include this amendment within the point of order and make it obnoxious to it.

Mr. BLOUNT. The House has several times provided specifically for military telegraph lines; but it has been done by separate bills. Gentlemen who represent the State of Texas will remember when a proposition was brought forward by the Military Committee and passed, and there have been several lines created in the same way. I concede that appropriations have been made without question for the construction of lines for a particular year, but such an appropriation exhausted itself within the year. There was no great work in progress, but on two or three occasions, perhaps three or four, it was agreed in an appropriation bill to give a certain sum of money for this purpose, but beyond that there was no law on the subject.

Mr. BRENTS. I would like to ask the gentleman if half the items in this appropriation bill are not obnoxious to the same point of order.

Mr. BLOUNT. I will, if necessary, discuss the various items as they are reached. I do not desire to confound this simple question with all the items in a bill of fifty-odd pages.

I trust that after what the gentleman has said in regard to the communications from the Department, which he has read, I may be permitted to say that it is to be regretted that these communications are allowed to come into this House in this way. Congress has seen fit to attempt to prevent this very thing. We have directed by special statute that all estimates for the public service shall be submitted to Congress through the Secretary of the Treasury, and shall be included in the annual Book of Estimates prepared under his direction.

Mr. BRENTS. Allow me to ask the gentleman if he is discussing the point of order or is going into the merits of the pending proposition?

Mr. BLOUNT. It is hardly liberal in the gentleman to raise that point on me after he has had an opportunity to make such remarks as he desired to make. The gentleman has had some communications read. The law of Congress in regard to estimates for the public service is in this way almost entirely ignored. Any gentleman on this floor can write a letter to the Departments, obtain an answer to it, and have it read at the Clerk's desk for almost any purpose. During the very same session a Cabinet officer has made three distinct and contrary recommendations to this House on the subject of appropriations. I think it is high time that attention was called to it.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. This amendment is unlike the clause to which it is offered. The clause leaves it discretionary with the Secretary of War how and when the sum of money thereby appropriated shall be expended in the line of the directions here given. This amendment proposes to make it obligatory on the Secretary of War to establish a line of telegraph whether needed or not. It is the creation of a new line, and should the telegraph be established on that line it may require an amount to complete it greater than is appropriated for the purpose in this bill. Therefore it is a new law, increasing appropriations, and the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. BRENTS. I must appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman desire to be heard on the appeal?

Mr. BRENTS. I wish to say, most respectfully, Mr. Chairman, that the amendment I have offered proposes to leave the matter optional with the Secretary of War. The whole thing is left to his discretion; it simply gives him the power to apply the amount named for this purpose. It does not increase the appropriation, and in that form is certainly not objectionable.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would ask the gentleman whether his proposed amendment will reduce expenditures? It makes new law, or changes existing law. Does it reduce expenditures?

Mr. BRENTS. If all the communications which I have sent to the Clerk's desk had been read it would have appeared that this amendment is in the line of economy. I believe it is so expressly stated in the communications.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair must be governed by the language of the amendment; not by any communications from the Department to third persons.

Mr. BRENTS. In this connection I desire to say that a great amount of revenue is collected at this point. The amount of customs revenue collected there is very large. The shipping interest there is very great, and it is absolutely necessary for the protection of that commerce that this should be done.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would suggest to the gentleman to confine his remarks to the point of order.

Mr. BRENTS. The War Department is anxious to have it done, and wishes to have the authority made specific.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the appeal from the decision of the Chair. Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?

The question was taken; and upon a division there were—ayes 58, noes 28.

No other count being called for, the decision of the Chair was sustained.

Mr. WHITEAKER. I move to add to the paragraph now pending that which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That $15,000 of this sum may be used in constructing telegraph communication between Astoria, Oregon, and Tillemook Rock light-house, and establishing signal stations thereon.

Mr. BLOUNT. I raise the same point of order on that amendment.

Mr. WHITEAKER. Will the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] be kind enough to state very briefly, for my satisfaction and that of other members of this committee, wherein a point of order will lie against my amendment.

Mr. BLOUNT. Does not the proposition of the gentleman direct this money to be appropriated to a given line?

Mr. WHITEAKER. It does not do that thing, if the gentleman will allow me. It simply says it "may be used in constructing," &c. It is left in the discretion of the Department whether it shall be so used or not. These lines of telegraph are to be for the benefit of commerce and agriculture. The great West is almost entirely without them. As a matter of justice I ask that the Department may be permitted to use $15,000 for this object, if it shall see proper to do so. That is all I ask.

Mr. BLOUNT. The proposition as stated by the gentleman himself is that this line shall be for commercial purposes. It could not be constructed without the amendment he has offered. I cannot see why, if a telegraph line in the interest of commerce is built where my friend wants it, similar lines should not also be built in other portions of the country where they could not be constructed as the law now stands.

Mr. WHITEAKER. This line is not exclusively in the interest of commerce; it is more or less in the interest of commerce, and also in the interest of agriculture.

The CHAIRMAN. In the opinion of the Chair this proposition comes within the ruling on the case preceding. The amendment proposes to authorize the construction of a telegraph line; there is no law of that purport in effect now. To this extent the amendment is a change of existing law; and it does not retrench expenditures. Therefore the point of order must be sustained.

Mr. VALENTINE. I move to amend by inserting after line 633 the following:

Observation and report upon the habits of the Rocky Mountain locust, $5,000.

Mr. BLOUNT. I raise a question of order on that amendment. There is no authority of law for it; and it is not germane to this bill.

Mr. VALENTINE. I hope the gentleman from Georgia will reserve his point of order until I can make a short statement.

Mr. BLOUNT. Very well, I will hear the gentleman.

Mr. VALENTINE. Mr. Chairman, a few years ago Congress made an appropriation for the establishment of what is known as the United States Entomological Commission for the purpose of examining and reporting upon the habits of the Rocky Mountain locusts. The work of that commission has been of great value to the section of country liable to the incursions of those locusts. Under the present law the appropriations for carrying on the work of that commission will expire on the 30th of June next. The commission in their report, which is now in the hands of the Printer, recommend that this matter be transferred to the Signal Service Bureau, which shall be authorized to send an officer into the country where these locusts breed and make observations each year touching their habits and the probability of their flight across the country. The report containing this recommendation came in after the Secretary of the Treasury had sent his estimates to Congress. General Hazen has requested that this small appropriation be inserted. The object is that agriculturists in the section of country liable to the incursions of these locusts may be notified by the Signal Service Bureau when the locusts are about to fly, and may thus be enabled to protect their crops.

I am satisfied that if this small sum be now placed at the disposal of the Signal Service Bureau it will be of great value to the people of that region; and I hope my friend from Georgia will not press his point of order against the amendment. If the farmers of that region are enabled to know (as they will be if they obtain this information that the Signal Service Bureau can give them) about what time the locusts will fly across that region they can regulate their crops in accordance with that fact, and thus a large amount of agricultural products may be saved from destruction.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Georgia withdraw his point of order?

Mr. BLOUNT. No, sir. I find in the agricultural appropriation bill——

Mr. VALENTINE. I know all about that, because I am a member of the Committee on Agriculture. The provision to which the gentleman refers is simply to enable the commission to publish their report of the data already collected. By the existing law the commission will expire on the 30th of June next.

Mr. BLOUNT. I was about to say that I find a provision with reference to publishing the report of this commission in the agricultural appropriation bill, which is the proper place for it. The investigations provided for by law have already been accomplished. It was expressly provided that the expenditure should not extend beyond the current year; and no estimates have been made for the continuance of those investigations.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman insist on his point of order?

Mr. BLOUNT. Yes, sir.

Mr. VALENTINE. I am fully aware that no estimate has been made; and I stated the reason why it has not. I have a letter here from General Hazen, asking Congress to give this amount. I appeal to the gentleman from Georgia not to press his point of order, but let us have a vote on the amendment. The amount is very small, and will be of vast benefit to a great agricultural region.

Mr. BLOUNT. I cannot withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is prepared to decide the question of order. He sustains the point made by the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. VALENTINE. With all deference to the Chair, I must take an appeal from his decision.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska takes an appeal from the decision of the Chair, and the question therefore is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 52, noes 20.

So the decision of the Chair was sustained.

Mr. MONEY. I desire to ask the gentleman in charge of this bill whether the general public is admitted to the use of telegraph lines constructed for military purposes, or whether it is contemplated they shall be admitted to any such use hereafter?

Mr. BLOUNT. As to some of these lines the statement is true, because the law authorizing their construction provided civil messages might be sent over the lines and charges made, the fund arising therefrom to go to the preservation of the line. On some of them civil messages are not allowed. As a general proposition, therefore, I may say it is not true that these lines are allowed for any such purpose, although there are specific instances where it is done.

The Clerk read as follows:

Construction, maintenance, and repair of military telegraph lines: For the construction and continuing the construction, maintenance, and use of military telegraph lines on the Indian and Mexican frontiers and in the Northwest, and for the connection of military posts and stations, and for the better protection of immigration and the frontier settlements from depredations, especially in the States of Texas and Nevada and the Territories of New Mexico, Arizona, Dakota, Washington, Montana, Idaho, Wyoming, and Indian Territory, $75,000.

Mr. BRENTS. I move, in line 643, to strike out "seventy-five thousand dollars" and insert:

Seventy-four thousand nine hundred dollars, $15,000 of which may, in the discretion of the Secretary of War, be used and expended in the construction of a military telegraph line from Port Townsend to Cape Flattery, in Washington Territory, and the establishment of stations thereon for the benefit of commerce and agriculture, under the provisions of the act approved March 3, 1871.

Mr. BLOUNT. I raise the question of order on that amendment that it changes the law and does not reduce expenditures.

Mr. HAWLEY. What is the point of order?

Mr. BLOUNT. That it is not a reduction of expenditure.

Mr. BRENTS. Yes; it does reduce the appropriation in this bill.

Mr. HAWLEY. This paragraph, as the Chair will see, begins by providing for the construction of military telegraph lines. Now, the gentleman from Georgia raises the point of order it is unlawful to provide in the same paragraph for the construction of another military telegraph line. The paragraph itself is a provision for the construction of military telegraph lines, and the whole thing is as liable to the point of order as is the amendment. The gentleman from Washington merely moves to add, after the paragraph providing for the construction of military telegraph lines, an amendment that a portion of the money shall go toward the construction of another military line of telegraph from one point to another on the Pacific coast. It is impossible to conceive anything more in order. The question then comes up as to the wisdom of the appropriation, and of that neither the Signal Service nor the War Department has any doubt. It is as much in order as the bill or the paragraph itself. In the paragraph we begin by authorizing the construction, maintenance, and repair of the military telegraph lines. Where is the law for that if there be no law for the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Washington Territory?

Mr. BLOUNT. So far as the gentleman's proposition is concerned, it does not answer the point of order I have made. If the point of order I have made as to this amendment be correct, it does not make it any less so from the fact a point of order would lie to striking out the whole paragraph proposed by the committee. This is the effect of the argument of the gentleman from Connecticut. The Chair has already ruled, however, on this question.

Mr. HAWLEY. No; not on this point.

Mr. BLOUNT. Not on this direct question, but on the proposition involved.

Mr. KEIFER. This retrenches expenditures.

Mr. BLOUNT. I suppose the gentleman hopes to avoid the point by making the sum $74,900 instead of $75,000. That is his amendment. Now let us see what the rule is on that subject.

Mr. BRENTS. The purpose is to reduce expenditures.

Mr. BLOUNT. I have the floor, and I trust the gentleman will allow me to proceed. The rule on which I rely is Rule XXI, third clause, which I ask to read:

No appropriation shall be reported in any general appropriation bill, or be in order as an amendment thereto, for any expenditure not previously authorized by law, unless in continuation of appropriations for such public works and objects as are already in progress. Nor shall any provision in any such bill or amendment thereto changing existing law be in order, except such as, being germane to the subject-matter of the bill, shall retrench expenditures by the reduction of the number and salary of the officers of the United States, by the reduction of the compensation of any person paid out of the Treasury of the United States, or by the reduction of amounts of money covered by the bill.

Now, Mr. Chairman, this rule does not say that the amendment offered shall reduce the amount in the bill, but that the legislative appropriation by its own force shall operate to reduce the amount of the bill. It is the legislation, not the particular form of words that the gentleman offers as an amendment, but the legislative provision itself shall accomplish that. It would be trifling on the part of this House to adopt a rule on any such construction as that. The real purpose was to prevent legislation on an appropriation bill unless that appropriation does retrench expenditures.

Mr. PAGE. I would like to be heard for a moment on the point of order. It is to me a new idea that an amendment proposing to reduce the aggregate amount appropriated in a paragraph does not reduce expenditures in accordance with the rule which the gentleman from Georgia has just read. A few days ago the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CARLISLE] while occupying the chair ruled upon this very question upon an amendment submitted by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. DWIGHT,] and admitted the amendment because it reduced expenditures to the amount of $1 only in the paragraph. The rule provides that an amendment may be in order if germane to the bill and if it reduces expenditures.

Now, there is no salary in this paragraph. It is appropriated for a general purpose, and the gentleman from Washington Territory moves to strike out the total, $75,000, and insert seventy-four thousand and some hundred dollars, reducing thereby the total amount of the appropriation. Evidently his amendment is germane; and it reduces the expenditure to the amount of $1,000 or less if carried. Now, the gentleman from Georgia makes his point of order that it is not germane to the bill notwithstanding the fact that it is directly in accordance with the terms of the paragraph itself, and that according to the rule it does reduce expenditures. It seems to me that the point of order cannot be sustained on such grounds.

Mr. BRAGG. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that the construction of the rule as given by the gentleman from Georgia must be accepted as correct, otherwise the rule would be extremely ridiculous. Suppose for instance, as in this identical case, the sum there appropriated is reduced from $75,000 to $74,900. Now, in order to determine whether that is to reduce expenditures you must look at the whole scope and bearing of the amendment; and what is it? It provides for the establishment of new stations which, of necessity, to render them useful, require the employment of additional employés and additional expense to run them. It will require additional money to use to occupy and take charge of the line which this amendment proposes to create. Thereby, though nominally saying it does reduce expenditures in this particular amendment, it does in point of fact create by law other stations, which of necessity must entail additional expense upon the Government to render them available.

Mr. HAWLEY. I would like to ask the gentleman a single question. I would like to ask him how he gets along with the first line of this paragraph, which provides for the construction, maintenance, and repair of these telegraph lines; whether the very language of the paragraph itself does not authorize the construction of new lines?

Mr. BRAGG. Exactly. I will answer the gentleman in the same way that the gentleman from California was got along with on yesterday, in reference to a similar subject, where the gentleman from Georgia said that the paragraph was subject to the point of order and the gentleman from California on yesterday by the objection to allowing the Director of the Mint to spend certain money succeeded in getting the whole paragraph stricken out on the point of order. And so I say to the gentleman from Connecticut, if it is insisted upon, this whole paragraph is subject to the point of order in the same way that this amendment is.

Mr. HAWLEY. I would lik to know if that is acceptable to the gentleman from Georgia or if he is willing on the point of order that he raises himself to have this whole paragraph stricken out?

Mr. HASKELL. Mr. Chairman, the paragraph under consideration and the preceding paragraph cannot be excepted to or stricken out of this bill on the point of order. Neither can the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Washington Territory be excluded on the same ground; and why? Because this twenty-first rule which has been so much referred to during discussions upon these points of order will protect both the clause and the amendment under the very language of the Revised Statutes, and I ask the attention of the Chair for a moment. I say the clause under consideration and the preceding clause, as well as the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Washington Territory, are not subject to the point of order, for the reason that the general statutes of the United States have provided by law—by a general law—for the construction of telegraph lines, for the construction of signal stations, and I have the statutes here before me to which I wish to call the attention of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman be kind enough to refer the Chair to the statutes to which he refers?

Mr. HASKELL. I will read:

SEC. 221. The Secretary of War shall provide for taking meteorological observations at the military stations in the interior of the continent, and at other points in the States and Territories, and for giving notice on the northern lakes and sea-coast, by magnetic telegraph and marine signals, of the approach and force of storms.

Another provision which I have not had time to find in the brief time since this point of order was raised, provides that the Secretary of War may be authorized to establish signal stations and military telegraph lines, &c. Now, it is under that construction of the law, under a positive provision of a general statute, that the Committee on Appropriations report this particular appropriation. It is under this construction of law that makes the committee absolutely impregnable to the point of order on this subject. It is this authority of law which authorizes the incorporation and adoption of the amendment which the gentleman from Washington Territory has presented, if it shall be deemed advisable to do so. I hold that the point of order cannot prevail against it.

Now, all that is required to be done on this appropriation bill providing for the construction of these lines is that Congress shall give the money. Authority, as I have already shown, is given under the law for their construction. Therefore, no legislation is necessary for that purpose. The Secretary of War does not ask legislation. He simply asks for an expenditure of money, and when the Secretary is given a specific sum of money for this specific purpose, warranted and authorized by law, he can go ahead and construct the lines where they may be necessary.

More than this, Mr. Chairman; the amendment can be incorporated as a condition to the original paragraph, and it is not subject to the point of order made by the gentleman from Georgia for the reason that this discretion which is given to the Secretary of War can be used in pursuance of the authority of the statutes, and also by the original clause of this bill, and build these lines where and how he shall deem advisable. That matter is left to his discretion. I am willing for the argument to admit that. Say it is in the discretion of the Secretary of War. The amendment of the Delegate from Washington Territory also provides that it shall be left to the discretion of the Secretary of War. He changes no law at all; not a line of law. He provides for a sum of money for a certain purpose specified in the law as being lawful to be done.

Again, so closely has this amendment been made to conform even to the technical construction of Rule XXI that it is impregnable to the point of order. Why? The rule says:

Nor shall any provision in any such bill or amendment thereto changing existing law—

And I am admitting for the present, at least for argument's sake, that it does, that it changes existing law—be in order except such as, being germane to the subject-matter of the bill, shall retrench expenditures by the reduction of the number and salary of the officers of the United States, by the reduction of the compensation of any person paid out of the Treasury of the United States, or by the reduction of amounts of money covered by the bill.

But it is not a change of law. This object is provided for by law. In the general statutes for this object the gentleman has his authority, and indeed the Committee on Appropriations in the same statutes had it, for the clause; and in the same way he has it for the amendment. And even if the Chair should rule that it was a change of law, the gentleman has guarded himself on that point by reducing the amount named in the bill, making a difference over all. And in order that the amendment may not be interfered with by any technical construction of the original law he has left the whole matter to the discretion of the Secretary of War. It seems to me the Chair cannot rule that amendment out of order.

Mr. HAWLEY. I desire to have a single section of the law read—the general law authorizing this work precisely. I ask the Clerk to read section 223 of the Revised Statutes.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Secretary of War is authorized to establish signal stations at light-houses and at such of the life-saving stations on the lake or sea-coast as may be suitably located for that purpose, and to connect the same with such points as may be necessary for the proper discharge of the signal service by means of a suitable telegraph line in cases where no lines are in operation, to be constructed, maintained, and worked under the direction of the Chief Signal Officer of the Army, or the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Treasury; and the use of the life-saving stations as signal stations shall be subject to such regulations as may be agreed upon by said officials.

Mr. BRAGG. I desire to call the attention of the chairman and of the gentleman from Connecticut to the fact that this amendment proposes to build this telegraph in the interest of commerce and agriculture, and not for the purpose of carrying out the interest of the Signal Service.

Mr. BRENTS. Then all these are obnoxious to the same point if it should be held good.

Mr. BLOUNT. I desire to say a word in response to the point made by the gentleman from Connecticut, [Mr. HAWLEY.] I want to call the attention of the Chair to the language of section 223 of the Revised Statutes, which was read, and then to the proposition of this amendment. The language is:

The Secretary of War is authorized to establish signal stations at light-houses and at such of the life-saving stations on the lake or sea-coast as may be suitably located for that purpose, and to connect the same with such points as may be necessary for the proper discharge of the signal service by means of a suitable telegraph line in cases where no lines are in operation, to be constructed, maintained, and worked under the direction of the Chief Signal Officer, &c.

Now that is one thing, to connect signal stations by telegraph lines. That is what is authorized by the section upon which this amendment is to rest. The amendment provides this sum may be used and expended in the construction of a military telegraph line from Port Townsend to Cape Flattery, in Washington Territory, and the establishment of stations thereon for the benefit of commerce and agriculture under the provisions of the act approved March 2, 1875.

The Chair will see that the law cited is altogether in a different direction from the proposition of this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. If the Chair understands the object of the Signal Service it is for the benefit of commerce and agriculture. That is the object of its institution by law, to sound the alarm of approaching storms, that the husbandman may gather in his wheat and the ship may go into harbor when it is learned that a storm is coming in the distance. It is therefore in the interest both of commerce and agriculture.

The Chair ruled the point of order was well taken in the case of the other amendment submitted by the Delegate from Washington Territory because it was made obligatory, as the Chair understood, on the Secretary of War to construct telegraph lines, which might cost much more than the sum provided for in the bill. But this amendment is not liable to that objection. It is strictly, in the opinion of the Chair, in accord with the clause under consideration. And without regard to the reduction from $75,000 to $74,000, which perhaps the Chair would regard as a catch amendment—without that the Chair considers the point of order is not well taken, because the House has the power to give directions as to the minutiæ and detail how the money shall be spent. The Chair overrules the point of order, and would suggest that the gentleman withdraw his amendment changing the sum of $75,000.

Mr. PAGE. I move to amend the amendment by striking out "$74,000" and inserting under the ruling of the Chair "$75,000."

Mr. BRENTS. I accept that and modify my amendment accordingly.

Mr. BLOUNT addressed the Chair.

Mr. BRENTS. I thought I was recognized.

Mr. BLOUNT. I do not claim the floor at present if the gentleman wants to speak.

Mr. BRENTS. I desire to say a word or two in addition to what I have said heretofore. I have already stated somewhat indefinitely the extent of the commerce of Puget Sound and that the revenues derived from that commerce are very large. I will now state that during the year 1878 over fifteen hundred vessels passed Cape Flattery, entering into Puget Sound. Within the last three or four years there have been a number of shipwrecks there, two of important steamers, one the George S. Wright and the other the Pacific. The crews and passengers of those steamers were nearly all lost. They could have been saved had this telegraph line been in existence so that communication could be had with the interior ports of the sound. Because there was no such telegraph these passengers and crews, after floating on portions of the wrecks for two or three days, perished before relief could be afforded them. With this telegraph line such relief could have been afforded. I think the importance of this amendment is sufficient to warrant its adoption by the committee.

Mr. BLOUNT rose.

Mr. McCOOK. I wish to oppose the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has recognized the gentleman from Georgia, [Mr. BLOUNT.]

Mr. BLOUNT. I have no objection to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. McCOOK] going on.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. McCOOK] will proceed.

Mr. McCOOK. If I understand the purpose of this amendment, it is to take one-fifth of $75,000 appropriated by this paragraph and apply it to a specific purpose in Washington Territory. If I read this paragraph correctly, it provides that for certain specific purposes this comparatively small amount of $75,000 shall be appropriated; that is for the construction, continuance, and maintenance of telegraph lines throughout the States of Texas and Nevada and the various Territories of the United States. Now, if we take $15,000 of that amount and apply it to Washington Territory alone, then these other very important posts, it seems to me, must necessarily be neglected.

While personally I am willing to vote the largest amount and for the longest time on almost every appropriation, it appears to me that when it comes to depriving our military telegraphs of their proper support in important portions of the country—and when I say "important" I mean those portions that are exposed to Indian incursions—when it comes to taking one-fifth of this small appropriation for the purpose of constructing a totally new line in one single Territory, it seems to me that we should hesitate a moment, at all events, before we do it, until we can receive full, accurate, and satisfactory information in regard to it.

Mr. BLOUNT. The Signal Officer estimated for a larger sum for this service, and his estimate was distinctly cut down by the Secretary of War. The estimates sent to Congress called for $375,000 for the observance and report of storms and $75,000 for the construction, maintenance, and repair of military telegraph lines. The Committee on Appropriations have inserted in this bill every dollar asked for by the War Department in connection with the specific service referred to.

We now find that after the Secretary of War himself has deliberately cut down the estimates of the Signal Officer, in the face of the law which requires the executive branches of this Government to forward their estimates of appropriations through the Secretary of the Treasury, and in the face of those estimates, almost daily some head of a Department, on the request of some particular member of this House, comes forward with distinct propositions at war with his former estimates.

The proposition which my friend from Washington Territory [Mr. BRENTS] now submits is not even sustained by a recommendation of the War Department. His amendment provides that out of this particular appropriation, made for the purposes designated in the estimates of the Department, the sum of $15,000 shall be diverted for the construction of a particular telegraph line. That proposition does not depend even on the poor apology of an irregular estimate from the Secretary of War.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. McCOOK] has well said that this House ought not hastily to take away this appropriation from the frontiers, from Texas, Nebraska, and the Territories, from the line of military operations in the Northwest, and select one particular locality and say that $15,000 shall be given to it. I trust that this House, after the Committee on Appropriations has recommended the appropriation of every dollar asked for by the Secretary of War himself, in his book of estimates, will think that enough has been done, and allow us to proceed with this bill.

Mr. BRENTS. I desire to state, in addition to what I have already stated, that the amount of customs revenue collected at Port Townsend, is $16,726; marine hospital tax is $4,321.39; the amount of customs, fines, &c., $396.25; steamboat fees paid into the Treasury for the last year, $1,822.46; emolument fees, $19.01. That makes over twenty-three thousand dollars that is derived from the commerce of this district alone. Yet not one single dollar has been appropriated by any bill reported this session for the benefit of commerce in that portion of the United States. Because it is a Territory, and its Representative on this floor has no vote, gentlemen seem to think that it deserves no favors. Sir, it does not ask any favor now. It only asks that a small portion of the money which it pays into the Treasury of the United States shall be reimbursed to it in order to build up and protect that commerce which makes this contribution to your Treasury.

I say that this proposition is just, and I think no right-minded man who is a member of this Committee of the Whole can fail to vote for it. It does not take away any portion of this sum from any purpose for which it is already appropriated. It leaves the matter expressly to the discretion of the Secretary of War. The amendment is moved simply at his suggestion, because he thought it would be better and wiser to adopt such a provision in order to authorize this important and good work.

Mr. BRAGG. The gentleman from Washington Territory [Mr. BRENTS] has been kind enough to give us a detailed statement of the amount which the commerce and revenues of that Territory yield to the United States; and it seems the amount is somewhere between $16,000 and $23,000. Will he also take the trouble to tell this committee how much the Territory of Washington draws from the United States Treasury for the support and maintenance of its government?

Mr. BRENTS. This proposed appropriation is for commercial purposes entirely, and these revenues that I have mentioned are derived from commercial sources at this one point alone.

Mr. BRAGG. How much does the Territory of Washington cost the Treasury of the United States?

Mr. BRENTS. How much does the State of Wisconsin cost the Government of the United States?

Mr. BRAGG. Not a cent.

Mr. BRENTS. That is a question that has never been asked in regard to any other appropriation of this kind, but I presume Wisconsin has the expenses of her United States courts and other Federal expenses paid by the General Government and has received liberal appropriations for public buildings, the improvement of her rivers and harbors, and the like. Many States receive more than they pay, but that should not be considered where an appropriation is necessary and proper.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. BRENTS, there were—ayes 54, noes 51.

Mr. BLOUNT called for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. BLOUNT and Mr. HASKELL were appointed.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 77, noes 78.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

National cemeteries: For maintaining and improving national cemeteries, $100,000.

Mr. DIBRELL. I am instructed by the Committee on Military Affairs to offer an amendment, to add to the clause just read the following:

For continuing the improvement of the national cemetery near Chattanooga, Tennessee, by constructing a road or public highway from said cemetery to the city of Chattanooga, $5,000.

Mr. BLOUNT. I make a point of order on this amendment, but will reserve it if my friend from Tennessee desires to make any statement.

Mr. DIBRELL. The Government has spent a large sum of money in establishing a handsome cemetery near Chattanooga. It has gone to large expense in purchasing grounds; a suitable gateway and inclosure have been erected; 14,000 soldiers are buried there. But there is no public highway extending from the city in the direction of the cemetary, and unless an appropriation of this kind be made that cemetery must be without any proper way of approach. I hold in my hand a copy of the proceedings of the mayor and aldermen of the city of Chattanooga, donating the right of way for this road. The Quartermaster-General has recommended an appropriation of $15,000 for this purpose. The Committee on Military Affairs have instructed me to ask this appropriation of $5,000. I had hoped that the Committee on Appropriations would report such a provision in the bill, so as to obviate any necessity for the amendment. I trust no objection will be made to this appropriation, it has the unanimous recommendation of the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. WHITE. I hope this amendment will be adopted. It should be the policy of the Government to be reasonably generous in regard to the character of its national cemeteries. As my friend from Tennessee has just remarked, this cemetery contains the graves of 14,000 soldiers. It is a beautiful spot near the city of Chattanooga, but is inaccessible to the visiting public from the want of a proper road to approach it. I trust that the point of order will not be pressed and that the amendment will be adopted.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the purchase of the private papers of the late confederate generals, Braxton Bragg and Leonidas Polk, relating to the late war of the rebellion, $20,000.

Mr. THOMAS. I move to strike out the clause just read.

Mr. BRAGG. Before any action is taken on that motion, I desire to make a point of order on the clause.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. BRAGG. It is that this paragraph proposes new legislation not authorized by any law, and does not decrease expenditures.

Mr. BAKER. On the question of order I wish to say a word. In the last act making appropriations for the sundry civil expenses of the Government, I find on the twelfth page a provision in these words:

> The Secretary of War is authorized to negotiate with the legal representatives of the late confederate generals, Bragg and Polk, for the purchase of their private papers relating to the late war; and said Secretary shall report thereon at the next session of Congress.

Under that provision of law, Mr. Chairman, the appropriation now reported in this bill is clearly authorized. At the last session, when the sundry civil appropriation bill was under consideration, the point of order might have been urged that the proposed legislation was new in its character; but to-day the point will not lie, for the reason that this provision is simply in pursuance of a law passed last year for the accomplishment of this very object.

Mr. BROWNE. Will my colleague allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BAKER. Certainly.

Mr. BROWNE. If I remember correctly, when the question was raised yesterday as to the appropriation for the construction of a post-office at Baltimore, it was found that a previous appropriation act had authorized the purchase of a site and the making of specifications for a building; yet my colleague insisted—at least the Chair decided—that the previous appropriation for a site did not authorize a subsequent appropriation for the construction of a building.

Mr. BAKER. Now, I will answer my colleague. I desire to say that I said nothing on the question of order yesterday. I believe the Chair decided rightly and that the committee decided wrongly; but that, I beg to say to my friend from Indiana, is as far apart from this question as are the antipodes.

If Congress, in respect to the Baltimore post-office, had enacted a law directing the Secretary of the Treasury to negotiate with certain definite persons for the purchase of a site for the Baltimore post-office and to report to the next Congress on the subject of his negotiation, I take it that when an appropriation was made to carry out the object of that negotiation, a point of order would not lie against it. It is in pursuance of the law and for the purpose of carrying out the mandate of the statute.

Mr. BRAGG. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard on the point of order. The gentleman from Indiana spoke against it. I maintain, sir, that the point of order is well taken and there is no species of sophistry which can avoid it, if the rule is to be adhered to. The last appropriation bill provided:

> And the Secretary of War is authorized to negotiate with the legal representatives of the late confederate generals, Bragg and Polk, for the purchase of their private papers relating to the late war; and said Secretary shall report thereon at the next session of Congress.

That appropriation bill conferred upon the Secretary the authority to negotiate. If he did negotiate and had reported that negotiation to Congress, then it would have been the proper basis for an appropriation. But, sir, I hold in my hand the report made to Congress by the Secretary wherein he declines to purchase, and whether he has made another report, it has not yet come to my knowledge. But I have the printed report made by the Secretary of War in which he declines to make the purchase, and unless some contract shall have been entered into, under authority of the previous act, this paragraph stands without any law for its basis.

Mr. ROBESON. I should like to ask the gentleman from Wisconsin a question.

Mr. BRAGG. Certainly, sir.

Mr. ROBESON. Is not the publication of the official records of the war of the Union and confederacy now in progress?

Mr. BRAGG. Yes, sir.

Mr. ROBESON. Is not this a part of that work?

Mr. BRAGG. No, sir.

Mr. ROBESON. I think it is.

Mr. BRAGG. There is a difference between the publication of papers and the purchase of papers for publication.

Mr. BAKER. You cannot publish them until you get them.

Mr. McCOOK. The whole matter is conditional on a favorable report from the Secretary of War, which has never been made.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I do not understand, Mr. Chairman, on a discussion of a point of order there is any limit to debate, except in the discretion of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The uniform practice has been to limit it to five minutes.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Then if I am ruled down to five minutes I wish to say this: I thank the gentleman from Indiana, as well as the gentleman from New Jersey, for the points they have made. I will not travel off or beyond the limits of propriety in discussing the point of order. If this point of order shall be held by the Chair not to be good it will be my pleasure to discuss with any gentleman who may oppose this clause of the bill on its merits.

I am glad, sir, to be able to say to the Chair that the law itself, not once passed but repeatedly enacted, demonstrates beyond all question or cavil that there is no point of order here. I hold in my hand the original act under which this rebel archives bureau was established. It was passed in 1872, when the sum of $11,000 was appropriated for the purpose of enabling the Secretary of War to have those archives examined and copies furnished from time to time. Since that time, sir, the Government of the United States endeavoring, as we people from the southern section have been willing and ready to admit, to do full justice in giving to history the facts connected with that great struggle, purchased at an expense of $75,000 from Mr. Pickett certain papers which relate to that struggle, and which belonged to the confederate war department. They have in another instance appropriated $10,000 for the purchase of the papers of General Albert Sidney Johnston. They have in another instance appropriated $10,000 for the purchase of the papers of the Western and Trans-Mississippi department, belonging to Colonel Snead. They have in another instance appropriated $2,500 for the purchase of the papers of General Kirby Smith. And more than that; in the very last appropriation bill to which the gentleman from Indiana has alluded, authority was expressly given in the following terms:

> And the Secretary of War is authorized to negotiate with the legal representatives of the late confederate generals, Bragg and Polk, for the purchase of their private papers relating to the late war; and the said Secretary shall report thereon at the next session of Congress.

I hold in my hand the report and all the correspondence both from that bureau and from the War Department. The Secretary of War does not refuse to purchase; he accepted the authority of the last act of Congress. A board was appointed to appraise the papers. The gentleman from Ohio but late a member of this House, the President-elect of the United States, and so declared by Congress, was a member of that board of three. Under that law of Congress these papers were appraised, their value was put at the amount which is incorporated in this bill, and it is late in the day for the gentleman from Wisconsin or for any one else to undertake to tell this House that there is no law or no authority for this appropriation.

Mr. BRAGG. I ask the gentleman from Kentucky to read the report of the Secretary of War.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I will say to the gentleman from Wisconsin that when the gentleman from Kentucky reads that report he will read it with a better purpose and intent than the gentleman has read it himself. I say that the Secretary has not declined to purchase the papers.

Mr. BRAGG. I have asked the gentleman from Kentucky to read that report to the House.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Yes; and the gentleman from Kentucky will take his own time to read it.

Mr. BRAGG. The gentleman has asserted that the Secretary of War has not refused to purchase. Now, I asked him to read that report.

Mr. BLACKBURN. And I will say to the gentleman from Wisconsin that he can have the report read in his own time; and further, that when I seek for dictation or counsel I will hunt a more reputable source from which to get it.

Mr. BRAGG. Such language of the gentleman from Kentucky has very little effect with me.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Under the act of Congress a commission was appointed to appraise these papers with a view to their ultimate purchase. Now, that appraisement has been made. The Committee on Appropriations have recommended that the amount of money, so fixed by this commission, shall be inserted in this bill for this purchase. I am happy to be able to state that not a member of the Committee on Appropriations, republican or democrat, but what yielded cheerfully to the incorporation of this provision.

Mr. GIBSON. Will the gentleman from Kentucky permit me to ask him whether the papers have not already been delivered?

Mr. BLACKBURN. Yes, sir. I am obliged to the gentleman from Louisiana for the question. And further let me say, Mr. Chairman, to this committee, as I stated to the Committee on Appropriations, that if the Government, in the face of the precedents established, does not choose to pay the price which their own board have assessed as their actual value, the Government will not be the loser. It will have the papers by donation from widows and orphans and the representatives of dead men's estates.

But, sir, the point of order is not maintainable. The Government of the United States, acting through this bureau, which was organized and constituted in a fair and impartial manner, have invited the purchase of the Polk papers, and gentlemen, colleagues of mine upon the other side of the House whom I see before me, know that this is the fact.

Now, if I may be permitted to ask one question, it would be this, and I appeal to the sense of fairness and manliness and equities, I am sure, of every member upon the other side, can anything in the shape of a fair presentation of the case be made if you suppress all the papers of the man who organized the Army of the West, who commanded one of its corps up to the day of his death, on its skirmish line during the last year of the war, and suppress all papers of another general who was commander-in-chief of that army in more pitched battles and for a greater length of time than all the men who ever commanded it combined? Mr. Chairman, there is no lack of law for this purchase. There is no authority wanting. On the contrary, there is an absolute provision, as I have shown, incorporated in all of these bills, and the Committee on Appropriations, in inserting that clause, obeyed the laws that Congress at its last session passed, wherein the Secretary of War was directed as well as authorized to have these papers valued, looking to their ultimate purchase. That commission, appointed under the authority given to the Secretary of War by that act, and of which General Garfield, as I have stated, was a member, made their estimate, and the Committee on Appropriations have accepted that estimate and incorporated the amount of it in this bill and appropriated the sum of money necessary.

Now, sir, the point of order is alone pending here——

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HUNTON obtained the floor, and yielded five minutes to Mr. BLACKBURN.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am very much obliged to the gentleman from Virginia for his courtesy.

Now, Mr. Chairman, as I have stated, the point of order is the only question pending, and is for your decision. I am perfectly willing to abide by that decision, feeling assured that in the light of the statute passed in 1872 directing this bureau to investigate the subject; in the light of the several bills which have been passed from then until now appropriating money for the purchase of such papers; in the light of the action by Congress at its last session directing an estimate to be made and incorporating a sum of money necessary for the purchase of these papers in the appropriation bill of that year, I am willing to submit the entire question to the Chair as to whether there is or there is not a law on the statute-books authorizing the incorporation of this clause, which the Committee on Appropriations have put into this bill.

And I am glad, sir, and will be, should this point of order be overruled, as I hold it must be, I will be more than glad, to have the merits of the question opened up, assured that if opposition to so fair, so equitable a proposition as this is to come, it will not come from those gentlemen on the other side who, in committee as well as in this House, have illustrated a manly spirit of fairness to give us an opportunity to put the correct and tested records before the country.

Mr. BRAGG. In discussing this point of order I shall in some respects pursue a different line of argument from the gentleman from Kentucky. Instead of stating what the law is I shall read it so that the committee may judge; instead of asserting what the Secretary of War has done I shall read his report; instead of stating how much money has been expended I shall read the official records of how much has been expended. And if we are to go beyond that for the facts, I will say that the same broker who induced the Government to buy the other papers has occupied his time in brokerage in preventing other papers being given to this Government unless they could be sold through the medium of himself.

Mr. BLACKBURN. If the gentleman himself makes such a statement, I fear he would make a statement which is absolutely false.

Mr. BRAGG. I proceed, first, to call the attention of the committee again to the clause in the sundry civil bill of last year:

And the Secretary of War is authorized to negotiate with the legal representatives of the late confederate generals, Bragg and Polk, for the purchase of their private papers relating to the late war, and said Secretary shall report thereon at the next session of Congress.

There is no authority for the appointing of a commission to appraise papers. There is no authority which gives, upon the action of any commission, any legal or binding effect which shall make the basis of an appropriation, as being an appropriation, upon a law authorizing it. There is simply the fair discretion to the Secretary of War himself to negotiate for the papers and to report to Congress.

Now, sir, I have in my hand the report of the Secretary. And if it appears in that report that the Secretary has made a negotiation; if he has concluded a bargain, or fixed a price as the result of that bargain, then I concede under the authority which was given him under the sundry civil act we have a right to act, and this paragraph is not subject to the point of order. I read this also to show that unless the official records of the Department are not truthful, the statement of the gentleman from Kentucky as to the amount of purchase made by this Government is incorrect:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington City, December 8, 1880—

And all through this correspondence, if I could read it all, it will be seen the gentleman who represents these papers, who represents the widows and the fatherless, who is seeking simply to procure the adoption of this clause in this bill that they might be benefited, has assumed all the way through that the policy of the Government has been precisely the policy as stated by the gentleman from Kentucky. But in every single letter from the Secretary of War, and from the officer having charge of the archives, he is notified that the construction which he gives to the action of the Department is not the correct one, but, on the contrary, the Department have held the converse of that which he claims in his letters, and assumes to have been the policy of the Department—

SIR: For the information of Congress, I have the honor to submit certain correspondence had under the following provision of the act approved June 16, 1880, namely:

"And the Secretary of War is authorized to negotiate with the legal representatives of the late confederate generals, Bragg and Polk, for the purchase of their private papers relating to the late war, and said Secretary shall report thereon at the next session of Congress."

The correspondence appears as inclosures to a special report from the officer in charge of the publication of the Official Records of the War of the Rebellion.

The Polk papers have been placed in the hands of the Government with permission to use such as are deemed important to the publication now authorized by law. The price asked for the entire collection is $10,000.

The Bragg papers have been submitted for the purpose of being catalogued.

Not for the Government to have taken the advantage under a bargain of a private citizen; but having acquired the possession of the papers and not going to lose anything if not paid for, but by special stipulation of the agent having them in charge, they are deposited with the Government simply for the purpose of being catalogued; not printed, not used, but catalogued.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. WHITE. I take the floor on the point of order, and yield my time to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. BRAGG. I continue to read from this report:

No present price is stipulated for, but they, as well as the Polk collection, were appraised in 1878 at $10,000, and were once offered at, and can doubtless now be purchased for, that sum—

That is not the language of an officer who had made a contract—

The policy of this Department has been, as far as practicable, to procure such important military documents (Union and confederate) as were missing from its archives by gift or loan.

No purchases have been made from Union officers or their legal representatives, and the only purchases it has made from confederate sources have been:

First, a collection of trans-Mississippi papers for	$2,500
Second, the "Sidney Johnston" papers	10,000
Third, the "Snead papers"	10,000

Leaving out a large part of the papers which the gentleman from Kentucky has said have been purchased.

Since the establishment, July 1, 1878, of an agency for obtaining confederate military documents by gift or loan, many important collections have thus been placed at the disposal of the Government. A list of the more extensive of these collections is transmitted.

As far as known to the Department, the only important collections of confederate records held for sale are those now under consideration and the Hood papers; but it may be well for Congress to consider whether the purchase of these collections may not cause dissatisfaction among some who have heretofore placed valuable documents gratuitously at the disposal of the Government. Moreover, important documents have been received from Union officers and their representatives, and there seems to be no good reason for paying for the one class of records and not for the other.

Respectfully submitted.

ALEX. RAMSEY,
Secretary of War.

The PRESIDENT of the United States Senate.

Now, I submit that under the authority given him to negotiate and to report to this House, he has made his report to this House, and that report officially made by him shows no action tending to the purchase of these papers. On the contrary, he suggests reasons to the House why the purchase should not be made. Now, if there must be some existing law authorizing the purchase, and that law be the sundry civil appropriation bill of last session conferring this authority, and this report fails to show that under the power given in that law a contract had been made, or that there is even a recommendation for the purchase, then there is no law under which these records can be purchased, and the point of order must be held to be well taken.

Mr. BLACKBURN. In order, not to correct myself——

Mr. BRAGG. There is one telegram which I desire to read, and which I omitted when I had my finger upon it, to show how unjust the gentleman from Kentucky was in insinuating that the Government intended to keep these papers.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I did not insinuate any such thing.

Mr. BRAGG. You said so then.

Mr. BLACKBURN. "The gentleman from Kentucky" did not say so, and I ask the gentleman not to put words in my mouth.

Mr. BRAGG. The gentleman from Kentucky in very plain language——

The CHAIRMAN, (rapping.) The gentleman from Kentucky is entitled to the floor.

Mr. BRAGG. Said precisely what means that, for he said the Government would lose nothing if it failed to buy, because they already had possession of the papers.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I desire to say——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky will confine himself to the point of order.

Mr. BLACKBURN. If the Chair will allow the "gentleman from Kentucky" to proceed——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair was trying to rap down the gentleman from Wisconsin. [Laughter.]

Mr. BLACKBURN. I wanted the gentleman from Wisconsin to proceed.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not choose——

Mr. BLACKBURN. I did not say that the Government of the United States would lose nothing by failure to purchase these papers.

Mr. REED. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] will suspend for a moment.

Mr. REED. My inquiry is, whether on a point of order debate is limited to five minutes under the rule?

The CHAIRMAN. There is no express rule on the subject, but that is the practice.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I will state to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] that I do not want five minutes.

Mr. REED. But the gentleman from Wisconsin wanted more than five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. And the gentleman got it, by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WHITE] yielding his five minutes to him.

Mr. REED. Is it the ruling of the Chair that we are to take but five minutes each on the point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maine has a right to raise any point, and the Chair will rule on any question raised.

Mr. REED. The Chair commenced an answer to my inquiry, and the Chair will have the courtesy, I suppose——

The CHAIRMAN. What question does the gentleman want the Chair to decide?

Mr. REED. I made a parliamentary inquiry, and I supposed the Chair would answer it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman made a parliamentary inquiry, and the Chair undertook to answer that, while there was no express rule on the subject as to the length of time for debate on points of order, yet the universal practice had been in Committee of the Whole to limit it to five minutes. That answers the gentleman's question.

Mr. REED. I have not so understood the practice.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman has a point of order to make the Chair will rule upon it. What is now the point between the Chair and the gentleman from Maine?

Mr. REED. I desire to make a point of order that the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BRAGG] is entitled to more than five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin had five minutes of his own and also the five minutes yielded to him by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. WHITE.]

Mr. REED. And then the chairman, to use his own expressive phrase, "rapped him down." As a member of this committee I make the point of order that the Chair ought not to rap him down. [Laughter.] If the Chair will be kind enough to decide that point I will be obliged to him.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will be constrained to rap down the gentleman from Maine, for he is out of order, and makes no appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. REED. Does the Chair rule upon my point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair rules that the gentleman from Maine is out of order.

Mr. REED. I am glad at last to have a ruling from the Chair, and one in courteous language. It is rather a unique result. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. There is no question before the committee.

Mr. ATKINS. There is no ground for the misunderstanding between the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BRAGG] and the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. BLACKBURN.] The gentleman from Kentucky distinctly said, as I understood him, (and I was sitting near him,) that if these papers were not bought by the Government the Government would lose nothing, because these parties intended to give these papers to the Government if the Government did not buy them. That is what the gentleman said in the Committee on Appropriations, and I think that is what he said a moment ago. The gentleman from Wisconsin, I think, did not hear the last remark of the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. BRAGG. I understood him to carry the impression that if the Government did not buy these papers it would lose nothing.

Mr. BLACKBURN. The RECORD will show what I did say. I said just what the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ATKINS] has stated, that if the Government should determine not to follow the precedent set in these other cases, not to adopt the report of appraisement, and not to give one dollar for the purchase of these papers, it was my deliberate conviction that the Government would lose nothing, because in that event the papers would be donated to the Government by the widows of these officers.

One point more that I wish to correct. There is no disagreement between myself and the gentleman from Wisconsin, unless it be that he is determined to misunderstand the plainest Anglo-Saxon language. I am just as little responsible for his want of information in lunging into a debate like this——

Mr. BRAGG. I beg pardon——

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am talking now; not you. The gentleman has read a list of papers which he says were bought, and he tells this House they are all that were bought.

Mr. BRAGG. The gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I know all about the gentleman's report and I will not misstate it. The gentleman made the mistake of confounding this bureau of confederate archives with the Government of the United States. I grant that the War Department has bought only General Albert Sidney Johnston's papers, the trans-Mississippi papers known as the Price papers, and the Kirby Smith papers. But the Government of the United States paid $75,000 for what is known as the Pickett collection of papers. It was the Department of State, not the War Department, much less the bureau of confederate archives, that made this purchase. But the figures are as I state them; the cases are as I put them. The Government of the United States, through the Department of State, paid $75,000 for a collection of papers held by Mr. Pickett; it paid $10,000 for the papers of General Albert Sidney Johnston, $10,000 for the papers of General Price, and $2,500 for the papers of General Kirby Smith.

Now, upon the point of order, I submit there is nothing for the Chair to pass upon except the act of 1872 creating this bureau, making appropriations for its maintenance, and declaring its duties; the subsequent and oft-repeated appropriations for the purchase of papers similar to these; and the provision in the act of last session authorizing the Secretary of War to negotiate for the purchase of these very papers. Under that act a commission was appointed. The honored President-elect of this country was one of the three commissioners, who upon their oaths have placed a valuation upon these documents. The Committee on Appropriations accepted that report and incorporated it into this bill. If there is a lack of warrant here, I am unable to find it. If the Chair should, as I have no doubt he will, overrule the point of order and let the clause come up upon its merits, I shall then be ready, and it will be permissible for me to meet all opposition coming from what quarter it may as to the propriety of appropriating this money for such a purpose. I repeat that the clause now under consideration on which the point of order is raised was reported by the Committee on Appropriations unanimously; there was not a man in that committee-room who did not promptly give his approval to its incorporation.

Mr. ROBESON. Does the Chair desire to hear anything further on the point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is prepared to decide the question. After the statement of the law and its clear exposition by the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. BAKER,] who first spoke upon the subject, the Chair thinks there can be no doubt as to this amendment being in order. The object of that law was to purchase these papers for the benefit of the Government; and the designation of the Secretary of War to negotiate for the purchase was the mere instrument or means by which that object was to be accomplished. The main purpose of Congress in the enactment was to purchase the papers of these two deceased generals. That law is still upon the statute-book. This amendment proposes an appropriation of money for the purpose of carrying out that law. The Chair thinks it is clearly in order, and therefore overrules the point of order made by the gentleman from Wisconsin, [Mr. BRAGG.] The question is now on the amendment submitted by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. THOMAS] to strike out the pending clause.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Chairman, upon that amendment I desire to be heard. The inquiry naturally presents itself to my mind as well as the mind of every other member on this side of the House, what is the object of this appropriation? Is it for the purpose of gathering proper material out of which to construct a correct and valuable history of the war of the rebellion? or is it a speculative enterprise having as its object the enriching to the extent of this appropriation of the families of these two distinguished rebel generals?

It was claimed by certain gentlemen on the other side of the House during the last session of Congress, when a similar provision of the sundry civil appropriation bill was being discussed, as one reason why this appropriation should be made, that the families of these two generals (Bragg and Polk) had gone to great trouble and had incurred considerable expense in gathering up and preserving these records and this correspondence, and it was urged that they should be paid for their labor and for preserving them.

The remarks of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] to-day lead me to think that the expenditure of this money is unnecessary, inasmuch as a failure to purchase this collection will result in placing them in the hands of the historian, so that nothing will be lost to the history of the country, while this appropriation of $20,000 will be saved.

Does any one suppose that these collections were made with the expectation that Congress would buy them for the use of the future historian? Is it not more natural to suppose that the families and friends of these two distinguished rebel generals were proud of the record their heroes had made, and were bent upon preserving them for the delectation of the typical warm-blooded sons of the South, so that in years to come they might read with breathless interest and swelling bosom these annals prepared by loving hands, dictated by family pride, wherein the heroes are made to speak—

> Of most disastrous chances,
> Of moving accidents, by flood and field;
> Of hair-breadth 'scapes i' the imminent deadly breach;
> Of being taken by the insolent foe.

The changed condition of affairs, since the war, seems to have awakened a commercial spirit in the persons holding these papers, and moved by this, to them, new impulse, the idea occurs to them that these family records and private papers have a money value, and if they can only seduce good-natured "Uncle Sam" into buying them for the paltry sum of $20,000 all the glories therein contained may be published at public expense, and they, at the same time, reap a rich reward for their labor and enterprise in preserving these self-same records from the teeth of the voracious rodent and from the paper-destroying moth.

Miraculous change! Wonder of wonders! That the grist of the mills of these rebel gods, these private papers of General Bragg and General Polk, are to be sacrificed to the American people for the paltry and insignificant sum of $20,000!

Now, I am opposed to this appropriation and to this purchase. In the first place, all records of a general character, all in fact that would throw any light upon the pathway of history, all that were made by these or other rebel generals in their official capacity during the rebellion, belong, under the law, to the Government of the United States. And yet, while this is the law, I would not be in favor of seizing any of these papers. I would be the last man to countenance the invasion of private houses or homes for the purpose even of inspecting these papers.

If the families and friends of these generals have not the love of their fame and their cause sufficiently at heart to furnish all the information necessary to secure a fair representation and reproduction of the history of those times, then I say let their lives and their deeds rest in that grave of forgetfulness in which the loving hands of time have laid them, and over which the dust of oblivion gathers thicker and thicker as "Time rolls his ceaseless course."

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BAKER. Mr. Chairman, I have listened with pleasure to the remarks of the distinguished gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. THOMAS.] But however much I have enjoyed the eloquence of his diction and the beauty of his figures, I am still not convinced that the Committee on Appropriations made a mistake in recommending an appropriation of $20,000 for this object. I have but a few plain words to say on this subject, a few considerations to present that, as an American citizen and a member of this body, are sufficient to me to justify me in voting for this appropriation.

This Government is engaged, Mr. Chairman, in a work which I believe is eminently wise, the work of publishing a record of the war of the rebellion. It is important to this generation that we should have this record, and it is important to the ages to come we should have it. It is important we should have this record containing every contribution which may be made to it from every direction and from every stand-point in order that the people of this country and the future historian may be able to look at it in every aspect in which it can be looked at.

It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, it ought to be the desire of every man who fought in the Union Army that there should also be alongside of the record made by the men who fought in that Army the record which was made by those who fought against us. It looks to me as though we by refusing to appropriate a few thousand dollars should undertake to prevent the presentation of the contemporaneous views of the generals who were engaged on the confederate side, and thus emasculate the making up of this memorial to go down to the ages, will be doing a very unwise thing.

It has been stated, however, and the gentleman has held it would be a wise stroke of economy, if perchance the Government of the United States should refuse to appropriate a few thousand dollars, and then, rather than have the southern views presented by Generals Bragg and Polk withheld from these records, their widows and legal representatives would make a donation of them to the Government of the United States. For one, sir, as an American citizen and an American legislator, I should be ashamed to ask a donation of that sort at their hands. If those papers possess any value at all the Government of the United States is able to pay a fair recompense for them. The war has cost us enough, to be sure.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. How many more have papers to sell?

Mr. BAKER. I cannot say. I undertake to say to the gentleman from New York this—and I hope he will get time in which to express his own views without trenching on mine—that when this Government ceases to be large enough and the people of the North cease to be large enough to appropriate a few thousand dollars to leave to the ages the record of all that was done on all sides in this unhappy fratricidal war, I for one shall be ashamed that I am an American citizen.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. ROBESON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to speak on the practical question which we have before us. This is an appropriation for the purchase of the private papers of two confederate generals who are now dead, and which are in the hands of their legal representatives. This provision is in continuation of a work undertaken by the Government, which is not only a part of its duty to itself and to its own officers and soldiers, but to history and to the world. We have undertaken to preserve now while they are in existence the records of the facts of the late war, not for the purpose of writing history now when all our feelings are ablaze at the slightest allusion to the circumstances connected with that controversy, but in order that the future historian, from a calm eminence and after the lapse of time, may be able with all the information before him to show how glorious was the struggle and how grand in all the tide of time the triumph of northern soldiers when the principle of freedom stamped out a slaveholding rebellion. [Applause.] And unless we show how great and powerful was that struggle against which we fought our soldiers and our men will lose their full meed of praise before the world.

Now then these are private papers which are to be purchased. If they are valuable to our Government we ought to buy them, for they belong to widows and orphans who, according to the spirit of our Constitution and the spirit of our people, are not held responsible for the political crimes of which their fathers or sons were guilty. Therefore I say it becomes us as men, and as members of this great Government, to value these things which belong to widows and orphans at their proper price and pay for them out of the Treasury of the country.

I know nothing about the papers of General Bragg, but, Mr. Chairman, I do know that the papers of General Polk were proffered to the liberality of the country; I know that General Polk's representatives have sent them here, and the report from the War Department, as read by the gentleman from Wisconsin, shows they were placed at the disposal of the Government on these terms: if they are valuable, and you wish to pay for what belongs to the widow and orphan then pay what you think they are worth; but if they are not valuable, and you wish the widow and orphan of the soldier whom you overthrew to give you their private property, then in God's name take them. I cannot stand that. When the widow of General Polk said that, Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of paying to the last farthing every dollar these records are worth for history, and if I am wrong in this I will be wrong all my life, for I cannot suppress the instincts of my nature.

Mr. McCOOK. Mr. Chairman, the question presented here is not one of sentiment or of Columbian oratory, but a plain, simple, straightforward business transaction, and that is the only way to look at it, in my judgment. If I believed, as the gentleman from Kentucky does, that by failing to purchase these papers it would thereby interfere with the compilation of an intelligent history of General Bragg's army, I, sir, would be willing rather than that such a result should follow to vote $100,000, if necessary, to secure them. For having, if I may be pardoned for making personal reference, had the honor to stand in front of Bragg's army I am personally interested, in that sense at all events, in having everything connected with that army and its operations fairly and clearly stated. Possibly I might go as far as my distinguished friend from Indiana, [Mr. BAKER,] because the time is coming when, as an American citizen, I can have as much pride in American valor, as much pride in speaking of the pluck, determination, and courage of the confederate soldiers as in the sturdy courage, patriotism, and devotion of our Northern armies. [Applause on democratic side.]

But, Mr. Chairman, when it comes to the purchase of private papers from the widows of two confederate soldiers, while I believe I can show from the evidence that there is no necessity for it as far as the compilation of history is concerned, then I claim that another question is presented. It seems to me that it is largely a question of sentiment to offer a large sum for the purchase of these papers, especially when there are on this floor distinguished officers and soldiers of the confederate army, who have voluntarily come forward, and, without pay or without asking for compensation of any kind, have surrendered all their private papers to this bureau for the compilation of an intelligent history of the war.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Will my friend from New York permit me to suggest that the contributions to which he refers have always come from persons holding the papers, while the officer to whose operations that referred was living. This is only in the case of dead generals where it is proposed to compensate their living representatives.

Mr. McCOOK. I am aware of that, but I hold that the principle is the same. Here is a long list of confederate generals. I am not sufficiently acquainted with them to know whether all are living or not. Some I know are who surrendered their papers to the Government on their own motion cheerfully, voluntarily, and without remuneration, in aid of this undertaking. In addition to that, Mr. Chairman, the Southern Historical Society, which makes it their business to gather all of the records relating to the operations of the confederate armies, acting upon the suggestion of the gentleman in charge of this bureau, Colonel Scott, have surrendered all of their collection of papers, documents, and official records for the same purpose. Mr. Davis himself, the ex-president of the so-called confederacy, always responds in the same way; and I merely repeat myself when I say if I believed it was essential to the compilation of an intelligent history of the operations of the armies of the West that we should purchase the papers in this case, I would have no objection on the score of expense, but, on the contrary, would be willing to support a much larger amount than is contemplated here.

But, Mr. Chairman, I have the evidence to show that there is already in possession of the Government of the United States, not seized, in any offensive sense, by the Government, but taken by the strong arm of the Government at the suppression of the rebellion when the archives of the so-called confederate government came into possession of the United States, and in that list of papers and official records I find the official reports of General Braxton Bragg in reference to the battle of Belmont, of Chickamauga, of Murfreesborough, and all of the operations through Northern Georgia and in Tennessee, with which his name has been and will always be identified. What private papers have his representatives which will supplement that? Not alone does the Government of the United States have material from which to write history from the rebellion records and archives which fell into its hands, but from those which were surrendered, not upon its demand, by the confederate soldiers in the interest of their own gallant achievements.

Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to the purchase of these papers for the reason I have stated.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Will the gentleman permit me to ask a question?

Mr. McCOOK. Certainly.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Does the gentleman from New York attach no importance and place no value upon the report made by the commission of which General Garfield was a member in the estimate they placed upon the value of these papers?

Mr. McCOOK. I did not know until to-day that General Garfield ever served upon such a commission. Of course, as the gentleman from Kentucky states it to be a fact, I know it to be true. I have a very high estimate of General Garfield's opinion upon all points and under all circumstances. But, Mr. Chairman, as high an estimate as I have of his judgment and opinion, I am inclined to believe that the papers which we now have are amply sufficient and those which are proposed to be purchased here can add no material value. I do not know what questions were considered by that commission.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. PAGE. I hope the gentleman will be allowed to proceed by consent.

Mr. BLOUNT. I desire to move that the committee rise to limit debate.

Mr. WHITE. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from New York may be allowed to proceed.

Mr. PAGE. I hope consent will be given.

Mr. KEIFER obtained the floor and yielded five minutes to Mr. McCOOK.

Mr. McCOOK. Mr. Chairman, I wish to state to the committee that I have taken a great deal of personal interest in the publication of the records of the rebellion. I had something to do with it in the last Congress when an appropriation was first passed. That appropriation was fought at every foot of its progress through the Committee on Appropriations and in the House. But finally we appealed even against the opinion of the chairman and carried that appeal, and got the necessary appropriations to publish these records. Therefore I say even in the interest of fair play I am in favor of a full and authentic publication of all these records.

Now let us see how this matter stands. As the gentleman from Kentucky has properly said, we have paid out $22,500 for exclusively war papers. We paid $75,000 for the Pickett papers which belonged to the Treasury Department or perhaps the diplomatic corps; but $22,500 was all that ever has been paid for these exclusively war papers.

I say there has not been a Secretary of War since the bill passed or a Federal officer who has had charge of this matter who has ever said, except in the most indirect way, that this policy of purchasing papers was the proper policy to pursue. On the contrary, Secretary McCrary said this:

> The preservation of these records as a part of the history of the war is a matter of interest to all sections and to all the people of the country, and I have supposed that an assurance that they are to be fairly and accurately printed and published would induce their present custodians to turn them over to the Government. This expectation has been already to some extent realized, and I have great confidence in its substantial success:
> There may be exceptional cases in which purchases will be necessary and expedient, but I prefer that Congress should judge of them.

And the Secretary of War, Mr. Ramsey, says this in regard to the matter:

> With reference to your statement that it has been the policy of the Government to complete the collection of confederate records by purchase, and that more than one hundred thousand dollars have been expended in that way—which statement you seemingly present as a prominent reason why the Government should purchase the records in question—I beg to state that you evidently misapprehend the policy of the Government as represented by this Department, as in fact its policy has been directly opposite to that stated.

I have failed to find in any suggestion made by Colonel Scott, who has charge of the compilation of these records, anything that justifies the conclusion that it has been the policy of the Government of the United States to purchase these confederate records for this or for any other purpose. And for that reason, if I had none other, I would oppose it.

One more word and I am through. I have here, if this amendment is insisted on, prepared an amendment to the amendment, which includes the names of ten or eleven of the most distinguished of the United States generals who either died at their posts of duty since the war or who fell on the field of battle during the war. Each man whose name I have put there commanded either an army corps or a great department. I know that the families of many of them have in their possession private papers as valuable to the record of the war as any in the hands of the widows of General Bragg and General Polk; and if this amendment is insisted on I shall offer, and if this be a proper time I will now offer it.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. McCOOK. Certainly.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Have the papers embraced in the amendment suggested by the gentleman from New York or any of them ever been passed on or their value ascertained or determined under any authority of Congress or by any commission?

Mr. McCOOK. I think not.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Then I trust the gentleman from New York will be frank enough to admit the distinction.

Mr. HAWLEY. That amendment is not pending.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I thought the gentleman had offered it.

Mr. McCOOK. But that has nothing to do with the orginal question.

Mr. HAWLEY obtained the floor.

Mr. THOMAS. I can answer the question of the gentleman from Kentucky by the record.

Mr. HAWLEY. Wait and follow me.

Mr. THOMAS. I do not know any more pleasant gentleman to follow.

Mr. HAWLEY. I do not yield, Mr. Chairman. I am willing to admit that it is not the policy of the Government to go about buying the records of the war. The War Department never undertakes to negotiate for or buy them. It cannot do it without the authority of a law of Congress. It ought not to do it. Its business is to collect and to publish. It finds all the records on the Union side at its disposal. All living confederate generals have freely offered their papers.

Now, this is not a question to be decided in accordance with technical arguments of lawyers before a court. I am taking the circumstances as they stand. I am doing the best I can to make a complete record. For, in the first place, the country and the world will not be satisfied unless we publish those records. That I need not enlarge upon. And, secondly, the records will be worth nothing if there be a well-founded suspicion that they are incomplete. I would go a long way and far out of my way, I would print some superfluous things, rather than any critic on either side or in any country should find fault with the complete and impartial representation. Neither would I, as gentlemen have stated here, undertake to seize private papers in private families. I would expect confederate generals to follow the example of the gallant soldier from Virginia who presented his papers.

And now there are certain papers said to be in possession of the executors, the widows and heirs of two of the prominent generals on the confederate side. I cannot myself individually say how much they are worth. But as to the objection they are only private papers I may say that the correspondence between leading officers that could not be called distinctly official is sometimes of far more value in setting forth the true condition of affairs than the technically official reports. I would expect that the so-called private and even semi-official papers would be the more valuable and interesting of the two. These papers are said to be of the class which may be called partly private; not in the hands of the living generals, but of their heirs.

We had a distinguished commission appointed to inquire whether these papers would be of use to us in making a perfect record. From the character of that commission and its report I am precluded from questioning that these papers are of value. I am not to stand here as a Representative and dicker on that matter. We have committed ourselves to a certain extent by giving in several cases something to the heirs of deceased and distinguished officers for similar papers. For myself I will waive all technicality, and coming to the merit of this matter as we must, I am willing to give to these heirs what they think these private papers are worth, for the sake of having a complete record.

Mr. CALKINS. I desire to move an amendment.

Mr. BLOUNT. I move that the committee rise for the purpose of closing debate on this paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CALKINS] rises to move an amendment.

Mr. CALKINS. I desire to offer an amendment to the pending paragraph. The motion now is, as I understand it, to strike out the paragraph.

Mr. THOMAS. I desire to answer a question that was asked of the gentleman from New York [Mr. McCOOK] by the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. BLACKBURN.]

Mr. CALKINS. I cannot yield now. I ask that my amendment be read.

The Clerk read the amendment, which was to add to the paragraph the following:

> And the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to purchase the same at such price and sum as may be agreed upon, not exceeding the sum hereby appropriated.

Mr. CALKINS. I desire but a moment or two in reference to that amendment. I wish to ask the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] what these records are which it is proposed the Government shall purchase? We ought not to be appropriating money, as the gentleman knows, and as we all know, for records or private papers, copies of which we already have. I ask the gentleman to state whether he knows what these papers are that it is proposed shall be purchased; whether anybody has looked at them and examined them and can tell what they are? And I will yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Kentucky for that purpose.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I will say that I have no personal information as to the scope or value of these papers. I draw my conclusion as to the propriety of the sum inserted in this clause of the bill, and predicate that conclusion upon the estimate of the value given by the commission which was appointed under the act passed by this Congress at its last session for the purpose of enabling the Secretary of War to prosecute these inquiries.

Mr. BURROWS. One word right there.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Certainly.

Mr. BURROWS. Could the gentleman from Kentucky inform this committee in regard to that report, where it is?

Mr. BLACKBURN. Which report?

Mr. BURROWS. As to the appraisal of these letters.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I simply know that the commission consisted of three gentlemen.

Mr. BURROWS. Has the gentleman the report?

Mr. BLACKBURN. I have it not; the Secretary of War has it. I simply know that the commission consisted of three gentlemen, of which General Garfield was one. I know that commission made a report in which they say that the value of these papers was the identical sum now incorporated in this bill.

Mr. CALKINS. Have you that report?

Mr. BLACKBURN. I have not; I presume the Secretary of War has it.

Mr. CALKINS. One other question. By whom was this commission appointed?

Mr. BLACKBURN. I understand that it was appointed by the Secretary of War, in the prosecution of the duty imposed upon him by the act of this Congress at its last session, to prosecute negotiations for the purchase of these papers. He appointed the commission, consisting of three gentlemen, and that commission examined the papers and made their report.

Mr. BRAGG. Who were these gentlemen?

Mr. BLACKBURN. I know that General Garfield was one; I do not know who the others were. They made a report to the Secretary of War, in which they put the value of the Polk papers at $10,000, and the value of the Bragg papers at a like sum. The Committee on Appropriations accepted the conclusion of this commission as to the value of these papers, and the committee put that sum into this bill.

Mr. BRAGG. The Secretary says nothing about any report from the commission.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I know he does not.

Mr. CALKINS. Now, if the gentleman will allow me to make a single suggestion.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Certainly.

Mr. CALKINS. I presume if a proper provision is put into this bill, whereby an examination could be made of these papers and if they shall be found to be valuable such sum may be appropriated for their purchase as their fair valuation would amount to, no objection would be made to it.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am sure the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CALKINS] and myself desire to agree. I do not want any more paid for these papers than they are reasonably worth. But if the amendment suggested by the gentleman is agreed to, how would their value be ascertained? The Secretary of War has already once undertaken to ascertain it by the appointment of three commissioners, who have valued them and made their report. That report the Committee on Appropriations has adopted. If we are to ignore that and say that another examination of the papers shall be made in order to ascertain the sum of money to be paid for them, it may be that the result of that examination would be that they are worth more than the sum which has been named, and the question would still be left open for readjustment. Where is the discretion to be lodged? Who is to be charged with determining the value of these papers?

Mr. CALKINS. If there is a report, (and I do not doubt it if the gentleman says he has seen it,) and if it can be produced and read here, it will go far toward settling this matter. I will therefore ask unanimous consent that the paragraph be passed over so that we may recur to it when the bill has been read through.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am perfectly willing to assent to that.

Mr. BURROWS. That had better be done.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I know the commission made that report and put the value of these papers where the Committee on Appropriations put it. I will cheerfully accept the gentleman's suggestion that by unanimous consent this paragraph be passed over in order that the report of the commission fixing a valuation upon these papers may be obtained and produced.

Several MEMBERS. That is right.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to passing over this paragraph to be recurred to again?

Mr. MCCOOK. That will not preclude amendments?

The CHAIRMAN. It will not. The paragraph will be left in the same position as now.

Mr. THOMAS. Before that is done I desire to make answer to a question asked by the gentleman from Kentucky, and to make a few remarks in order to put myself right on this question. The gentleman from Kentucky has asked if any value has ever been placed upon these papers by the War Department.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Upon which papers?

Mr. THOMAS. Upon the papers mentioned in and covered by this paragraph.

Mr. BLACKBURN. The gentleman is mistaken; I did not ask that question.

Mr. THOMAS. Very well; if the gentleman did not ask the question, I will at any rate make answer to it, for it has been asked by some one. During the last session of Congress there was under discussion in this House the following provision:

> The Secretary of War is authorized to negotiate with the legal representatives of the late confederate generals, Bragg and Polk, for the purchase of their private papers relating to the late war, and said Secretary shall report thereon at the next session of Congress.

While that provision was under discussion the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER] read a letter from Colonel Scott, having the rebel archives in his possession, and having control of the preparation of this work, in which he said:

> There are some three or four collections of confederate records held for sale, and I respectfully renew my objection to that method of procuring such property. The collections referred to are collections of official papers that were prepared during the war.
> It is submitted that there is no propriety in such purchase, as, strictly speaking, some of these records belong to the Government; and the fact that the Government has refrained from seizing them ought to induce the present holders to permit the authorities to make use of them. Moreover, the price of such things is purely arbitrary.

That is what Colonel Scott said.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Mr. Chairman, I want to make a correction of a previous statement of mine. These papers have been appraised, but I was mistaken as to which lot of papers had been appraised by the commission of which General Garfield was a member. The General Albert Sidney Johnston papers were appraised by a commission consisting of General Garfield, Mr. COCKRELL, and General Williams, of Michigan. These Polk and Bragg papers were appraised by Colonel Scott and Mr. McKee, his chief clerk. It is their estimate of $20,000 that the Committee on Appropriations has accepted.

Having made that correction, I wish to say I am perfectly willing to accept the suggestion of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CALKINS] that this matter be passed over, or I am willing to accept the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana proposing to insert the words, "Whatever sum of money they shall be found to be worth, not to exceed $20,000."

Mr. CALKINS. Let the paragraph be passed over for the present.

Mr. BLOUNT. I trust that the amendment will be accepted, and that we shall go on with the bill. We have been several hours on this paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to passing over this clause?

Mr. BRAGG. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin object?

Mr. BRAGG. I do.

Mr. BLOUNT. I move that the committee rise for the purpose of limiting debate.

Mr. BRAGG. I have the floor, I believe.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] is recognized for the motion that the committee rise.

Mr. BRAGG. Mr. Chairman, did you not recognize me?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognized the gentleman for an objection.

Mr. BRAGG. No, sir; after I had obtained the floor you asked me the question whether I objected, and I said I did.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. BRAGG. I desire to know whether the Chair can take off the floor any member he chooses by asking him a question?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair submitted to the Committee of the Whole the question whether there was objection——

Mr. BRAGG. Before the Chair did that I addressed the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] was upon the floor struggling to be recognized, as he has been for the last ten or fifteen minutes; but the Chair had deferred to the wishes of other gentlemen who had notified him of their desire to speak. When the question was submitted to the Committee, whether there was an objection, the Chair recognized the gentleman from Wisconsin, to ascertain whether he made objection or not; but he did not recognize him to address the Chair. He recognized the gentlemen from Georgia.

Mr. BRAGG. Now, will the Chair listen to me? Before the gentleman from Georgia arose I addressed the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. That may have been; but the Chair did not recognize the gentleman.

Mr. BRAGG. I insist on my right to be recognized.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Georgia insist on his motion that the committee rise?

Mr. BLOUNT. For all practical purposes I may accommodate the gentleman from Wisconsin. I move that the committee rise for the pupose of limiting debate.

Mr. BRAGG. That is exactly what I do not want the committee to rise for.

Several MEMBERS. Vote it down!

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. BLOUNT that the committe rise, it was not agreed to; there being—ayes 66, noes 71.

Mr. BRAGG. Mr. Chairman, I do not rise to make any extended remarks in reference to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. THOMAS] to strike out the paragraph, but I rise for the purpose of calling the attention of the committee to these facts, and the chairman of this Committee of the Whole to some of the facts. It was stated and made the basis of a point against the point of order that I made that in the execution of a law a commission had been appointed, and that that commission had made a report, and that they had sent that report to the Committee on Appropriations, and that, therefore, the point I made was not well taken, and the ipse dixit of the member who made the statement was taken by the Chair against the official record.

Mr. BLACKBURN. If the gentleman refers to me, I made no such statement. I never said any report from any commission had been sent to the Committee on Appropriations.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair made no reference to it at all, and he did not decide the point as to whether this commission had been appointed or not.

Mr. BRAGG. If the Chair will listen, I will go on; but if he wishes to interrupt me to correct anything he said, I will yield the floor to him for that purpose. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can proceed.

Mr. BRAGG. It was certainly said in debate.

The CHAIRMAN. But not by the Chair.

Mr. BRAGG. The Chair held it was a law in progress of execution, and the progress of execution was the appointment of a commission, although the Chair did not state so, but that was stated by the gentleman from Kentucky. And the commission was stated to have had General Garfield on it. It was the official statement of that commission as to the valuation of these papers, a commision organized under that identical law. And now, it appears to the House that the Secretary was not false to his duty when he made a report, but that the official record which I read was true and that the statements which were made adverse to it were mistakes.

Mr. BLACKBURN. By whom were they made?

Mr. BRAGG. By the gentleman from Kentucky. [Laughter.]

Mr. BLACKBURN. That is not true. The statement made by the gentleman from Wisconsin is not true.

Mr. BRAGG. I do not yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin declines to yield.

Mr. BRAGG. When the gentleman from Kentucky gets himself in a talking mood, he talks so rapidly it is no wonder he forgets what he says. [Laughter.]

Mr. BLACKBURN. But I am always responsible for it.

Mr. BRAGG. Undoubtedly, and so am I. The question of responsibility is always present with everybody. If I err or make mistakes, I am always willing to make amends. If I say that which is untrue, and say it consciously, then I ought to be punished, and I hold myself responsible for such punishment. But no man, sir, no matter where he may live, nor how voluble he may be in speech, shall deter me from saying that in my representative capacity which I deem the interests of my constituents require me to say. [Applause on the republican side.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, having erred in this particular, and after this question was passed over, just at the close of the debate it turns out there was a mistake, and then it was said there was another appraisal. Did that go to the Committee on Appropriations? Or if there was no appraisal sent to the Committee on Appropriations, how did the Committee on Appropriations find out at what price and the value these papers were to be assessed? Was there any member of that Committee on Appropriations so connected with this appropriation that he knew what the owners or holders of the papers desired to take; that he, standing as a member, was able to furnish the information without calling upon the commission or any other person that was appointed to make the appraisal.

I say, Mr. Chairman, and I say it to this committee, that it has never been the policy of this Government to purchase these records; and I say this, that the moment the Government enters upon this policy, that moment it holds out an advertisement to gentlemen adventurers everywhere to claim to be possessed of very valuable papers that are necessary in order to give a correct publication of the war. And they always require, as some assemblages do, small collections taken at the door for the purpose of defraying expenses. And these gentlemen come here wearing in this House widows' weeds, and uttering the sighs of mothers and wives, whose husbands are in the grave, and other such piteous appeals, seeking to strike the chord of sympathy and drive the legislator away from the strict line of his duty. But when you pass the appropriation you find that the widow wears pants and boots, [laughter,] and instead of the money being distributed to the poor and helpless, you find that the widow has money enough to spend the winter in Washington.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Mr. Chairman, I see no occasion for any feeling in this matter. Nothing unusual has been presented for the action of the committee. The parade of himself which the member from Wisconsin has seen fit to make is a matter in which he alone is individually concerned, and which I imagine cannot affect seriously this body.

When he says that it was stated in debate that a commission had been appointed by the Secretary of War who had made a report upon the value of these papers and that report had been sent by the Secretary of War to the Committee on Appropriations, if he meant—and I must deal in this manner of reply because of the innuendoes with which the gentleman has taken occasion to assail me and the members of the Committee on Appropriations—if he meant to say that I had made——

Mr. BRAGG. I did not say that the Secretary of War had sent it to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Well, sent by anybody. I say, if he meant to say that I had ever seen a report so sent by the Secretary of War or anybody else to the Committee on Appropriations, the record of this debate and the facts in the case all agree and unite with me in replying that that statement was not true. When he talks about men coming here and indulging in sighs and pleadings for widows and orphans, he surely does not mean to apply that language to the gentlemen on both sides of this House who advocate this section of the bill and this appropriation. He certainly does not mean to apply that language to me, for in the record he made and never violated and to which all decent men are willing to admit that he is welcome to a monopoly——

Mr. BRAGG. Does the gentleman from Kentucky propose to be the self-constituted organ for the decent men of this House?

Mr. BLACKBURN. Mr. Chairman, I would sooner appeal to the court over which Rhadamanthus presided than to such a character for mercy, for clemency, or for fair dealing to anybody.

I did say, sir, that these papers had been appraised under orders of the Secretary of War. I repeat that assertion. I say it again. I said that they had been appraised by a commission of which General Garfield was a member. I subsequently corrected that statement and said it was the papers of General Sidney Johnston which had been appraised by that commission, and that these papers of Generals Polk and Bragg had been appraised by order of the Secretary of War by Colonel Scott, in charge of this bureau, and Mr. McKee, his chief clerk.

Now, if he wants to know how that fact was ascertained and intimates that somebody was closely enough concerned with these papers to warrant or induce them to inquire, I will tell him how it came about. It came out before a sub-committee of the Committee on Appropriations, under the control of the gentleman from Georgia having charge of this part of the bill, who called Colonel Scott before them, the chief officer in charge of that bureau, for the purpose of making inquiry in reference to this very matter; and the chairman of the sub-committee, the gentleman from Georgia, was present in the said committee when this officer appeared before them and was questioned by him, and stated in response to such interrogation that an appraisement had been made at $20,000 or $10,000 for each. That is enough. Those are the facts.

Mr. BRAGG. Will the gentleman from Kentucky state that the appraisal, as it is called, by Colonel Scott was not made under this law at all, but was contained in a communication by him of valuation to the Secretary of War, and dated in 1876?

Mr. BLACKBURN. I do not know when the appraisement was made. I know that Colonel Scott, who had been called before the Committee on Appropriations to answer the necessary questions relative to these papers as the head of that bureau, came and stated that the appraisement had been made at $20,000, and on that statement the committee incorporated that item in the appropriation bill.

Now, I find that this appraisement was made, by order of the Secretary of War, by Colonel Scott and his chief clerk, McKee; so that the only difference between the statement which I originally made and the subsequent correction is that this lot of papers was appraised as the others had been under the orders of the Secretary of War and by the gentleman having charge of this bureau and of his chief clerk. It was for that reason I stated that I was perfectly willing to accept the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Indiana, adding to this clause the words "or so much as may be necessary."

That is the whole case, Mr. Chairman, and I cannot close without expressing deep and profound regret that nothing that touches any right that ever pertained to anybody, whether before the war or during or since the war, suffices to prevent members of this House from tearing open gaping wounds that time seems unable to cure. It is sad, sir, for us to be confronted day after day by the proof that there are yet caricatures of humanity that insist on playing the role of ghoul and hyena to the disgust of all peace-loving and decent men.

Mr. McCOOK. Just one word more in this connection. I think it due to Colonel Scott, as well as to a proper understanding of this case, to read one brief extract from a report, dated March 16, 1880, he made upon Colonel William Preston Johnston's letter, which Colonel Johnston wrote to the Secretary of War. Colonel Scott, who has charge of the compilation of these records, says:

> The papers immediately in question are valuable, but they are by no means indispensable to a very comprehensive history of the important events of the war. We already have most, if not all, of the formal reports and important orders coming from Generals Bragg and Polk, and much of their correspondence.
> The intimation, most courteously, but none the less unmistakably, thrown out by Colonel Johnston—

To whom the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BRAGG] refers—> in his conversation at my office yesterday, that "the Department would not be allowed to proceed with the publication of the war records unless it bought the papers now in his hands," has not changed my views as to the propriety of the position now occupied by the Department and indorsed by the current appropriation.

> Respectfully submitted.
> ROBERT N. SCOTT,
> Brevet Lieutenant-Colonel U. S. Army.
> MARCH 19, 1880.

A MEMBER. What is the date of that?

Mr. McCOOK. It is dated March 19, 1880.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. CALKINS.]

Mr. CALKINS. The amendment I send to the desk is designed to give the Secretary of War discretionary powers.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Strike out in line 666 and 667 "$20,000" and insert "a sum not exceeding $20,000, and the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to purchase the same at such price and sum as may be agreed upon, not exceeding the sum hereby appropriated."

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am satisfied with that.

Mr. ROBINSON. I would like the gentleman to tell me how that is at all different from the other proposition. What does it amount to?

Mr. McCOOK. What becomes of the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois?

The CHAIRMAN. The motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. THOMAS] is to strike out the clause. The amendment of the gentleman from Indiana is to perfect the text, and is in order to be voted on before the motion to strike out.

The question being taken on the amendment offered by Mr. CALKINS, there were—ayes 88, noes 51.

So (further count not being called for) the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CONGER. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add the following as a proviso:

"Provided, That before any of this money shall be paid the officer making the purchase shall be satisfied that all the papers are the original and the entire papers as proposed to be sold to the Government."

Mr. BLACKBURN. That is right.

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. WARNER. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add after the word "Polk" "and J. B. Hood."

Mr. WARNER. I opposed in the last session of Congress the policy of purchasing these records.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I reserve the point of order on that amendment.

Mr. WARNER. I desire to be heard a moment. All are interested surely in having a correct history of the war written, not only those who participated in the operations of the two armies, but the country generally and the world. I do not question the importance of these records; but if we enter upon the policy of purchasing at all, then we should have all the records that it is important to have, in order that such a history may be written. General Hood took a very prominent part certainly on the confederate side. He is dead. I doubt not his papers are as valuable as the papers of the other generals that are offered for sale to the Government. I am opposed to this policy entirely; but if that sum is to be appropriated, I propose that the provision be extended to include the papers of General Hood.

Mr. McCOOK. I hope the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WARNER] will be adopted because it seems to me that having determined on this policy we ought to pursue it. I have assurances from gentlemen who understand, I think, all about this matter that the papers of General Hood are of more value than the papers of any other confederate officer, that they are of more value than the papers either of General Bragg or General Polk.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I waive the point of order, but I want to say this: I do not believe it is proper to adopt the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio. I certainly am not lacking in willingness to purchase the papers his amendment embraces. I am not lacking in a desire to have this record made as fair and complete and authentic as possible. But there has been no estimate put upon those papers. There has been no valuation. There has been no examination made so far as this House knows, and there has been no authority given by Congress for negotiations looking to their purchase. For that reason I hope the Committee of the Whole will not adopt the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. WARNER. The matter of valuation is wholly arbitrary. There is no standard by which to value papers of this kind.

Mr. ELAM. I move that the gentleman from Ohio have an opportunity to amend his amendment so as to meet the objection suggested by the gentleman from Kentucky

Mr. WARNER. I prefer to leave it as it is. The question of valuation can come in at any time hereafter. The Secretary of War can make the valuation.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I wish to ask, would that amendment leave the amount exactly as it stands in the bill, being the sum of $20,000, to purchase the whole papers, the Bragg papers, the Polk papers, and the Hood papers all combined? That is not fair.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee was dividing, and the Chair cannot hear any argument.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Let the clause be read as it will stand if amended by the adoption of the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio.

The clause, as proposed to be amended by Mr. WARNER'S amendment, was again read.

Mr. TALBOTT. I do not suppose the gentleman who offers the amendment intends anything more——

The CHAIRMAN. The committee is dividing.

Mr. TALBOTT. I want to suggest a modification to the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has declined to modify his amendment. The question is upon the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio, which has just been read for the information of the committee.

The question was taken upon the amendment of Mr. WARNER; and upon a division there were—ayes 70, noes 57.

No further count being called for, the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McCOOK. I move the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk to come in after the word "Hood."

The Clerk read as follows:

And for the purchase of the private papers of the late United States generals, George H. Thomas, George G. Meade, Henry W. Halleck, John F. Reynolds, Joseph Hooker, James B. McPherson, Philip Kearney, Nathaniel Lyon, John R. F. Mansfield, William Nelson, and John Sedgwick, relating to the late war of the rebellion.

Mr. BROWNE. I ask the gentleman to include the name of Jefferson C. Davis, of Indiana.

Mr. HAWK. Is an amendment to the amendment now in order?

The CHAIRMAN. An amendment to the amendment is in order.

Mr. HAWK. I move to amend by adding that which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That no portion of the sum hereby appropriated shall be used until a commission, to be appointed by the President, to determine fully as to the propriety of purchasing such papers and fixing the value of the same, shall have made a report to the Secretary of War.

Mr. HAWK. I desire to be heard upon that amendment very briefly. It seems to me this is purely a business transaction. For the purpose of preparing a correct history of the war it is said that it is important to obtain these private papers. It is true that in writing the history of a war private papers are sometimes very valuable. But it seems to me that inasmuch as there is a great diversity of opinion on this floor in regard to the value of these papers, this is a proper subject for the report of a commission especially appointed for the purpose.

It appears to me that such a commission is necessary to determine the value of these papers. We have had no expression of opinion by any officer acting under the authority of law as to the price and value of these papers. Objections have been urged on that side of the House and on this to certain reports, which have been referred to as being unsatisfactory. Now, for the purpose of fully deciding this point, it appears to me that my amendment is eminently proper, and I ask a vote on it.

Mr. BLOUNT. I desire, unless debate on this paragraph can be closed, to move that the committee rise for the purpose of obtaining an order of the House to close debate.

Mr. McCOOK. I desire to have a vote on my amendment before the committee rises.

Mr. REAGAN. I desire to say a word or two upon this subject before the motion is made that the committee rise.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I move the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

But the sum herein appropriated, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall only be used in payment of the purchase of the Bragg and Polk papers. The value of the other papers named herein shall be ascertained by the Secretary of War and reported to Congress, with a view to their purchase.

Mr. HAWK. I submit that that amendment is not in order. There is an amendment pending, offered by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. McCOOK,] and an amendment to that amendment offered by myself.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HAWK] makes a point of order. The gentleman from New York [Mr. McCOOK] offered an amendment, which is pending. To that amendment the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HAWK] offered an amendment. Only one other amendment is now in order, and that is one in the nature of a substitute.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I do not wish to offer this as a substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. It is not in order as an amendment.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Then I ask the Chair to entertain the amendment for consideration as soon as the amendment to the amendment shall have been disposed of.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky withdraws his amendment for the present.

Mr. REAGAN. I desire to say a word in reference to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. McCOOK,] proposing to add the names of a number of generals whose papers may be purchased. That amendment evidently indicates that in the opinion of the gentleman from New York the object of the paragraph of the bill now before the Committee of the Whole is to confer a private benefit. If the gentleman is right in that opinion, then the amendment he proposes is also right.

As I understand the object of the pending paragraph, it is to obtain possession of information which is not now in the possession of any existing government, for the benefit of future historians, or at least to enable the Government to preserve the means of preparing a reliable and trustworthy history of that great contest. If the information which is now in the possession of the representatives of General Bragg and General Polk were in the possession of the Government, of course there would be no occasion to purchase it. If that information was in the possession of the Government, where it could be used, there would be no occasion to provide for its purchase. But as it is not in the possession of this Government, as it is not in the possession of any other government, if it is valuable as matter which would aid in preparing a correct history of the war, then the purpose of Congress will be subserved by its purchase.

I suggest to the gentleman from New York, in regard to those generals whose names he has given in his amendment, and who distinguished themselves in the contest, that they have made their reports to the Government, and the Government is in possession of all the official information necessary for historical purposes, in so far as those generals were concerned.

I take it therefore the amendment was offered merely to indicate that in the opinion of the gentleman this is a matter not useful to the Government or necessary to a correct history, but is intended simply to benefit the parties possessing these papers. If the effect of this appropriation would be simply to confer a benefit on private parties, I would be prepared to vote against the whole proposition. I know nothing of the value of these papers; I have never examined them; but, I desire to say——

Mr. REED. I think my friend from Texas does himself slight injustice in saying that he knows nothing about the value of these papers; for I find a letter from him to General Bragg catalogued here on page 47.

Mr. REAGAN. I do not remember about that letter; and the fact that I may have written a letter to General Bragg would hardly enable me or any one else to say that I am familiar with his official papers as an officer of the Army.

I do not know how valuable these papers are as a means of getting at correct history. But under the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois the War Department will have the power, upon proper investigation, to determine whether these papers are valuable as a matter of history, and to purchase them if they be so considered.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. HAWK,] which will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That no portion of the sum hereby appropriated shall be used until a commission, to be appointed by the President to determine fully as to the propriety of purchasing such papers and fixing the value of the same, shall have made a report to the Secretary of War.

The amendment was adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. MCCOOK] as just amended.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Is not the purpose of the gentleman from New York to have the purchase of all these papers within the amount appropriated here of $20,000?

Mr. MCCOOK. That was not my original purpose, I will answer with entire frankness. My original purpose was to put these eleven officers of the United States Army on a par with the three officers of the confederate army. For that reason I originally suggested $110,000; but, knowing or believing it would be ruled out, I withheld it.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I will answer with equal frankness and in equal good faith and will say, if the gentleman from New York will listen to the reporting of my amendment, he will find it is my purpose to put the generals he has named in his amendment on an exact equality with those covered by this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky will be reported for the information of the committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

And the sum herein appropriated, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall only be used in payment of the purchases of the Bragg and Polk papers; and the value of the other papers named herein shall be ascertained by the Secretary of War and reported to Congress with a view to their purchase.

Mr. MCCOOK. The difficulty about accepting that is this: this appropriation of $20,000 is a merely arbitrary sum, I will say with all deference to the gentleman from Kentucky. Of course Colonel Scott refers to it. In 1876, when the purchase was made of the papers of Albert Sydney Johnston and of the Snead papers, the amount then given was adopted by him as the basis upon which to make an estimate in reference to the Bragg and Polk papers.

Mr. CONGER. Although he had not seen them?

Mr. MCCOOK. Yes; he had not seen them at the time. He had no opportunity to examine them. Therefore it would not be fair, it seems to me, to accept that amount. Let them all go together and have $110,000 for the private papers of the eleven Union officers, all of whom commanded departments and many of whom commanded great armies.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say on this amendment one of two things must be true. Either it is the purpose of the gentleman from New York to put the eleven Union generals whose names are embraced in his amendment, or their representatives, upon an equal footing with those embraced in this clause of the bill, and honestly and sincerely and candidly endeavor to open up negotiations for the papers they may have, if indeed they may be valuable, of which I have no opinion, or else it must be the purpose of the gentleman from New York by this amendment to take and adopt an indirect method of striking down this clause of the bill. That I am unwilling to believe the gentleman from New York seeks to do. It is utterly ridiculous to talk about buying the papers of Generals Polk and Bragg, and adding eleven Union generals for the pittance of $20,000 when the estimate is before you from the archives bureau saying to you the value of two of these collections amounts to the full measure of the appropriation. That is not a direct way of defeating the question. My amendment is offered in good faith. I waive the question as to whether it was the duty of all officers of the existing Government to furnish their papers to the War Department or not. There is no confederate government to-day, and no man who claims there is. There can be no demand on that section or on that people for any such collection as this. Waiving the point as to whether the officers of the Union were in duty bound to furnish these papers or not, I say it is preposterous to talk about buying fourteen of these collections for $20,000. Therefore, in good faith I offer my amendment that the Secretary of War is instructed to inquire into and ascertain the value of all the papers of the generals mentioned by the gentleman from New York, and report to Congress with a view of their purchase, but I had hoped, and do still hope, that this Committee of the Whole House will come to a direct and fair vote on this clause and either adopt it or vote it down.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. REED. I desire to reply to some of the remarks of the gentleman from Kentucky. He says and says very properly that the addition of the names of ten Union generals to this clause is an indirect way of getting at the subject. That is true; but that way of getting at the subject can show and does show to the House where we are going to.

Now, if it be true that the private papers of two confederate generals are essential to the true history of this war, or as the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] has suggested, to remove a suspicion that we have not got a true history, surely the papers of the ten or more Union generals may be equally necessary.

Mr. WARNER. Yes; and a good many others as well.

Mr. REED. And if these ten or more Union generals' papers are necessary in this connection, then there is no reason why there may not be some propriety as well as necessity in securing the papers of perhaps a hundred others on both sides which may throw some light upon this question. Now, are we prepared to inaugurate an expenditure of public money as this amendment contemplates simply for the purpose of removing a suspicion that we have not got a fair and full history at present?

I want to call the attention of the committee to another fact, that nowhere in the report from the Secretary of War is there any recommendation as to the price of $10,000 to be fixed for these papers, or any other price. On the contrary the only statement which justifies such a remark is a statement made in a letter from Colonel Scott, declaring that if the Kirby Smith papers are to be taken as a basis these others, which he had not seen, would perhaps be worth $10,000. So they might. But there has been no recommendation of any price fixed upon them except the relative one as I have asserted.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Will the gentleman allow me to say a word?

Mr. REED. Surely.

Mr. BLACKBURN. In the gentleman's time I want to call attention to this fact, that these papers are not, in the ordinary acceptation of the term, private papers; but simply private because they belong to no government. The government to which they would have belonged, and of whose archives they would have formed a part, fell in 1865.

Mr. REED. Who was the heir?

Mr. BLACKBURN. There was no heir, except the persons having custody of the papers, the legal representatives of the dead owner.

Mr. REED. The United States was the proper heir.

Mr. BLACKBURN. If the gentleman from Maine answers that the United States Government was the legal heir, and for that reason that the Government of the United States should have taken possession and with strong hand laid hold of this property, I reply simply with the query: then why did not the Government do it, instead of adopting a different policy and purchasing papers similarly situated in more instances than one?

Mr. REED. Mr. Chairman, I do not propose to be drawn from my line of argument to answer irrelevant questions of that kind in the few brief moments that I have allotted to me.

I was proceeding to say that if we are going to make this appropriation, and purchase these papers to carry out an idea that it is necessary to obtain them in order to remove a suspicion that we have not got a correct history, then I say we are going to pile up a tremendously expensive job; and I want the committee to determine whether they are willing to pay the sum necessary to remove the suspicion or not.

Mr. NEW. I rise simply for the purpose of making a suggestion. It seems to me that this subject is considerably mixed if not muddled; and it will be well if the matter can be passed over by common consent, so that gentlemen on both sides taking the chief interest in it may have a conference and determine if they cannot agree upon some proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana proposes that the clause be passed over for the present by unanimous consent.

Mr. BOUCK. I object.

Mr. BLOUNT. I move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. MCCOOK. Let us have a vote upon this proposition. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Illinois to the amendment of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. HAWK. That has been already acted upon, if the Chair will permit me. The amendment of the gentleman from New York as proposed to be amended by the gentleman from Kentucky would seem to be first in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The first question will be taken upon the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky to the amendment of the gentleman from New York. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The amendment was again read.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 54, noes 72.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from New York, which the Clerk will now report.

The amendment was read.

Mr. ATKINS. I hope no vote will be taken upon that amendment; and I trust the whole proposition will be dropped out of the bill. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment which has just been read by the Clerk.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BROWNE. I move to strike out the whole paragraph.

Mr. WHITE. That motion has been pending, having been made by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. THOMAS.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion to strike out the paragraph.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk read the following:

For printing and binding, under direction of the Secretary of War, of 10,000 copies of a compilation of the official records, Union and confederate, of the war of the rebellion, so far as the same may be ready for publication during the fiscal year, to be distributed as provided in the act approved June 16, 1880, $40,000.

Mr. FORNEY. I offer an amendment to make that correspond with the act of last session.

The Clerk read as follows:

On line 668, after the word "for," insert "continuing the preparation of the publication of the official records, indexing, and proof-reading, and."

Mr. BLOUNT. I have no objection to that.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. WHITE. Let the paragraph be read as it will be if thus amended.

Mr. ATKINS. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ATKINS. Has the next paragraph been read?

The CHAIRMAN. The paragraph from lines 668 to 674, inclusive, has been read; and an amendment has been offered to it by the gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. FORNEY.]

Mr. ATKINS. I move to strike out the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee is dividing on the amendment of the gentleman from Alabama. The motion of the gentleman from Tennessee will be in order after the committee has acted on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. BLOUNT. I ask the gentleman from Alabama to withdraw that amendment.

Mr. FORNEY. I withdraw it.

Mr. BLOUNT. I now move that the committee rise.

Mr. ATKINS. I understand my motion to strike out the paragraph will go over till to-morrow if the committee should now rise.

The CHAIRMAN. It will.

The motion of Mr. BLOUNT was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia, reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the bill (H. R. No. 7203) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The message further announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 3788) granting an increase of pension to William Hamill.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 6532) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed, without amendment, House bills and joint resolution of the following titles:

Mr. BAKER. I ask consent to have taken from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. No. 6529) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, and for the armament thereof, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, and for other purposes, returned from the Senate with amendments, and that the same be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and printed with the amendments numbered.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HUNTON. I move that the House now take a recess until half past seven o'clock this evening.

Mr. COBB. I move that the House now adjourn.

Mr. ATKINS. We will have the yeas and nays on that.

The SPEAKER. The motion to adjourn takes precedence.

Mr. VALENTINE. I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. VALENTINE. The House by an order already made has directed that a recess shall be taken to-day until half past seven o'clock.

The SPEAKER. Yes; but there is nothing in the rules to prevent the House from adjourning, nevertheless.

Mr. VALENTINE. The hour of half past four has arrived.

The SPEAKER. Five o'clock was the time fixed for the recess.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Is not the order for a night session, or for a recess this afternoon, still in force?

The SPEAKER. Yes; but there is nothing in the rules or in the practice of the House to prevent the House from changing its mind and adjourning.

The question was taken upon the motion to adjourn, and upon a division there were—ayes 79, noes 57.

Before the result of the vote was announced,

Mr. NEAL called for the yeas and nays on the motion to adjourn.

Many MEMBERS. Oh, no!

Mr. NEAL. Yes; we will have the yeas and nays.

Mr. HUNTON. I call for tellers on the motion to adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The yeas and nays are called for.

The question was taken upon ordering the yeas and nays, and there were 30 in the affirmative.

So (the affirmative being more than one-fifth of the last vote) the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 81, nays 87, not voting 122; as follows:

Mr. SHELLEY, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Accounts:

Resolved, That all the employés of the House of Representatives borne on the annual roll whose salaries do not exceed $1,200 per annum be paid one month's extra salary.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HUNTON. I move that the House now take a recess until half past seven o'clock this evening.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at four o'clock and fifty-three minutes p. m.) the House took a recess until half past seven o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The recess having expired, the House reassembled at half past seven o'clock p. m.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The order under which the House meets to-night will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

MONDAY, February 21, 1881.

On motion of Mr. HUNTON, by unanimous consent,

Ordered, That on Wednesday, February 23, at five o'clock p. m., the House take a recess until half past seven p. m., for the purpose of considering such matters as may be brought before the House by the Committee on the District of Columbia, in lieu of the evening session of Thursday, February 24, heretofore ordered.

EIGHT PER CENT. IMPROVEMENT CERTIFICATES.

Mr. NEAL. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of further considering Senate bill No. 1681, to provide for funding the 8 per cent. improvement certificates of the District of Columbia.

Mr. HUNTON. On the last evening when the House sat for District business this bill was the unfinished business in the Committee of the Whole.

The motion of Mr. NEAL was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, (Mr. STEVENSON in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 1681) to provide for funding the 8 per cent. improvement certificates of the District of Columbia.

Mr. NEAL. I believe this bill was reported and partially considered when the House last held a session for District business.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the amendment reported by the Committee on the District of Columbia, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert what will be read.

Mr. SAMFORD. As this substitute was read when the bill was last under consideration, I suppose it is not necessary to read it again.

Mr. REAGAN. It had better be read again.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) I suggest that this bill be laid aside until we have something nearer a quorum than at present. Let us go on with unobjectionable business relating to the District of Columbia. This bill involves a large sum of money, and should not be acted upon when there is so small an attendance of members.

The CHAIRMAN. Unless there is objection, this bill will be laid aside for the present.

Mr. REAGAN. I desire to ask whether the amendment proposed by the committee has been printed.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is informed that it has been.

Mr. SAMFORD. Will there be any objection to laying this bill aside until the next meeting of the House for District business?

Mr. HUNTON. That will be in the next Congress.

The CHAIRMAN. In the absence of objection, this bill will be laid aside for the present.

Mr. HUNTON. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. STEVENSON reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union having had under consideration the bill (S. No. 1681) to provide for funding the 8 per cent. improvement certificates of the District of Columbia, had come to no resolution thereon.

TEMPORARY POLICEMEN FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. HUNTON. I move to take from the Speaker's table the bill (S. No. 2184) to authorize the commissioners of the District of Columbia to appoint additional policemen for temporary service in the District, and for other purposes.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized to appoint, upon the recommendation of the superintendent of the Metropolitan police of the District of Columbia, three hundred additional privates on the Metropolitan police force of said District for the period of fifteen days from the 20th of February, 1881, who shall be paid $2 for each day's service rendered by them in that capacity; and a sum sufficient for their payment and equipment is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. HUNTON. This bill, which comes from the Senate, is subject to a point of order if any member chooses to raise the point.

Mr. SAMFORD. I will not make any point of order; but I would like to suggest that the bill in its present form provides for the appointment of these policemen from the 20th of February, a date already passed.

Mr. BOUCK. I make the point of order that the bill must be first considered in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The point of order is sustained; and the bill goes to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. HUNTON. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering the bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and proceeded to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 2184) to authorize the commissioners of the District of Columbia to appoint additional policemen for temporary service in the District, and for other purposes.

Mr. HUNTON. Mr. Chairman, the bill before the committee provides for the appointment by the commissioners of the District of three hundred additional policemen for the inauguration ceremonies. It provides that they shall be appointed for twenty days, commencing on the 20th of February. Before the bill can become a law, at least six of those days will have expired, so that the police force as thus increased will last only some two weeks.

The increase of this police force is absolutely indispensable for the protection of life and property in the city of Washington during the period of inauguration and for a short time before and after. The crowd in the city, from all the information we have upon the subject, will simply be immense. There will be a collection here of all sorts of characters, good and bad, and the present police force has had to do extra duty now on account of the great crowd in the city, and they are pretty well worn out. We are informed it is absolutely indispensable this increase of the police force for two weeks should be made.

I will say also, Mr. Chairman, that it is usual to make an increase of about the number provided in this bill on such occasions. I think at the last inauguration there were two hundred additional policemen appointed by the authorities of the Federal Government, and an additional number, probably one hundred, but I am not certain of that, was appointed by the commissioners. It is very important this increase in the police force should be made and made at once, because unless you do so the new policemen will be so raw and unaccustomed to the duties they will have to discharge on inauguration day and afterward that they will not be half as efficient as they otherwise would be. I hope, therefore, it will be the pleasure of the committee to pass the bill.

Mr. ATKINS. What is the salary?

Mr. HUNTON. Two dollars a day, and that is the whole expense except providing the badge and baton, there being no uniform.

Mr. ATKINS. Do you not think that ten days is long enough?

Mr. HUNTON. No, sir; I do not, for the crowd will be here five days before the inauguration, and for a week or two weeks afterward. I am informed the police force in the city is now incompetent to discharge the duties imposed upon them. We are informed they have had extra duty to do for some time. When the Senate passed this bill, they provided the increase police force for twenty days, commencing on the 20th of this month, and it will be six or seven days after the 20th of the month before these policemen can possibly be placed upon duty.

Mr. FINLEY. Why not make an amendment covering that too?

Mr. HUNTON. They can only appoint them immediately, and the twenty days will run from the 20th of February, so the result will be that the increase police force will only be on duty for some fifteen days.

Mr. REAGAN. If for twenty days, will not their pay be from the date of appointment?

Mr. HUNTON. No; it says twenty days from the 20th of February. I ask the Clerk to read the provision contained in the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized to appoint, upon the recommendation of the superintendent of the Metropolitan police of the District of Columbia, three hundred additional privates on the Metropolitan police force of said District for the period of twenty days from the 20th of February, 1881, who shall be paid $2 for each day's service rendered by them in that capacity.

Mr. SAMFORD. Would there be any objection to amending it so as to conform to the time when this police force is to go upon duty, say from the 26th of February for fourteen days?

Mr. HUNTON. If you say the 26th of February and this bill is not signed by the President until the 26th of February, the police force could not go upon duty until the 27th. Under the provisions of the bill if it becomes a law, the commissioners will at once appoint these officers. The period of service runs to twenty days from the 20th of February, which would not be more than ten or twelve days' service.

Mr. SAMFORD. And they will only be paid from the time they serve?

Mr. HUNTON. Certainly, they will only be paid $2 a day while on duty.

Mr. REAGAN. What is the necessity of adding three hundred extra policemen to the force now on duty for this day?

Mr. HUNTON. The commissioners asked for four hundred. The committee in this House cut the number down to three hundred; but before we got a chance to report to the House the Senate had passed this bill providing for three hundred. I will say according to my best judgment in the premises that three hundred is scarcely enough, because the crowd will be simply immense. They are only to remain on duty for ten or twelve days.

Mr. NEAL. I will state further to the gentleman from Texas that the present force is only about one hundred and sixty privates and they have seventy square miles to guard.

Mr. HUNTON. Two cities and the county.

Mr. NEAL. Yes, two cities and the county.

Mr. COBB. I move to amend by requiring the District of Columbia to pay one-half of the expenses.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will reduce his amendment to writing.

Mr. COBB. I cannot do it without the bill and the bill is not yet printed.

Mr. HUNTON. Yes, there is a printed bill.

Mr. REAGAN. Let it be added as a proviso, providing that the District of Columbia shall pay one-half of the expenses.

Mr. COBB. I will put it in the form of a proviso.

Mr. HUNTON. I trust sincerely that the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana will not prevail. There seems to be a disposition to saddle everything upon the District of Columbia for which there is the least possible pretext. I ask the committee whether there is any justice in saddling upon the people of Washington City or the District of Columbia one-half of the expenses of the increased police force rendered necessary by the inauguration of the President of the United States? It is a Federal ceremony. It is a Federal crowd. It is not brought here by the citizens of the District of Columbia. It is not brought here for their benefit or for any purpose they have in view; but it is a crowd brought here to witness a national ceremony, the inauguration of the President of the United States; and why one-half of the expense of this additional force for such an occasion should be borne by the people here, I cannot conceive. I hope the amendment will not be insisted upon, or, if insisted upon, that it will not prevail.

Mr. ATKINS. I concur, Mr. Chairman, with the views of the gentleman from Virginia. I do not believe the District of Columbia should be taxed with one-half of this expense. It is not their inauguration. It is not their invitation to attend the inauguration. It is the business of the Federal Government exclusively; and because they happen to be residents of the city in which the inauguration of a President of the United States is to take place, and which attracts the attention of a vast concourse of people from every quarter of the Union, it should not be their misfortune, because of that mere circumstance, that they should be made to put their hands into their pockets and pay a portion of the expense. I think the District of Columbia ought not to be taxed for a matter in which they have no more interest than any other State, Territory, or city in the United States.

I have been one of those who have been in favor of requiring the District of Columbia to bear one-half of the expenses of the District. I have been serving upon a committee of this House for the last six years which I may say inaugurated, or may almost lay claim to having inaugurated that system, because before that system was adopted by the Committee on Appropriations, the United States Government bore most of the expense for this city.

Mr. HUNTON. I beg the gentleman's pardon.

Mr. ATKINS. Yes, sir; in a great many respects. Within the last six years the burden of one-half of the expense has been borne by the District of Columbia, whereas before that time the Federal Government paid the greater part of it. But that is a matter of the past; it is not applicable to this question.

This is a subject in which the District of Columbia, as I have said, is not in the least interested any further than any other State or Territory of the Union, and it seems to me to be an imposition upon this people. I trust, sir, that this Government will shoulder its own burdens, and that the city may not be required to bear one-half of the expense of this police force to preserve order here during the inauguration. For one I do not see the necessity for so large an increase of the force. I am bound to say that.

I do not think there will be as many people here as the gentleman says. He says that there will be all kinds of characters here. That may be. There are all kinds of characters here now [laughter] so far as that is concerned. I do not sympathize with this immense parade; this great attempt that is being made to conduct this inauguration. I do not sympathize with it at all. I have no sympathy with the display that is being made upon our streets and avenues—triumphal arches and pyramids and towers and all that. I have very little sympathy with it, sir, and for one, I do not want to conduct our legislation here upon such a basis as to indicate to the country that we do approve of it. For one, I am decidedly opposed to such a display. But that is none of our business because it is not being done by order of the Government; it is not being done by Congress; it is being done by the citizens of the District themselves.

Mr. WARNER. Then they ought to pay for it.

Mr. ATKINS. That is very true, if the tax-payers had any voice in it. But it is being done by a portion of the people only, the representatives of the republican party. But the citizens of the District of Columbia are not responsible for the great crowds of people that will be here, as alleged, on inauguration day. They are to come from all parts of the country; and the expense of the display that is being made on the streets is not contemplated to be borne by the Government at all. The question here is a very different one. It is to provide an additional police force. Now, while these decorations are being arranged by the citizens of the District of Columbia, a large majority of the tax-payers of the District have nothing whatever to do with it. Is it proper to tax the people of this city because there is to be a large crowd here to witness a Government ceremony? Are the people of this city to bear this burden because a few men are doing this? Not at all. It does not follow as a matter of course. It is a non sequitur. I hope that there will be some spirit of liberality and fairness toward the people in this matter. I hope the amendment proposed will not be insisted upon. The citizens of the District of Columbia do not bring the crowds of people here that are expected to come, and they ought not to be made to pay for it.

Mr. SAMFORD. I would like to ask the gentleman from Tennessee if the Government of the United States brings them here? [Cries of "Question!" "Question!"]

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Chairman, all I have to say upon this——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would suggest that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana be reported by the Clerk first.

Mr. FINLEY. Let him report the amendment afterward. I have only a word to say. The object of this increase of force is, if there is any use in it whatever, because the present police force does not afford sufficient protection, and because of the large number of people who are expected to be here at the inauguration.

Now, if we have an increased force, for whose benefit is that increased force appointed? Is it to protect Government property any more than it is to protect the property of the citizens of the District of Columbia? It is not, as the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ATKINS] well says, it is not our fault that that number of people come here.

Mr. ATKINS. It is not the fault of the District either.

Mr. FINLEY. But the increase of force is for the purpose of protecting citizens, in view of the vast crowd that will come here.

Mr. ATKINS. Ought they not to be protected?

Mr. FINLEY. The protection is afforded to the people here as much as to the property of the Government.

Mr. ATKINS. Why should the people of the District be imposed upon by this burden?

Mr. FINLEY. Why should the Government be imposed upon? The increased crowd is brought here by the republican leaders. We are making an appropriation out of the Treasury to pay an increased force to protect the people of the District.

Mr. ATKINS. On account of a necessity imposed by the republican leaders.

Mr. FINLEY. If the people of the District have the benefit of the protection they should pay half the cost. You cannot make the republican leaders pay for it.

Mr. COBB. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HUNTON] has assumed that this is an effort on my part to throw all the burden on the people of this District of such expense as are necessary in connection with the inauguration.

Mr. HUNTON. I said there was an effort; I did not say the gentleman from Indiana made that effort.

Mr. COBB. The gentleman must have alluded to me, because I presented the amendment.

Mr. HUNTON. Then the cap must fit the gentleman.

Mr. COBB. It does, but not in the sense the gentleman suggests. I say, Mr. Chairman, there are no people anywhere in this country so well protected and dealt by so liberally as the Government of the United States has dealt by the people of the District of Columbia until very recently, and it is so now. Their jail is furnished at the expense of the Government of the United States; the insane asylum in which their insane are placed is mainly furnished by the United States; the eleemosynary institutions of the District are mainly provided by the Government of the United States.

These are facts which no gentleman that understands the history of the condition of things here can deny. We build magnificent buildings for this District. It is true we use them. But there is no city in the world that would not take great pleasure in exempting such buildings as we have erected here from taxation, and, not only that, that would not aid to a great extent in having such buildings erected. But passing from that, I insist that so far as this amendment is concerned which I propose, it is strictly equitable. What brings these people here? I do not object to a large crowd coming here to attend the inauguration. But who brings them here? Who adds to the number by the thousand? It is the people of the District. What do they do? Why they get together in the first place and the Government of the United States gives to them the free use of one of the finest buildings that we have erected; I speak of the new Museum. They take possession of it. Then what do they do? These individuals for the purpose of gain turn around and charge the plain people that come here from my district and yours to attend the inauguration $5 apiece to get into that building.

Mr. CLYMER. They have to pay for the dancing.

Mr. COBB. My people do not want to dance. We are not dancers very much in my section of the country. But we ought to have the right to go into that building free so far as the gentlemen who have now the management of it are concerned.

Mr. NEAL. I would like to ask the gentleman, if people are to go in free, who are to pay the expenses?

Mr. COBB. The Government of the United States are virtually paying the expenses. They erected the building.

Mr. NEAL. Do they pay for the ball?

Mr. COBB. Yes; and the people of the United States do in fact not only pay for the ball but they pay more than five dollars for every foot of ground that these people occupy when there.

Mr. HUBBELL. People are not bound to pay the five dollars.

Mr. COBB. They are obliged to pay it; otherwise they will not see the inaugural ball. The Government of the United States pays for the erection of the building and these men for the purpose of making money, take possession and charge the people $5 a head to go into it. That is the fact about it.

But that is not the point now. The question arises, who ought to pay for this extra police force? In the first place I have no doubt there are more than twice as many of these men provided for in this bill as ought to be. I have no idea that three hundred policemen in addition to what we have got are necessary in this city. I have my family here; and I am not afraid of being robbed. I am not afraid of my wife being interfered with.

Mr. NEAL. There was a member robbed here the other day.

Mr. COBB. I know there was. But so it is every day. Men were killed here last year, but they were wrongfully killed.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. Who said they were not?

Mr. COBB. Who is making this speech—you or I? [Laughter.]

Then, Mr. Chairman, I insist that if the commissioners believe, in their judgment, that three hundred policemen are necessary to protect the people of this District, it is not the persons of men that are to be protected here so much as it is the property of the individuals who live here.

Now, if we believe that it is necessary to have three hundred policemen in addition to the number that we now have in this District to protect the property belonging to the citizens of the District, then I submit as an equitable proposition that the people of this District should pay one-half of the expense. It is not enough to say that the Government of the United States is located here, that we carry on here the business of the Government. That is not enough to compel us as a nation to pay the expense of every little gathering here, to pay for policing the city. We already pay one-half of the expense of the police force we now have.

I propose nothing else in my amendment than just simply to carry out the rule which Congress has established by law of paying one-half of the expenses of this District out of the Treasury of the United States, the other half to be paid out of the revenues of the District. That is at least fair so far as the District is concerned. I voted against the organic law of this District. I believe to-day that the Government of the United States has to pay too much of the expenses of this District. In the next five years I believe the people of this country will say so through their Representatives, if the people of this District continue to impose upon the Government Treasury and take more money from it than they ought to.

Mr. HERBERT. I believe it is estimated that probably 100,000 people will come to the city of Washington to witness the ceremonies of inauguration. I think it is fair to estimate that each of those 100,000 people will leave $20 here. That is certainly within limits. If so, then there will be $2,000,000 brought to the city of Washington by the crowd that is coming here to be spent here. The hotel-keepers, the boarding-house keepers, the liquor and cigar shops, and shops of all kinds managed by citizens of this District will gather in that $2,000,000. The simple question is whether the people who are to get all this money that is to be brought here by this vast crowd shall pay any portion whatever of the expense of protecting that crowd and of protecting the shop-keepers and hotel-keepers, &c., while they are making the money that will be brought here and spent during inauguration week? It seems to me that it is perfectly fair that the people who are to make all this money should bear at least one-half of the expense of this additional police force.

Mr. NEAL. I have heard it said that the Government of the United States acted like a step-mother toward the District of Columbia and the people thereof. If I had had any doubt about it before, the arguments I have heard here to-night would have fully convinced me of it.

We deprive the people of this District of self-government. We say that they shall do this thing and shall do that thing. We do not allow them to vote for a solitary officer. We put over them a set of men who tax them without regard to their wishes. We pile debts upon them without their consent. Yet, when a great national event like the inauguration of a President is about to take place, gentlemen upon this floor get up here and say that the people of this District ought to pay one-half of the expense. Sir, I do not want these extra policemen for the protection simply of the people of this District, I want them for the protection of the people of my district who come here, and who have a right to ask at the hands of this Congress that they shall be protected in their person and property when they visit the national capital.

The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. COBB] has spoken about the ball, and about his constituents paying the expense of it, and about people making money out of it. I will say to that gentleman that if he will assume the expense of that ball the directors would be very glad to give him all the receipts. It is not for the purpose of making money that the charge is made. The managers of that ball simply propose to make it self-supporting; that is the whole of it. I will guarantee if the gentleman will say to-night that he will assume all the expense they will give him all the receipts.

Mr. COBB. I will say to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. NEAL] that I am not engaged in that kind of business; I am a little too heavy for that. [Laughter.] I would suggest to him that he should take charge of it.

Mr. NEAL. I am not one of those who believe that there is any profit in it.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. NEAL. Wait until I get through, please.

Mr. REAGAN. I beg the gentleman's pardon; I thought he had concluded.

Mr. NEAL. Who is to be profited by this? It is true the hotel-keepers, the boardinghouse-keepers, and probably the saloon-keepers will receive some benefit and make some profit. Are the property-holders of Washington to be benefited in any way, the holders of taxable property in this District? Very little. The saloon-keepers will not pay any extra license; the hotel-keepers will not pay any extra tax. Yet gentlemen say here that this expense should be saddled upon the people of this District. Oh, miserable economy and parsimony. You can vote away money here by the thousands of dollars for the Kiskiminetas, and the Pochunk, and Elk River and a thousand other little streams; and you say that that is all right, because it is to be expended in your district and it will help re-elect you to Congress.

Mr. KENNA. And help you, too.

Mr. NEAL. My friend from West Virginia [Mr. KENNA] is interested in that. And then there is the Guyandotte, too.

A MEMBER. Where is that?

Mr. NEAL. In West Virginia somewhere. And here to-day, without taking a vote one way or the other, we have voted away thousands of dollars of the people's money upon the sundry civil appropriation bill.

A MEMBER. And we have not got through the bill yet.

Mr. NEAL. And by the time we pass upon the bill finally there will be $20,000,000 of the people's money voted away. And yet members who vote for it will do so because it is for their constituents.

Now, the people of this District have no voice in their own government, and they have nothing to say as to who shall represent them on this floor. They have, according to the views expressed by the majority of this House, no rights that we are bound to respect. And we will go home and tell our constituents that we are great big men; that we have saddled upon the District of Columbia half the expense for a police force for this inauguration. It reminds me very much of what I used to hear in my boyhood days—taken from "Mother Goose," I believe:

Little Jack Horner
Sat in a corner
Eating his Christmas pie;
He stuck in his thumb
And pulled out a plum
And said "What a big boy am I!"

[Laughter.]

So members on this floor, when they go home, can say to their constituents, "We have put this unjust taxation on the people of the District; we are great big men; we ought to be allowed to go back and save more money for the people."

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. Chairman, I think we ought to make ample provision for the protection of the people of the United States against the lawlessness and crime of Washington City. In the first place, the Government ought to be protected against the Kiskiminetas, for which a dollar was never appropriated, but the name of which has profoundly alarmed members of Congress. And not only this House and the Senate, but the Executive, the judiciary, the Army, and Navy, and the people of the country ought to be protected against the Kiskiminetas! There ought also to be a sufficient police force to protect them against the Guyandotte. That is another alarming feature of our times.

The District has a permanent police force of about two hundred with a suitable constabulary force; but for the protection of the seat of Government, of the President and the heads of Departments, the judiciary and so much of the Army and Navy as may be here there ought to be an ample police force. Then, sir, we are to have a great royal fête—nothing like the occasion when President Jefferson is said to have ridden to the Capitol, hitched his horse to a tree, and then come in and taken the oath of office. We are to have a great royal fête. There are to be triumphal arches. There is to be a military parade, embracing not only representatives of the regular Army, but the militia of the country. These ought to be protected by a sufficient police force. The Navy is to be here. The Navy ought also to be protected by a police force.

Mr. Chairman, is it possible that here at the capital of the country, in a time of profound peace, with an ample police force for ordinary purposes, we cannot inaugurate a President without billeting upon the Treasury three hundred more men to have their expenses paid for twenty days?

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. NEAL] feels a very profound interest in the oppressed people of the District of Columbia where millions of money are disbursed annually, where the Government takes upon itself the principal expenditures for the city government, where the citizens are relieved from taxation by putting it upon the people of other portions of the country, in plain violation of every principal of right and justice. I do not propose to sanction any such thing myself. I will not vote for three hundred additional policemen; nor will I vote to keep any extra force employed for twenty days; for I do not think the danger which gentlemen apprehend will last that long. I believe the Army and Navy and the militia will get away from here in less than twenty days, and when they are away the people will get along just as they always have done. If something were necessary to protect, then in consideration of their weakness, their incapacity to take care of themselves, possibly our fears might be appealed to and our sympathies worked on until we would do something for them.

Mr. MANNING. I would like to ask a question for information. Is this an unusual increase? Is this the first time that a provision of this kind has been adopted? Perhaps I ought more properly to address this question to the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. REAGAN. I do not remember what was done in respect to this matter four years ago.

Mr. HUNTON. If I had the floor, I would answer the gentleman.

Mr. REAGAN. If this were an ordinary provision, which I suppose it hardly is——

Mr. MANNING. I understand it is; that is the reason of my inquiry.

Mr. REAGAN. If it were the rule to appoint these supernumerary policemen, I would not sanction such an abuse by any act or vote of mine. I do not believe it necessary. I think it is a reflection upon the people of this country and the people of this city to say that it is necessary to add three hundred men to the ordinary police force of two hundred with all the constabulary and other elements here at all times, ready to aid in the preservation of public peace and order. I do not think this city is more lawless than other places. I see as little lawlessness here as I see or hear of elsewhere. People who go along and attend to their business, who go where they ought to go, are in very little trouble; and those who go where they ought not to go, where they have no business, had better take care of themselves.

Mr. HUNTON. I am very much surprised at the character of the opposition to the bill before the House. The truth is, sir, that whenever anything is brought before this House—and I am mortified to say it—there seems to be a desire on the part of some members to assail it; and I dare to say, without casting reflection upon any gentleman upon this floor, to assail it without rhyme or reason. I might sympathize, and probably do, with the views expressed by the gentleman from Tennessee and the gentleman from Texas, and if I had my way I might regulate the inaugural ceremonies according to the taste of these two gentlemen. I might be willing, with them, to have the Government return to the old days of simplicity, but, unfortunately for these two gentlemen and myself, we have not got a word to say on the subject.

Mr. MILLS. Is there any assurance either one of them will be permitted to march in the processsion? [Laughter.]

Mr. HUNTON. That is very doubtful. I will say further, as disagreeable as the inaugural ceremonies on the vast scale that the preparations seem to indicate may be to those gentlemen, my two friends, one from Tennessee and the other from Texas, must recollect that we cannot have things exactly as we want them. They know as well as myself, they will have to accept the situation when the situation is most disagreeable to us, and it is not how we would have the inaugural ceremonies, but what we are to do in the condition of affairs which will be upon the people of this District on the 4th of March next and the days preceding and succeeding it. We have to accept the situation. The inaugural ceremonies have not been arranged by the people of the District of Columbia, nor by the District government, nor by the property-holders and tax-payers.

Mr. SAMFORD. Then by whom have they been arranged?

Mr. HUNTON. By a committee of politicians, nineteen-twentieths of whom have no interest, so far as property is concerned, in this District.

Mr. SAMFORD. Are they not citizens of this District?

Mr. HUNTON. They are not. The citizens of the District have had but little to do with it; that is, the property-holders and tax-payers of Washington and Georgetown have had little to do with it. It is arranged like all previous inaugural ceremonies by committees and organizations of politicians of the dominant party, the party that will be inaugurated into power on the 4th of March next.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. HUNTON. Certainly.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I saw it stated that there will probably be fifty thousand people from my section and other portions of the country, and I want to know from the gentleman from Virginia whether he thinks it fair to have an extra force of police to interfere with the thieves and pickpockets attracted here to this city to ply their vocation? [Laughter.]

Mr. HUNTON. If I listen to the debate here to-night I may be able to say to the gentleman from Illinois it appears to be unfair; but I do not regard it in that way myself. I believe it is the duty of the Government, of the legislature of the people, which, so far as this District is concerned, is the Congress of the United States, to protect the people.

Mr. ATKINS. I trust the gentleman will agree before he takes his seat to reduce the number to two hundred and the time to fifteen days.

Mr. HUNTON. I have given this subject a good deal more attention than my friend from Tennessee. If he had given this subject one-half the attention I have I would be willing to defer to his better judgment; but while he has been engaged in the Committee on Appropriations expending millions of dollars for the support of the Federal Government I have been trying to see what was necessary for this District and for the protection of its people in view of the immense crowd which will be here on the 4th of March next.

I obtained my information, Mr. Chairman, to some extent from Major Morgan, one of the commissioners of the District, who himself for a long time was at the head of the police force here—a most excellent gentleman, who does not want any force that is unnecessary. He tells me that three hundred policemen will scarcely suffice, and he asked for four hundred. I would be derelict to my duty and I should feel actually responsible in some way for the crimes committed in this District, if any should occur during that period, if I denied to the people of the District and those from other parts of the country assembled here on that occasion a force of police less than was sufficient for their protection.

Mr. SPARKS. Would it not be satisfactory to fix the time at ten days?

Mr. HUNTON. If the gentleman had remained silent a moment I would have come to that. The Senate has fixed it at twenty days from the 20th of February. Now, six days must elapse, as this is the 23d, before the bill can become a law, and these policemen therefore can only be appointed for ten or twelve days. That would bring it to the 27th or 28th of February before they can be appointed. They cannot run longer than twenty days from the 20th; so that it will not be over twelve or thirteen days at the outside from the time they are appointed that they can receive pay.

Mr. McMILLIN. If the gentleman from Virginia will allow me, I have an amendment which I desire to offer, and which will cover perhaps the point which is complained of here.

Mr. HUNTON. I have no objection to having it read for information.

Mr. McMILLIN. I propose to insert "to serve for ten days from the 26th of February," instead of twenty days.

Mr. HUNTON. The objection to that is that if the amendment prevails it sends the bill back to the Senate for their approval.

Mr. McMILLIN. It can be passed in an hour.

Mr. HUNTON. And when it will get through the Senate God only knows.

Mr. McMILLIN. They can pass it in a few minutes.

Mr. HUNTON. You suppose so. They supposed that about our House when this bill was sent here. But it has been upon our table for ten days and we have not acted upon it yet. Now, if it went to the Senate it is very probable that the Senate would disagree and send it back to the House in a modified form. A conference committee would have to be appointed. The conferees would meet and report to the two Houses, and the inaugural ceremonies would be upon us before a single policeman could be appointed.

I beg gentlemen to think of it. If we had thirty days to think of this matter it might be well enough, but we have not the time. If we mean to give additional protection to this people let us do it to-night or deny it altogether. If it is wrong, deny it; if it is right, give it now by passing the Senate bill.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] I believe says that this is an unusual proceeding. Why do we demand this increase of police now? he asks. Why, Mr. Chairman, gentlemen are very poorly informed on the subject to ask such a question as that. At the last inauguration, when the crowd here was not, perhaps, as one to ten as large as there is reasonable ground to expect will be here on the 4th of March, there were some two hundred additional policemen appointed around this very Capitol who were paid by the Government of the United States.

Mr. COBB. For one day.

Mr. HUNTON. More than one day.

Mr. COBB. I beg pardon, one day.

Mr. HUNTON. I hope the gentleman will permit me to proceed.

Mr. COBB. I would like to ask the gentleman if he knows how much money was appropriated to pay them?

Mr. HUNTON. I do not.

Mr. COBB. I do.

Mr. HUNTON. Very well; you asked me a question and I said I did not know. Now, if you will wait until I get through——

Mr. COBB. If you desire to know I will read you the amount.

Mr. HUNTON. I beg the gentleman not to interrupt me.

Mr. BLOUNT. I understand that there were only one hundred additional policemen appointed on that day, not two hundred.

Mr. HUNTON. Very well, one hundred. But there was also an additional police force authorized to be employed in the city during that time as well as at the Capitol; and not one dollar of that money, so far as I am informed, was charged upon the people of the District of Columbia. It was all paid by the General Government, as it should have been under such circumstances.

We are told, sir, that the people make money by these inauguration ceremonies. That the hotel-keepers, the dram sellers, the managers of the inaugural ball, and the boarding-house keepers all make money. But what part of the tax do they pay? That is a question that should be considered in this connection. I assert that they pay a very small proportion of the total tax collected here. The bulk of the expense that is demanded to be met here for this additional police force is to come out of the property-holders of the District, who do not make a dollar, but who actually lose money by the inaugural ceremonies. And is it right, is it just—I put it to you as fair men—to impose this additional tax, this unusual burden upon them? They are not interested in bringing this great crowd of people here. They come to witness a national ceremony, in which the people of this District are not personally or politically even interested, I may say. Certainly they are no more interested than any other citizens of the Government.

Mr. WARNER. Is not that true of every assemblage of citizens in any city in the country?

Mr. HUNTON. To a certain extent. But I will refer the gentleman to Cincinnati in your own State, where the Legislature provides to meet such contingencies.

Mr. WARNER. But Cincinnati pays for it.

Mr. HUNTON. I beg the gentleman's pardon. The Legislature provides by authorizing the city of Cincinnati to provide for it. But there is no authority here to provide for it. There is no authority outside of whatever the two Houses of Congress may choose to do in the premises.

Mr. WARNER. The two Houses can certainly arrange in reference to requiring it to be paid for by the people who are alone interested.

Mr. HUNTON. Well, I am not on that question just at present.

But I say that it is not right to saddle upon the people here the cost of additional policemen to protect the citizens from a distance and to protect the property-holders here, on that day, and to protect their persons and property from criminals who will congregate here from all portions of the country.

Another word. We know, all of us who are here to-night, that for twelve long months the people of this District have been loudly crying for more policemen at the hands of the two Houses of Congress. The demand for it has been long and loud. Their persons were not secure. Their property was not secure; their wives and their daughters were not secure. And yet for twelve long months we have been begging at the hands of the two Houses of Congress an increase for the police force for ordinary purposes, and have not got it. And now, when a crowd of from fifty to one hundred thousand strangers will congregate in the city of Washington, making it absolutely necessary there should be protection to the people of the District, we are told the people of the District who did not bring that crowd here should pay half the expenses.

My friend from Indiana [Mr. COBB] says the District is the most favored community on the earth, and my friend from Texas echoes the statement. I take issue with them. Those gentlemen opposed this organic law. And no matter what comes up in this House with regard to the District of Columbia the gentleman from Indiana and the gentleman from Kentucky at once attack the organic law which has been the law for nearly three years, and surely has been the law long enough to have silenced opposition to the passage of it.

The gentleman from Indiana says the people here have the jails furnished for them. I ask, is there another community in this country that has furnished jails for the Federal courts? The gentleman says they have a lunatic asylum furnished for them. Well, that lunatic asylum is open to the whole people of the United States.

Mr. BLOUNT. Oh, no.

Mr. HUNTON. It is open to the Army and Navy, I believe, and to the people of the District. So that, when you come to analyze these points, you find the District is not favored in these matters. At any rate it is in accordance with the organic law, which prescribes what shall be appropriated for, and what the District shall contribute and pay.

Now, I say that when we come to discuss a question of this sort the point that should address itself to our minds is, whether what is here proposed be necessary or not. Is it necessary? Well, sir, from all the information I get, I say it is absolutely necessary. Ought we to do this? In my opinion, if we do not do it, we fail to discharge our duties to the people of the District of Columbia and to the vast crowd of our constituents that will be here on that occasion.

Well, now, Mr. Chairman, if this bill becomes a law these policemen cannot be in office over ten or twelve days, and surely that is not too long a period to give protection not only to the people of this District, but to the people who come here to witness the inaugural ceremonies. It is not a ceremony got up by the people of the District nor by the government of the District. Neither the people nor the commissioners of the District have anything on earth to do in regulating the inaugural proceedings. I want this House to pass the Senate bill to give protection, not only to the people of the District, but to the vast crowd of strangers who will be here on that occasion.

If the House does not pass this bill I can stand it as well as any other gentleman. And of course while I think it is our duty to pass the bill, if this committee differ with me in opinion I will submit with the greatest cheerfulness.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. Chairman, authority to appoint additional policemen undoubtedly must proceed from Congress. I do not question the propriety of appointing additional policemen, but I do think they should be paid just as the present policemen are paid. It is an addition to the force that should be paid as they would be paid in any other city of the land when there is an assemblage of people in that place requiring an additional police force. I do not think we should depart from that well settled-policy of action everywhere.

Mr. COBB. I will only occupy a short time on this occasion. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HUNTON] says the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] and myself have always complained of the organic law that governs this District. I am not complaining of it; but I insist on its enforcement. And I am sorry to say I find the gentleman from Virginia always in opposition to the letter and spirit of that law in trying to throw the proportion of the expenses that belongs to the District of Columbia upon the United States. It was in pursuance of the letter and spirit of that law to which he says I am usually opposed that I introduced the amendment which is now pending, so as to carry out that law in letter and in spirit, making the revenues of the District bear their equal proportion of the expenses under that law with the revenues of the Government of the United States.

Now, Mr. Chairman, one word with regard to this police force. I am one who does not believe that this police force will be needed for any twenty days. Neither do I believe it will be needed for ten days. The people that come here will mainly be people that come from law-abiding jurisdictions, and they will come here to obey the law. I know, or at least I expect there will be bad men here. But this is opening up this question in a very different way from that in which it has ever been presented before.

Why, sir, four years ago gentlemen will remember the intense excitement that then prevailed over the inauguration of a President. It began weeks and weeks before the inauguration and it continued at fever heat. And yet what did the Government of the United States do? It appropriated the large and enormous sum of $1,000 "or so much thereof as might be necessary," to keep the peace on inauguration day. But now the gentleman from Virginia comes here and asks for more than $20,000. He asks to have three hundred policemen appointed at $2 a day, making $600 a day for twenty days.

Mr. NEAL. That is only $12,000. Where does the gentleman's $20,000 come in?

Mr. COBB. I beg the gentleman's pardon. The bill provides for twenty days.

Mr. NEAL. We do not provide for twenty days now.

Mr. COBB. That is what the bill provides for; I am talking about that. The bill provides for an expenditure of $600 a day for twenty days or more, and that will be over $12,000, if I can count.

Mr. NEAL. Just $12,000.

Mr. COBB. At $600 a day?

Mr. NEAL. Yes, for twenty days.

Mr. COBB. We will say $12,000. In four years we increase the amount for this purpose just twelve times the amount in money, and increase the numbers of the police. I ask gentlemen to consider this matter. Do you believe it is necessary to have three hundred additional police? I presume that Major Morgan, who is the informant of my friend from Virginia, [Mr. HUNTON,] was the chief of police at that time, though I am not certain about that. He kept the peace at that time for a thousand dollars. He now wants $12,000.

Now, I insist that this matter ought to be considered as well as other matters. It is not right that we should violently rush into an expenditure of money that is unnecessary, notwithstanding the commissioners of the District may have recommended it. My experience with the commissioners has been that they are not very particular, I am sorry to say, about the expenditure of money when it is to come out of the Treasury of the United States. They are willing to let it go out by the thousands and hundreds of thousands of dollars. That is my experience, and I have had some experience in regard to them since I have been in Congress. Here is the bill which was passed four years ago, providing for additional police in this District:

To enable the Metropolitan police board of the District of Columbia to employ additional police force on inauguration day, $1,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Additional police for one day was enough then, and I will say to gentlemen that we are not going to have a hundred thousand additional people in this city for more than one or two days. They will come here mainly on the Wednesday and Thursday before inauguration, and on the morning of inauguration day. The night of inauguration day will find every railroad train leaving the city loaded down with people going home again.

Mr. BREWER. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. COBB. Certainly.

Mr. BREWER. I would like to know how many were employed as extra police four years ago.

Mr. COBB. Certainly not more than would take a thousand dollars to pay for.

Mr. BREWER. I want to ask the gentleman another question. Does he not know that one reason why the Metropolitan police board did not employ more police then was that a hundred thousand men were tendered by a gentleman from Kentucky to protect the city?

Mr. COBB. They may have been tendered, but they were not needed.

Mr. BURROWS. You say they were not needed?

Mr. COBB. I suppose they were not.

Mr. HUBBELL rose.

Mr. ATKINS. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ATKINS. I want to know what is going on.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HUBBELL] has the floor.

Mr. HUBBELL. I do not desire to take up much time in discussing this bill, but it occurs to me that gentlemen who have engaged in this debate hardly understand the true question at issue.

The fact is that the people of the United States elect a President once in four years. The people of the District have no interest in it particularly; they do not vote for President. Another fact is that to the people of the United States belong the capital of the nation, all the public buildings and all the public grounds in this city. And another fact is that there is a growing desire among the people throughout all the States to visit this capital city of theirs, to see the public buildings and to witness the National Legislature in session.

Another fact, too, is cropping up; and that is that whenever we inaugurate a President of the United States it is determined by the people to be a good time for them to visit the capital city. While a committee may have been organized for the purpose of carrying out the proper inauguration ceremonies, still, if that had not been done, thousands and thousands of the people of this country would visit the capital city at this particular time to witness the inauguration ceremonies.

Now, what right have the people who come here? They have the right to demand that the Congress of the United States shall give them absolute protection, both to life and property. The people have no right to demand that from the District government; it is not a District affair. The people of the country come here simply to witness the inauguration ceremonies. And because the last election was conducted so fairly on both sides, I believe that the result is accepted without question, because the inauguration is to take place with the utmost good feeling, every man knows that the crowd to come here will be quadruple, nay, more than quadruple any crowd that has ever before visited the capital.

Now, are the property-holders of this District instrumental in their coming here? Not at all. They come here because they have an interest in this Government, because they believe in our free institutions, because they want to witness the peaceful ceremony of the inauguration of a Chief Magistrate, who shall hold his office for four years. Now, have they a right to protection? If so, of whom should they demand it? It seems to me they should demand it of the Congress of the United States. This is an extraordinary occasion. It is not simply a gathering of the people of this District; it is a gathering of your constituents and of mine, who come here to witness the inauguration ceremonies. It is our duty when they come here to see that the city is sufficiently policed, so that they shall be safe in property and life. If that is so, it seems to me that this bill is exactly right in all its provisions.

Owing to the fact that the passage of the bill has been delayed longer than was expected, the employment of these policemen cannot exceed twelve days. Probably the bill will become a law in time for them to have about ten days' employment. Now, any man who knows anything about this District, any man who knows anything about the crowds who assemble here, any gentleman who has noticed how the city is already filling up with strangers, must see the necessity for having a larger police force than ordinary, if he desires protection for himself and family. I hope the bill will pass; and I believe the expense ought to be paid out of the funds of the General Government.

Mr. NEAL. I want to make one statement in correction of what has been said by the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. COBB.] In 1876, by a resolution of the two Houses, joint or concurrent, the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House and the Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate were each authorized to employ fifty extra policemen, one hundred in all, who were paid $100 a month, $3.33 a day, making $10,000. One thousand dollars additional was appropriated for the city police, making an expense of $11,000. Now, if we pass this bill as it comes from the Senate, the largest number of days these policemen can serve will be about twelve, so that the expense would be $7,200. This is the pitiful sum which my friend from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] wants to save, in order to appropriate it for digging out some canal or little creek, or improving some harbor that was never heard of until he brought it up.

Now, Mr. Chairman, in 1876 there might have been a reason which does not now exist for the employment of extra police, for I have a very distinct recollection that the great, the brave, the fiery Brigadier or Major-General Watterson threatened to march upon Washington with 100,000 democrats for the purpose of inaugurating as President a man who was never elected——

Mr. CLYMER. Hayes?

Mr. NEAL. And therefore it was necessary probably to have those one hundred policemen in order to drive that great army of Kentuckians back to the swamps from which they came.

Mr. COBB. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. NEAL] has called our attention to a resolution which I have not been able to find. I find that for the special police he speaks of—I suppose it is the Capitol police—the Clerk of the House of Representatives and the Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate were allowed the sum of $1,800.

Mr. NEAL. I have here the figures of the Sergeant-at-Arms who hired the men and paid them.

Mr. CLYMER. And here is the appropriation out of which he paid them.

Mr. NEAL. He did not pay them with $1,800.

Mr. COBB. This is all I can find in the statutes; and I think I have not overlooked anything. If the gentleman from Ohio can find the provision to which he refers, I will be obliged to him.

The CHAIRMAN. The first question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. COBB,] which will be read:

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, The expense of said police shall be paid one-half out of the revenues of the District and the other half out of the revenues of the United States.

The question being taken, the amendment was agreed to; there being—ayes 33, noes 24.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I move to amend by striking out the words "twenty days from the 20th of February" and inserting "ten days from the 26th of February."

A MEMBER. "Ten days from the passage of this act."

Mr. MCMILLIN. Well, that seems to be the sense of the committee, and I have no objection, for the effect is the same. It has already been determined that the District as well as the Government shall pay a portion of this expense; and in behalf of the District and the Government I insist that there is no need of these police being employed fifteen or twenty days at $600 a day. It is true that a part of the time embraced in the bill has already elapsed. It is necessary to adopt an amendment of this kind in order, in the first place, to remove all doubt as to whether there could be an employment of twenty days; and, in the second place, to insure that these men shall be no longer employed than is necessary. I need not take up the time of the committee, after the discussion that we have had, by commenting upon the length of time for which police have been employed heretofore. It has been the custom in the past to employ them for a less period than ten days. I think ten days will be ample.

It is said that there will be a great many people here. It is true that many of our republican friends are to be here in force; but we do not suppose they will be so boisterous and lawless as to require a policeman to every person. It is not necessary to have a policeman on every square foot of the District.

Mr. VALENTINE. This extra police force is not for the republicans who are to turn out on inauguration day, but for the others.

Mr. MCMILLIN. We have it from Scripture that "the wicked flee when no man pursueth." I suppose it is on that principle, if this extra police force is needed, for the republicans attending the inaugural ceremonies.

Mr. CONGER. When the gentleman says that the wicked flee when no man pursueth does he mean when a democrat is here that he is no man?

Mr. MCMILLIN. Of course, the facts would not justify me in applying the "no man" part of my quotation to democrats, and I did not; but my intention was to apply the "wicked" paragraph to a portion of the gentleman's political associates—speaking of their politics. I think ten days is ample time. Immense arches have already been constructed here; we have great preparations made for the coming inauguration; we have an Appian Way made of the Avenue for the passage of this most ostentatious inauguration procession—more like the pomp of a despotism than the simplicity of a republic.

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. DIBRELL. I move to strike out "three hundred" and insert "one hundred."

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. ATKINS. I move to amend by providing that twenty of these policemen shall be under the direction of the Architect of the Capitol and the Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate and the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House.

Mr. HUNTON. Say that twenty be detailed for duty at the Capitol.

Mr. ATKINS. I am not speaking of the patronage at all, but I think that twenty should be under the control of the officers of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the amendment?

Mr. ATKINS. That twenty of this extra police force shall be detailed for duty at the Capitol.

A MEMBER. Say fifty.

Mr. ATKINS. No; that twenty shall be detailed for duty at the Capitol and placed under the control of the Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate, and the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House, and the Architect of the Capitol.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HUNTON. I move that the committee rise and report the bill and amendments to the House.

The motion was adopted.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. STEVENSON reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had, according to order, had under consideration a bill (S. No. 2184) to authorize the commissioners of the District of Columbia to appoint additional policemen for temporary service in the District, and for other purposes, and had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments.

The amendments were agreed to in gross.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HUNTON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

INAUGURATION DAY A LEGAL HOLIDAY.

Mr. SLEMONS. I am directed by the Committee on the District of Columbia to move to discharge the House Calendar from the further consideration of a bill (H. R. No. 7118) to declare inauguration day a legal holiday in the District of Columbia.

The bill, which was read, provides that, in addition to the legal holidays heretofore established in the District of Columbia, the day designated for the inauguration of the President of the United States and called Inauguration day be made and declared a legal holiday in said District.

Mr. VALENTINE. I have an amendment to offer which meets with the approval of the Committee on the District of Columbia, as I am informed by the chairman of the committee.

Mr. SLEMONS. I desire to say this bill was prepared at the special request of the bankers and the business men of Washington who believe on inauguration day they could not prosecute their business without great risk. This provides for an emergency which occurs only once in four years.

Mr. VALENTINE. I move to amend by providing that the employés of the District of Columbia be paid for that day.

Mr. SLEMONS. I object to that.

Mr. VALENTINE. I am informed by the gentleman from Virginia, chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia, that this amendment was considered by that committee and agreed to.

Mr. SLEMONS. There are thousands of people outside of the departments who are not paid anything for that day.

Mr. HUNTON. I beg to say to my colleague of the committee, this amendment was proposed in the committee and adopted.

Mr. ATKINS. I wish to ask if they are paid for other holidays.

Mr. HUNTON. If this amendment prevails it only affects two classes of employés—those employed in the Government Printing Office and the Bureau of Engraving and Printing. All the others would get their money without such a provision.

Mr. ATKINS. Then they shall all be put upon an equal footing.

Mr. VALENTINE. They represent the poorest class of employés in the city. They ought to have it as well as those who receive a higher pay.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield for the amendment?

Mr. SLEMONS. No; I demand the previous question.

Mr. WARNER. I am opposed to it. Once this thing is done, they will want to extend it all over the country.

Mr. ATKINS. The question is not whether there shall be a holiday or not, but whether when the holiday has been established these employés shall all be placed upon an equal footing.

Mr. VALENTINE. That is it.

Mr. ATKINS. I say it is only right that if Congress establishes the holiday, then these employés mentioned by the gentleman from Virginia ought to be paid equally with the other employés who receive a higher salary.

Mr. HUNTON. If the previous question is ordered, will that cut off the amendment?

The SPEAKER. It will.

Mr. VALENTINE. I hope the gentleman will let us have a vote on the amendment.

Mr. SLEMONS. Let me answer for a moment. When this bill was referred to me, I reported in favor of its passage. About one week afterward these poor people, about fifteen hundred, came in and bulldozed the committee. Now, sir, there are 20,000 poor people outside of those employés who do not have any holidays at all.

Mr. WARNER. And they have to pay for those who do have holidays.

Mr. SLEMONS. I am in favor of making this a legal holiday, but I am not in favor of paying these employés.

Mr. HUNTON. Perhaps the gentleman from Arkansas is somewhat mistaken as to the exact number of people. There were not 1,500, certainly not 1,500 in the committee room at one time. [Laughter.] Now, Mr. Speaker——

Mr. CLYMER. Will the gentleman answer me this question. Are not the employés of the Public Printing Office and Bureau of Engraving and Printing paid by the piece?

Mr. HUNTON. Some are, and some are not.

Mr. COBB. The majority of them are paid by the piece.

Mr. CLYMER. If they are paid by the piece, or if the most of them are, why should we pay them for a day when they do no work at all?

Mr. HUNTON. Because you won't let them work that day.

Mr. CLYMER. But I want to know the fact whether they are paid by the piece or not. It is asserted by several gentlemen around me here in conversation that many of them are paid by the piece.

Mr. COBB. Nearly all of them are paid by the piece.

Mr. REAGAN. I move to lay the whole subject on the table.

Mr. WARNER. That is right.

Mr. HUNTON. Mr. Speaker, I do trust that gentlemen around me will not undertake to take me off the floor in this manner.

Mr. SLEMONS. I demand the previous question.

Mr. HUNTON. Am I not entitled to the floor?

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Arkansas in charge of the bill as having control of the floor.

Mr. HUNTON. Then will not the gentleman from Arkansas yield to me?

Mr. SLEMONS. Except that I move the previous question on you. [Laughter.]

Mr. HUNTON. If you will allow me to have the floor for a while I will yield to you so that you can move the previous question after I get through.

Mr. SLEMONS. Then I will give you three minutes.

Mr. HUNTON. Mr. Speaker, if I can have the attention of the House for three minutes, I think that will be sufficient.

The SPEAKER. The Chair requests the House to be in order so that the gentleman from Virginia can be heard.

Mr. BREWER. Is the previous question demanded?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas has demanded the previous question, but has yielded to the gentleman from Virginia, and the gentleman from Virginia is entitled to the floor, and is entitled to be heard without disturbance.

Mr. HUNTON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say in the three minutes allowed me, that if this day is made a legal holiday and these employés paid during that day, it only puts them upon an equal footing with the other employés of the Government who are employed by the month or year and are allowed this holiday and their pay goes on. Now, is it just or fair to say that these working people shall be stopped from their work by law passed by Congress and their pay cut off under such circumstances? I do not see the justice of it, and I hope the House will not refuse what seems to be only a fair and equitable provision.

Mr. REAGAN. I move to lay the whole subject on the table.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas demands the previous question upon the bill, pending which the gentleman from Texas moves to lay the whole subject on the table.

Mr. CONGER. I hope the friends of the workingmen will now rally.

Mr. VALENTINE. The friends of the working women too.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 16, noes 30.

So (no further count being demanded) the motion to lay on the table was not agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now recurs upon the demand for the previous question on the bill.

The previous question was not ordered.

Mr. VALENTINE. Now I offer the amendment to the bill, and ask the attention of the House for a moment. I will be very brief. I desire to say that Congress at its last session undertook to place the employés of these various bureaus upon an equal footing with other employés in the District of Columbia. But by an omission they left out one or two holidays provided for by law. If this inauguration day is made a holiday it is left out, for it is not mentioned in the law of Congress, and also the 30th of May, Decoration Day, which was by omission left out of the bill. This amendment provides that the employés shall be paid for these two days. These employés of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing and of the Government Printing Office are the poorest paid class of employés in the city. Many of them are women, working on a very small salary per day. If we now make a holiday of the 4th of March we will simply turn them out of their employment for that day whether they want to work or not. Many no doubt would like to take the holiday, but from necessity will be compelled, if they are allowed to do it, to continue their work instead of taking the holiday. But if you make it a legal holiday and close up the Departments, you force them to take a holiday whether they want to do it or not; and I think under such circumstances it is but fair and just that they should be paid for it.

Mr. BREWER. I offer an amendment to the amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Michigan.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided further, That no spirituous or other intoxicating liquors shall be sold in the District of Columbia on the 4th of March, 1881.

Mr. VALENTINE. I make the point of order that the amendment is not germane to this bill or the pending amendment. I have no particular objection to the amendment myself, but I do not want to encumber the amendment which I have proposed and which ought to pass.

Mr. BREWER. I am rather surprised that the gentleman raises the point of order upon the amendment I propose.

Mr. MILLS. Let the amendment be again reported.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. BREWER. We have to-night voted an extra police force for the District.

Mr. VALENTINE. Is not the point of order pending?

Mr. BREWER. I did not understand that it was raised.

Mr. VALENTINE. I did raise it.

Mr. BREWER. But I understood the gentleman waived it.

Mr. VALENTINE. Well, I will withdraw the point of order. My only reason for making it was because I was afraid the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan might kill my amendment.

Mr. BREWER. I am surprised the gentleman from Nebraska should think this would kill his amendment. We have voted to-night three hundred policemen for ten or twelve days during the gathering that is to take place here in connection with the inauguration. I apprehend it would have been entirely unnecessary for us to have voted any extra policemen if we had adopted a measure of this kind to be in operation during the pendency of those ten or twelve days. The saloons, the whisky and the other liquors that are drunk create the extra trouble that requires the extra police force on occasions like this. I therefore think my amendment should be adopted.

I believe we can do nothing here to-night that will so thoroughly establish peace and good order in Washington on the 4th of March as by adopting this amendment. In my own State of Michigan we have a law on our statute-book which prohibits the sale of liquor of any kind or the opening of bars or saloons upon any holiday or on any day on which there is held an election, and I know of no reason why such a measure should not be adopted here to-night to apply to the city of Washington and the District of Columbia. I believe the better class of the citizens of this District desire it. I believe that the better class of the people all over this country, who will come to this city to be here on the 4th of March, desire the adoption of some such measure as this. And I was surprised when I heard my friend from Nebraska, representing that great temperance constituency of his, say that by the adoption of this amendment we were to kill the one which he presented. I offer this amendment in good faith, expecting it will be adopted.

Mr. SPARKS. I presume the committee will hardly adopt that amendment, and perhaps it is needless to discuss it. It is not the first time that gentlemen have attempted to make reputation out of this thing of regulating diet and drink by law, and I think it is about time that some protest was entered against it. Mr. Speaker, you cannot and ought not by these sumptuary laws to do this. Men will exercise the privileges of men with respect to this matter. The gentleman who offers that amendment [Mr. BREWER] has doubtless, if he ever drank at all in his life, drank more spirits than I have. I have never, here nor elsewhere, gained a reputation as a drinking man, so far as spirituous drinks are concerned. But I do think that all these attempts to regulate diet or drink, or to prescribe arbitrary rules in regard to either of them, or to prohibit any or all men exercising the ordinary privileges of manhood in this respect, are far beneath the standard of legislative action that we ought to adopt in this body; and I earnestly and seriously think this whole matter ought to be sat down upon at once, and firmly.

Mr. REAGAN. I am sorry to have to disagree with my friend from Illinois. I think this is the best economic proposition that has been made. I would rather have the saloons closed on that day than have all the three hundred extra policemen. We would have better order in virtue of it. Many of the States have laws by which they close drinking establishments on election days. Illinois has; Tennessee has; Texas has; and I do not know how many other States.

Mr. VALENTINE. Nebraska has.

Mr. REAGAN. And those States that have such laws have good order.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. Let me ask the gentleman from Texas a question.

Mr. REAGAN. I have not time to yield.

Mr. SPARKS. The gentleman has mentioned my State of Illinois. There the drinking establishments are closed at the places where elections are held, but not elsewhere throughout the State, as I remember the law.

Mr. REAGAN. The fear is there will be disorder on account of there being a crowd of people here. With sober and orderly people there would be no danger. Keep them sober and orderly, and it will be all right. I would be as far as my friend from Illinois from wishing to enter on a system of regulating sumptuary matters; but I am not inclined to oppose the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan, and hope it will be adopted.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I wish to ask the gentleman from Texas a question. Does he feel it to be right and acting in good faith, after the city Government have taken the money for licenses granted to these people to exercise the privilege of selling ardent spirits and put the money in their Treasury, afterward to have a law passed prohibiting them from the exercise of a privilege which under the law has been granted to them? Would they be acting in good faith to them? Would it not be a violation of the law?

Mr. REAGAN. The courts of this country have said this is no violation of the law. It is a question of public policy under the control of the law-makers in the States and the law-makers for the District of Columbia. It is simply a police regulation in favor of good order and sobriety on an occasion when order and peace are desired by every good citizen.

Mr. COOK. The only privilege a democrat will have on that day will be to take a little drink; and this amendment seeks to take that away. [Laughter.]

Mr. CLYMER. I do not think the proposition of the gentleman from Michigan, if adopted, would be conducive either to sobriety or good order upon inauguration day. People are coming here on an unusual occasion. They are gathering from all parts of the United States; people of different habits and of different manners and of different desires. In my belief if you impose such a condition upon them during their visit here as is embraced in this amendment, it will be vicious and deleterious to good morals in its results. If you tell the people of the United States that when they come here they shall not be able to get one drop of anything to drink, you will find every train laden with men, demijohns, and bottles. [Laughter.] I believe it; I have seen it before now. That is my experience in my own State. In that State on election days all bars are closed, and for days in advance men in the towns where this prohibition is in force lay by a gallon or two of whisky, or possibly a keg of beer, and the result is that on that day there is more secret dissipation than on almost any other in the year. It is true that it is not immediately at the polls, because there the officers of the law would look to it. I repeat that in private, not near the polling places, there is more dissipation than upon almost any other day of the year. I believe it would be so in this city. I believe that most men coming here, if you adopt such a law as this, would bring with them that which would be detrimental to good order.

It is the perverse side of our nature which leads us, when the law undertakes to govern us in the exercise of what we conceive to be our private and individual rights, to endeavor to evade it. I do not think it is good policy, neither do I think it is right to attempt to impose a restriction of the kind proposed by the amendment of the gentlemen from Michigan [Mr. BREWER] upon the people of the United States who are coming here from all quarters. I do not propose to vote for any such restriction, and for myself I shall oppose it in every way that is in my power.

Mr. REAGAN. One word only. The only thing that leads me to doubt the propriety of this amendment is the fact that the House has already agreed to an additional police force of three hundred men. If we refuse to allow men to get drunk, I do not know what use there will be for that additional police force. Still, I will vote for the amendment.

Mr. BREWER. I will take but a moment of time to reply to some suggestions made by the honorable gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. CLYMER.] I was surprised at a statement made by him. I do not know how it may be in Pennsylvania, or what may be the character of its citizens, particularly on election days and holidays. I can only speak for my own State. I know it is not in Michigan as the gentleman has said it is in the State of Pennsylvania.

Many gentlemen have said here to-night that such a law existed in their own States. The State of Nebraska has been mentioned as one; the State of Illinois has been mentioned as another. I ask the Representatives from those States to say whether such a state of affairs exists upon election days and holidays in their States as has been pictured here to-night by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CLYMER] as existing in that State? I am surprised that he should characterize his constituency as he has done to-night, that he should say that they cannot go to the polls and exercise the highest right of an American citizen without bringing their demijohns with them in order that they may become intoxicated upon that occasion. I need not wonder at the character of the vote which is sometimes polled in some counties of Pennsylvania if the voters go to the polls lugging their demijohns with them.

Mr. ATKINS. Pennsylvania is a State largely republican. [Laughter.]

Mr. BREWER. But not the county which the gentleman from Pennsylvania represents; by no means. I have offered this amendment in good faith. I am surprised at the statement made by the honorable gentleman from Illinois, the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, [Mr. SPARKS,] who has stated to the House and to the country that it would be wrong for us to enact this provision and make it apply to the District of Columbia. Did the gentleman forget when he made that statement that such a law existed in his own State in regard to election days and holidays as it is proposed to enact here to-night and apply to this District?

Mr. SPARKS. Will the gentleman allow me a moment?

Mr. BREWER. Certainly.

Mr. SPARKS. No such law does exist in my State——

Mr. BREWER. Some gentleman stated so.

Mr. SPARKS. Except as regards the places where the elections are held.

Mr. BREWER. Very well; does it not also apply to holidays?

Mr. SPARKS. I think not.

Mr. BREWER. We are here making provisions for a holiday in the District. In many of the States such a law as this applies also to all holidays. Does it operate in Illinois on Sundays?

Mr. SPARKS. It does on Sundays.

Mr. BREWER. Very well. The argument has been made here by some gentleman, I do not now recollect by whom, that it would be in violation of the license imposed upon liquor sellers to enact this provision. Now if it is in violation of their license to enact such a provision as this as regards inauguration day, then it would be wrong in the same respect to prohibit the sale of liquor on Sundays, would it not? Most assuredly it would. There is an ordinance of the city, or some law, I understand, which prohibits the sale of intoxicating liquors on Sundays. Why should we not make it apply as well on holidays as on Sundays?

I wish to thank the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] for the position he has taken here and for the argument which he has made in favor of this amendment. I hope the amendment will be adopted.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. BRIGHT. I ask that it be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That no spirituous or other intoxicating liquors shall be sold in the District of Columbia on the 4th day of March, 1881.

Mr. BRIGHT. Before we vote on the amendment, I wish to inquire of the gentleman who offered it whether there is any penalty provided by existing law for the violation of the prohibition which he proposes to insert?

Mr. BREWER. I expect that our three hundred extra policemen will see that the law is carried out.

Mr. BRIGHT. The law cannot be effectual without a penalty.

The question was taken on agreeing to the amendment, and there were—ayes 37, noes 32.

Mr. CLYMER and others. No quorum.

Mr. BOUCK. I move that the House adjourn.

Mr. ATKINS. I ask unanimous consent to make a brief statement in relation to the bill passed to-night providing additional policemen. It has occurred to me that twenty policemen will be insufficient to do the work about this Capitol and the Capitol grounds, where there certainly will be a great throng. I think the number should be fifty instead of twenty, to be detailed by the Sergeants-at-Arms of the Senate and of the House and by the Architect of the Capitol.

Mr. SAMFORD. For the 4th day of March?

Mr. ATKINS. For the whole time. I ask unanimous consent that the number be changed from twenty to fifty.

Mr. SAMFORD. I object, unless it is confined to the 4th of March.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BOUCK] that the House adjourn.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 32, noes 31.

Mr. CONGER. I call the yeas and nays. I want to see whether we are to adjourn because we are afraid of a little liquor bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered, there being—ayes 13, noes 47.

Mr. ATKINS. Before the roll is called, would it be admissible for me to make the same request I did a few moments ago? I understand that the objection is withdrawn to my proposition that fifty of the three hundred extra policemen be detailed for this Capitol and the Capitol grounds.

Mr. HUNTON. I object.

The question was taken on the motion to adjourn; and there were—yeas 43, nays 33, not voting 214; as follows:

IN SENATE.

THURSDAY, February 24, 1881.

The Senate met at eleven o'clock a. m.

DEATH OF SENATOR CARPENTER.

The Chaplain, Rev. J. J. BULLOCK, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, our Heavenly Father, we adore Thee as the King eternal, immortal, and invisible, in whom we live and move and have our being, upon whom we are dependent for life and for all its blessings, and to whom we are responsible for all that we do.

We thank Thee, O God, for Thy great goodness and mercy to us, especially for Thy preservation of us during the past night, and for the light and blessings of this new day. We commit ourselves to Thy guidance and protection. Preserve us from all evil, and bestow upon us every needed blessing.

Bless, we beseech Thee, our beloved country; defend and deliver us from the dangers to which we are exposed, from ignorance and superstition, from infidelity and licentiousness. May we long be a united and happy people, a people who fear God and love righteousness. Bless, we pray Thee, our rulers, the President, the Vice-President, the Senators and Representatives in Congress, and all who are in authority. May they rule in the fear of God and for the good of the people.

Most merciful God, it hath pleased Thee in Thine inscrutable providence to remove by the hand of death one of the members of this body from the scene of his labors here; and now we pray that Thou wouldst look in tender compassion upon his bereaved family; comfort and sustain them in this hour of their sore trial, and wilt Thou enable those of us who remain to make a suitable improvement of this solemn dispensation of Thy providence. May we be sensibly reminded of the shortness and uncertainty of life and of the importance of being ever prepared for our departure, for we know neither the day nor the hour when we shall be called hence.

We commit ourselves and all that are dear to us to Thy Fatherly care. Be with us in all the trials and changes of life, and prepare us for the last sad change that awaits us upon earth, and finally receive us into Thy Kingdom above; we ask for Christ our Redeemer's sake. Amen.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I rise, Mr. President, to announce to the Senate the death of my late colleague, MATTHEW H. CARPENTER. Mr. CARPENTER died at the residence of his family, in this city, at twenty-five minutes after nine o'clock this morning.

At some convenient time hereafter the Senate will be asked to consider resolutions commemorative of his life and public services. Before offering the resolutions which I hold in my hand, I desire to express the sorrow that I feel personally at the death of my colleague and friend. I desire also to express in some slight degree the profound sorrow that the people of Wisconsin will feel at the death of their most gifted and distinguished representative.

I offer, sir, the following resolutions:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. MATTHEW H. CARPENTER, late a Senator from the State of Wisconsin.

Resolved, That a committee of five Senators be appointed by the Vice-President to take order for superintending the funeral of Mr. CARPENTER; and that as a mark of respect entertained by the Senate for his memory, his remains be removed from Washington to Milwaukee, Wisconsin, in charge of the Sergeant-at-Arms and attended by said committee, who shall have full power to carry this resolution into effect.

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate communicate the foregoing resolutions to the House of Representatives.

Resolved, That, as an additional mark of respect to the memory of Mr. CARPENTER, the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. PENDLETON. Mr. President, I am sure that every member of the Senate has received with deep sensibility the notice that is given to us of the death of Mr. CARPENTER, and that each one shares very deeply and very largely in the sentiment of sorrow expressed by his colleague. I therefore second the resolutions.

The resolutions were agreed to unanimously; and (at eleven o'clock and sixteen minutes a. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, February 24, 1881.

The House met at eleven o'clock a. m. Prayer by Rev. DAVID WILLS, Chaplain United States Army.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

FORTIFICATION APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BAKER, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported back the bill (H. R. No. 6529) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, and for the armament thereof, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, and for other purposes, with the recommendation that Senate amendments numbered 2 and 5 be concurred in and those numbered 1, 3, and 4 be non-concurred in.

The recommendations of the committee were agreed to.

Mr. BAKER moved to reconsider the vote by which the recommendations of the Committee on Appropriations were adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. DAGGETT. I ask unanimous consent to present joint resolutions from the State of Nevada.

Mr. COX. I demand the regular order of business.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WELLS. I rise to what I deem a privileged question. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SINGLETON] is confined to his room by illness and unable to attend the meetings of the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the Indian appropriation bill. I ask he be excused from further service on that committee and that the vacancy be filled by the Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection; and Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi, was excused from further service on the conference committee, and the vacancy was filled by the appointment by the Speaker of Mr. ATKINS.

MORNING HOUR.

Mr. COX. I insist on my demand for the regular order of business.

Mr. BAILEY. I move to dispense with the morning hour.

The SPEAKER. If that motion be agreed to, it will have the effect of bringing up the new rule of five objections.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 54, noes 53.

So (two-thirds not voting in favor thereof) the motion was disagreed to.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour now begins at eighteen minutes after eleven o'clock, and committees will be called for reports.

BRIDGE OVER OSAGE RIVER AT WARSAW.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio, from the Committee on Commerce, reported, as a substitute for House bill No. 6365, a bill (H. R. No. 7228) to provide for the construction of a bridge over the Osage River at Warsaw, Missouri; which was read a first and second time, referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

BRIDGE OVER MISSOURI RIVER NEAR ARROW ROCK.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio, also, from the same committee, reported, as a substitute for House bill No. 6777, a bill (H. R. No. 7229) authorizing the construction of a bridge over the Missouri River at or near Arrow Rock, Missouri; which was read a first and second time, referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

HEIRS OF RICHARD W. MEADE, DECEASED.

Mr. BRIGHT, from the Committee on Claims, reported a bill (H. R. No. 7230) for the relief of the heirs of Richard W. Meade, deceased; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

APPORTIONMENT BILL.

The SPEAKER. The call of committees has been completed.

Mr. COX. I demand the regular order of business and respectfully decline to yield to any request for unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. The regular order of business is the apportionment bill.

Mr. BURROWS. I raise the question of consideration.

The SPEAKER. The question is: Will the House proceed to the consideration of the unfinished business, which is the apportionment bill?

The House divided; and there were—ayes 108, noes 52.

Mr. BURROWS demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 143, nays 68, not voting 79; as follows:

So the motion to consider was agreed to.

During the roll-call,

Mr. CONGER said: Before the second call is proceeded with will the Chair be kind enough to state what the pending question is? Several gentlemen have come in since the call of the roll was commenced.

The SPEAKER. The question of consideration was raised by the gentleman from Michigan against the unfinished business, which is the apportionment bill.

Mr. CONGER. In favor of the appropriation bills?

Mr. COX. There is no understanding about the appropriation bills at all.

Mr. CONGER. With that understanding we will vote.

The SPEAKER. It is the question of consideration of the apportionment bill only.

The following pairs were announced from the Clerk's desk:

Mr. LORING with Mr. KENNA.

Mr. MILES with Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois.

Mr. O'CONNOR with Mr. HOUK.

Mr. NICHOLLS with Mr. JOYCE.

Mr. JAMES with Mr. O'BRIEN.

Mr. ORTH with Mr. MYERS.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

On motion of Mr. BLACKBURN, the bill (H. R. No. 6972) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, and for other purposes, was taken from the Speaker's table and the request of the Senate for a committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on said bill agreed to.

The SPEAKER appointed as managers of said conference on the part of the House Mr. BLACKBURN, Mr. BLOUNT, and Mr. CANNON of Illinois.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

On motion of Mr. COBB, the bill (H. R. No. 7035) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government for the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, was taken from the Speaker's table and the request of the Senate for a committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses agreed to.

The SPEAKER appointed as managers of said conference on the part of the House Mr. COBB, Mr. BLACKBURN, and Mr. HAWLEY.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. BURCH, its Secretary, was received, announcing that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

A bill (S. No. 769) to enable the State of Colorado to take lands in lieu of the sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections, found to be mineral lands; and

A bill (S. No. 1988) authorizing the construction of a building for the accommodation of the Congressional Library.

The message further announced that the Senate had heard with profound regret of the death of Senator CARPENTER, a member of that body from the State of Wisconsin; that arrangements had been taken for his funeral at his late residence in Milwaukee, Wisconsin; and further, as a mark of respect to his memory, that the Senate had adjourned.

APPORTIONMENT BILL.

Mr. COX. I now demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the consideration of the unfinished business.

Mr. COX. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SINGLETON] to offer an amendment.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, when the House adjourned on a previous occasion while this bill was pending, I yielded the floor to the motion to adjourn. I claim now that I am entitled to the floor upon the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that the gentleman from Illinois desires to submit an amendment.

Mr. CONGER. I object to the introduction of an amendment. We have not finished the debate upon the bill. Until that is done I object to the introduction of any amendments.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia is recognized.

Mr. COX. Is the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois considered as pending?

The SPEAKER. Objection has been made to the introduction at this time.

Mr. RYON, of Pennsylvania. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RYON, of Pennsylvania. I desire to know whether my amendment to the apportionment bill is pending before the House or not?

The SPEAKER. There is the original bill reported by the committee with an amendment to the text, a substitute, and an amendment to the substitute. The Chair is unable to say whether the proposition of the gentleman from Pennsylvania is embraced in one of these or not.

Mr. RYON, of Pennsylvania. Mine is an amendment to the bill which relates to the districting of the States.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will decide the point of order when the issue is made.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, nothing was further from my purpose than to enter into this debate. The gentlemen of the Committee on the Census, who had this matter in charge, were so well posted and so well qualified to advise the House in the premises, that I was content to leave the matter in their hands, to listen and to vote. But certain allusions to my own State and section have been made which are unfair; and there has been an attempt to apply as law pertinent to this question a decision so inapplicable and to enforce a conclusion so unjust that I ask the indulgence of the House for a reply. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SHERWIN] said:

> I cannot see, sir, any reason why this apportionment shall not be made at this session of Congress. The data upon which it is to be made are all in our possession. The calculations on which the basis of apportionment shall rest have all been made and are before us. They are clear, and every gentleman, by the expenditure of a few hours' time, can ascertain what ratio will be the most just to the different States and sections of the country, and which should therefore be adopted by us in this bill.

But the gentleman from New York [Mr. CROWLEY] objects. His alleged reasons therefor I give in his own language. After quoting section 2 of the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution, he said:

> Every apportionment bill pending in this House bases representation upon numbers only. That was the principle of the old Constitution, under which nine censuses were taken and nine apportionments made; but under section 2 of the fourteenth amendment voters as well as numbers may be taken into the account in apportioning Representatives among the respective States; and when any State denies to any of its qualified male citizens, being twenty-one years of age, the right to vote for any of the officers specified in the fourteenth amendment, in my judgment that State should be denied representation in this House in the proportion which it denies the right of voting to any of its male citizens otherwise qualified.
> Turning to the constitutions of the States, we find that Massachusetts and Connecticut disqualify citizens on educational grounds. I am not going to criticise the wisdom of those States. I am not standing here to attack either of those States or any others. * * * But let me say that while Massachusetts and Connecticut have imposed an educational qualification which debars certain citizens in those States from voting for the officers enumerated in section 2 of the fourteenth amendment, Massachusetts, Delaware, Georgia, New Hampshire, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, Tennessee, Texas, and Virginia have added a property qualification, either in regard to amount of property which the voter shall possess, or in regard to the payment of poll taxes, or county, State, or municipal taxes.

He then made long quotations from Justice Strong's opinion in Cole's case, decided by the Supreme Court of the United States in 1879. He compared the votes cast in 1876 and in 1880 in the several States in the presidential election; said that in all the Northern States the vote was increased, and in the States of South Carolina, Alabama, Virginia, Georgia, Louisiana, and Mississippi the vote was largely decreased, falling off 24,879 in Georgia, about half that number in South Carolina and Alabama, and about double that number in Mississippi and Louisiana. And from it all he drew this conclusion, namely:

> For myself, Mr. Speaker, I am in favor of having one of the committees of this Congress, or a select committee, if you please, raised for that purpose, which shall investigate the whole question of disqualification, either educational or property, in all these States of the Union where constitutional prohibitions against the right of suffrage are alleged to exist; and I would have this committee look into this whole question and report to Congress what qualifications or disqualifications exist in all sections of the country to deprive citizens of the right to vote; and then when we have a full report of the disqualifications, either educational or property, or whether by violence and oppression men are denied the right of suffrage, and all of the facts before us, it will then be within the power of Congress to go to work and consider an apportionment bill which can be based upon justice, equity, and the Constitution, based upon the voters of this country as well as upon the numbers.

The substance of this is that a State may lose some of its Representatives, first, by excluding persons from voting for want of education, for non-possession of property, or non-payment of taxes, and the like; and, second, by the fact that "by violence and oppression men are denied the right of suffrage;" and that all that is so because of the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution. The gentleman seemed to think that the right to vote at the elections named belongs to every adult male citizen of the United States and by virtue of its Constitution. And the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CALKINS] asserted that roundly. His language was:

> I do not care what may have been the narrow, the selfish, or the grand purposes of any party, that was what the amendment did; it established a national citizenship, and made it as broad as the nation. The purpose was to declare that every man, native-born or naturalized, whether among the pine trees of Maine or on the golden shores of the Pacific, whether residing among the frozen lakes of the Northwest or among the orange blossoms of Florida, was a citizen, clothed in the panoply of American citizenship.

A MEMBER. It established "manhood suffrage."

Mr. CALKINS. Yes; the fourteenth amendment had for its main object the establishment of "manhood suffrage." However lawyers may quibble or within whatsoever narrow limits try to confine it, this is the broad principle that must forever obtain in construing it.

Is that law? Let us examine it dispassionately. As Georgia is a fair sample, I will state her laws on the subject and those parts of the Constitution of the United States which are pertinent. I say nothing about the United States guaranteeing to each State a republican form of government. Each State in the old thirteen and all admitted thereafter had greater restrictions on the exercise of suffrage than any have now. They were republican in form then and of course remain so now in spite of those restrictions. By paragraph 25, bill of rights of her constitution, "all citizens of the United States resident in this State are hereby declared citizens of this State; and it shall be the duty of the General Assembly to enact such laws as will protect them in the full enjoyment of their rights, privileges, and immunities due to such citizenship."

By article 2, section 1, page 2, every elector must be a male citizen of the United States and be able to take (and take, if challenged) the following oath:

I do swear (or affirm) that I am twenty-one years of age, have resided in this State one year and in this county six months next preceding this election. I have paid all taxes which, since the adoption of the present constitution of this State, (December 5, 1877,) have been required of me, and which I have had an opportunity to pay, and I have not voted at this election.

By section 2, page 1, it is provided:

The General Assembly may provide from time to time for the registration of all electors, but the following classes of persons shall not be permitted to register, vote, or hold any office or appointment of honor or trust in this State, to wit: First, those who shall have been convicted in any court of competent jurisdiction of treason against the State, of embezzlement of public funds, malfeasance in office, bribery, or larceny, or of any crime involving moral turpitude, punishable by the laws of this State with imprisonment in the penitentiary, unless such person shall have been pardoned; second, idiots and insane persons.

I am not discussing whether these laws are wise or unwise, but simply whether by them Georgia is in any danger of losing any part of her numerical strength in this House.

The parts of the Constitution of the United States necessary to an understanding of the question are:

Article 1, section 2, paragraph 3—

Representatives and direct taxes shall be apportioned among the several States which may be included within this Union, according to their respective numbers, which shall be determined by adding to the whole number of free persons, including those bound to service for a term of years, and excluding Indians not taxed, three-fifths of all other persons. The actual enumeration shall be made within three years after the first meeting of the Congress of the United States, and within every subsequent term of ten years, in such manner as they shall by law direct.

That clause of the Constitution has been changed, as follows—by the thirteenth amendment—

SEC. 1. Neither slavery nor involuntary servitude, except as a punishment for crime whereof the party shall have been duly convicted, shall exist within the United States, or any place subject to their jurisdiction.

By the fourteenth amendment—

SEC. 1. All persons born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States and of the State wherein they reside. No State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States; nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law, nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws.

SEC. 2. Representatives shall be apportioned among the several States according to their respective numbers, counting the whole number of persons in each State, excluding Indians not taxed. But when the right to vote at any election for the choice of electors for President and Vice-President of the United States, Representatives in Congress, the executive and judicial officers of a State, or the members of the Legislature thereof, is denied to any of the male inhabitants of such State, being twenty-one years of age, and citizens of the United States, or in any way abridged, except for participation in rebellion, or other crime, the basis of representation therein shall be reduced in the proportion which the number of such male citizens shall bear to the whole number of male citizens twenty-one years of age in such State.

By the fifteenth amendment—

SEC. 1. The right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any State on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude.

And to each of these amendments is added:

The Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.

It will be seen that none of these but the fifteenth amendment mentions or even hints at the colored race. Where the words are plain we may not resort to history to explain the text is a well-known canon of construction of laws. Though their object may have been to protect the negro their language covers all citizens, and all but the fifteenth amendment are as applicable to whites as to blacks. The same Constitution covers all alike, and equally North and South. Measured by those clauses of the Constitution will such State restrictions endanger the reduction of representation in this House?

The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CALKINS] undertook to support his view by quotations from eminent men. None of them were made later than 1870. In 1874 in Minor vs. Happersett, (21 Wallace R.,) the Supreme Court of the United States held this language, in an exhaustive opinion as to how the fourteenth amendment affected suffrage:

The amendment did not add to the privileges and immunities of a citizen. It simply furnished an additional guarantee for the protection of such as he already had. No new voters were necessarily made by it. Indirectly it may have had that effect, because it may have increased the number of citizens entitled to suffrage under the Constitution and laws of the States, but it operates for this purpose, if at all, through the States and the State laws, and not directly upon the citizen.

* * * * * * * *

It is clear, therefore, we think, that the Constitution has not added the right of suffrage to the privileges and immunities of citizenship as they existed at the time it was adopted.—Ibid., 171.

They concluded thus:

Being unanimously of the opinion that the Constitution of the United States does not confer the right of suffrage upon any one, and that the Constitution and laws of the several States which commit that important trust to men alone are not necessarily void, we affirm the judgment.

Again, in 1875, in United States vs. Reese et al., (92 United States Reports, 214,) the court said:

(2) The fifteenth amendment to the Constitution does not confer the right of suffrage; but it invests citizens of the United States with the right of exemption from discrimination in the elective franchise on account of their race, color, or previous condition of servitude, and empowers Congress to enforce that right by appropriate legislation.

(3) The power of Congress to legislate at all upon the subject of voting at State elections rests upon this amendment, and can be exercised by providing a punishment only when the wrongful refusal to receive the vote of a qualified elector at such election is because of his race, color, or previous condition of servitude.

Before this amendment "it was as much within the power of a State to exclude citizens of the United States from voting on account of race, &c., as it was on account of age, property, or education. Now it is not." (Ibid., 217.)

In the Happersett case the court quoted the constitutional requirements of the original States, showed that some had moral, some educational, and all property qualifications, and declared that none of them were touched by these amendments.

Nor is this in any way shaken by the decision in Cole's case, quoted by the learned gentleman. It was charged in that indictment, that Cole "being a judge of the county court of Pittsylvania County of that State, [Virginia,] and an officer charged by law with the selection of jurors to serve in the circuit and county courts of said county in the year 1878, did then and there exclude and fail to select as grand and petit jurors certain citizens of said county of Pittsylvania of African race and black color, said citizens possessing all other qualifications prescribed by law, and being by him, the said J. D. Cole, excluded from the jury-list made out by him, as said judge, on account of their race, color, and previous condition of servitude, and for no other reason," contrary to act of Congress of March 1, 1875. (18 Statutes at Large, 336.)

It is therefore plain that the Cole case did not relate to suffrage, nor in any way change the decisions just cited on that subject.

None will deny that any State may deny the right to vote to any persons, provided that she cannot deny it to any citizen of the United States "on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude." All will admit that, with that exception, the denial or abridgment is within State control, subject only to the danger of reduction of its representation, under article 2 of the fourteenth amendment.

Let us recur to that. "But when the right to vote," at any of the elections there named, "is denied to any of the male inhabitants of such State, being twenty-one years of age and citizens of the United States, or in any way abridged except for participation in rebellion or other crime."

Defining citizens of the United States in the words of the preceding section of the fourteenth amendment, we have the persons against whom the denial or abridgment is to operate declared to be all adult male inhabitants of the State, born or naturalized in the United States and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, and not guilty of crime.

Will those who claim this as the foundation of "manhood suffrage" observe some of the difficulties of their broad construction? Suppose any hundred thousand illiterate men, born in the United States and free from crime, should settle in Massachusetts and demand the right to vote, notwithstanding they paid no tax and could not read a word of the Constitution of the United States, and should be refused—suppose this number, added to her idiots, insane, and paupers, large enough to affect her representation, should her representation be reduced? Suppose a sufficient number of naturalized foreigners in New York or citizens of this District should settle in Rhode Island and demand the right to vote simply because they were citizens of the United States, qualified under the fourteenth amendment but not qualified under the laws of that State, and be refused the right to vote, should her representation be reduced therefor?

Instead of encouraging each State to take care of its idiotic and insane, shall we have it thrusting them out of sight and away from its limits, lest their presence destroy its strength here and in the electoral college? The extreme advocates of "manhood suffrage" must say, "Yes, these denials of the right to vote must have the prescribed penalty." Again, an adult male citizen of the United States need be only an "inhabitant" of the State in which he would vote. An "inhabitant" is, according to Bouvier's Law Dictionary, "one who has his domicil in a place; one who has an actual fixed residence in a place." One's domicil is the place where he has located animo manendi. No length of time is necessary to fix inhabitancy or domicil.

May the "inhabitant" under the fourteenth amendment vote in spite of the requirement of so many months' residence? May he vote without regard to the district, parish, or county in which he lives? May the citizens of a State refuse to register when required and yet vote? The extreme advocates of "manhood suffrage" must answer that the Constitution of the United States makes the voter, and all these things are but abridgments of his right, and the States must make them at their peril.

Who then can protect the ballot-box? What regulation of the elective franchise is safe? What becomes of the fundamental thought of each State controlling its internal polity?

No, that idea is all wrong. The States ought to be liberal in this matter, but each judge for itself. Under the Constitution of the United States, no State can impair the obligation of a contract. But a State may change its statutes of limitation, may enlarge its homestead and exemptions, abolish imprisonment for debt and the like, though these things affect existing contracts. Under the Constitution of the United States Congress has exclusive control of interstate commerce. And yet a State may forbid the sale of intoxicating drinks in its limits, though it destroy the trade therein of its neighbors; may regulate the shipment and storage in its territory of gunpowder, nitro-glycerine, and other dangerous articles in spite of any injury done to the owners living in another State. So long as these things are honestly done in order to preserve its own peace and prosperity, courts uphold them notwithstanding the Constitution. And so all these prescribed qualifications of voters by State laws are not abridgments of the right to vote, but only regulations of the use of the franchise, and so long as they operate equally and upon all classes, Congress should look liberally upon them as useful and necessary safeguards for intelligent and honest voting. It has no right to punish because of them.

In the light of the same decision, let us examine their second proposition, that representation may be decreased because men are denied the right to vote by fraud, intimidation, or violence. Cole's case declared that—

> A State acts by its legislative, its executive, or its judicial authorities. It can act in no other way. The constitutional provision, therefore, must mean that no agency of the State, or of the officers or agents by whom its powers are exerted, shall deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws. Whoever by virtue of public position under a State government deprives another of property, life, or liberty, without due process of law, or denies or takes away the equal protection of the laws, violates the constitutional inhibition, and as he acts in the name and for the State, and is clothed with the State's power, his act is that of the State. This must be so or the constitutional prohibition has no meaning. Then the State has clothed one of its agents with power to annul or to evade it.
> But the constitutional amendment was ordained for a purpose. It was to secure equal rights to all persons; and to insure to all persons the enjoyments of such rights power was given to Congress to enforce its provisions by appropriate legislation. Such legislation must act upon persons, not upon the abstract thing denominated a State, but upon the persons who are the agents of the State in the denial of the rights which were intended to be secured.

Concede for this argument that the principle applies to suffrage, will any contend that any of these States has passed any law authorizing fraud, intimidation, or violence as to voters by any of its officers or agents? Mark! it must be by State action. What would be thought of democrats should they contend that New England should lose representation because, by threatening to close her shops and factories if Hancock were elected, she deprived him of votes, or that New York should suffer because John I. Davenport may have driven men from the polls by improper violence? How ridiculous would the republican be who should seek to deprive some State of a member because it might appear that many men were deterred from voting for Garfield by the infamous forgery of the Morey letter! Violence, fraud, intimidation, come from individuals. The only remedy for that is to punish their perpetrators under State and Federal laws and rob violence, fraud, and intimidation of their fruits by the power of the House to judge of the election, qualification, and return of its members.

The comparison of the votes of 1876 and 1880 made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. CROWLEY] is so utterly irrelevant that I might pass it over; but that might mislead. The country knows that in 1876 the South was impelled by what she esteemed the grievous wrongs of Grant's administration to resist all efforts to carry those States for the republican party. In 1880 all our States were free. Hayes's administration and time had subdued our passions, if you please, and allayed our fears.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. CROWLEY] boasted that the average vote of 1880 was 23,000 in each congressional district of his State. The total vote of his own district was but 21,071. Considering their relative density of population and the circumstances of each case, Georgia voted in 1880 more liberally than did New York. In Georgia the vote in the first district was 19,977, in the second, 17,913; in the fourth, 17,222; in the fifth, 19,079; in the seventh, 22,299, and in the ninth, 21,244. The vote in the others was smaller, for reasons easily explained without attributing wrong to Georgia or any one in her borders. BLOUNT'S was smallest. He had but 8,373 because he had no opposition. STEPHENS received 11,341, and but 16 were cast against him. His district contained by the last census 212,947 souls. Did he or BLOUNT obtain their election by those votes by fraud, intimidation, or violence? No one believes they did.

All this complaint against the South is unjust. The negroes in Georgia own five or six million dollars' worth of property. But it is evenly distributed and our taxes are so light that none are burdened. Very few of them are required to pay any but a poll-tax. By our constitution, article 7, paragraph 3, "no poll-tax shall be levied except for educational purposes, and such tax shall not exceed $1 annually upon each poll." Every dollar so paid is honestly devoted to educational purposes. I mention this not only because it is pertinent, but the gentleman from New York [Mr. CROWLEY] used certain language touching education to which I would call attention. It was this:

> And let me say in passing that the question of education is becoming one of the paramount questions of the present time. Thoughtful men, who are anxious for the perpetuity of our institutions, who are looking to the future welfare of this Republic, are scanning closely the Constitution to find whether or not there are any powers in it authorizing Congress to take control of the whole subject of education for the nation and for all the States of the Union.

Close scanning will discover no power in this Government to control "this whole subject of education for the nation, and for all the States of the nation." Every political party pledges itself to encourage and foster popular education. None go further than to agree that the Government may aid the States to carry on the work. Two bills are now pending on the subject, but neither goes beyond that limit. As I will have no other opportunity, I will say a few words about them.

The House bill (called the Goode bill) differs from the Senate bill in two particulars, which we propose to notice: First, under it, to work a forfeiture of its share by any State for misapplication, Congress must pronounce the judgment of forfeiture originally, instead of only having power, for one session, to reverse the judgment of forfeiture pronounced by the Commissioner of Education, as the Senate bill provides; secondly, for the first ten years it provides for the distribution of the corpus and the interest of the fund in proportion to illiteracy.

In considering the first point it will be observed that the issue is not made upon the fact that supervisory control of this matter is reserved but upon the manner of exercising that control. Neither bill gives the National Government the right to control education in the States. Both provide for turning over funds to the States to be applied under State laws. It is well enough to have the State officers make annual reports, as required by the Senate bill. These reports furnish valuable information not easily overestimated. Concede that the General Government in giving to the States has the right to prescribe the terms of the gift, and that misappropriation ought to work a forfeiture. But the question is not what terms shall she prescribe, but how shall this failure of compliance be ascertained and punished. The object of the gift is to obtain free schools where they are not and to strengthen those now in existence. It is hoped that under this suggestion, impetus, and aid the States will make larger grants and establish broader systems for educating their children. But what a blow may be struck in opposition by the fear that it is unsafe to build or enlarge a system the working of which may be destroyed or disturbed by the judgment of one man, who may act from prejudice or passion or from a mistake of law or fact! And mark, under the Senate bill that judgment must be pronounced on the 1st of September annually and can only be reversed by an appeal to Congress at its very next session in December. No notice of objections need be given to the State; no hearing is provided for except upon appeal, and then to the first sitting of a tribunal crowded with other matter which must be attended to and perhaps rent by the passions of parties contending for the prizes of a national election. I invoke no higher or graver consideration of policy in this discussion. Upon the low plane of dealing with States as we would with the most ordinary litigants the proposed method is bad in a business point of view, un-American as to practice, and unwise in policy.

But pass that by. Let us examine the other difference between the two bills. This will require some details, but they are necessary to understand the propositions.

We use only approximate figures, for accuracy is unattainable. We know the aggregate population of the States, &c., but not the school population. For statistics of illiteracy we must rely upon the census of 1870, which is notoriously incorrect as to the South. Then the income provided by these bills is uncertain. Of course, we can now consider only such as may come from the net sales of patents and of public lands. At present, the Patent Office yields a surplus; but its friends demand large expenditures for books, clerks, and space. The gross receipts from sales of public lands for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, were $1,016,506.60; the actual and estimated receipts for this year will be $1,200,000, and for the next year $1,000,000; counting out expenses, the total income from both sources may be put at $1,000,000. By the census of 1870 the total number of persons over ten years old in the United States who could not both "read and write" was 5,658,111; of these there were 4,056,005 in the fourteen late slave States, leaving in the other portions of the United States 1,602,106. One-third of this total is 1,886,037, but we will treat the country other than those fourteen States as having one-third of the illiteracy. Considering the advancement made by the slave States in education, that seems fair. At any rate it is convenient for calculation, and the result of the argument is independent of accuracy in this regard.

Now, the yield of 4 per cent. on $1,000,000 will be annually $40,000. Deducting one-third for agricultural colleges will leave $26,667 for common schools. By the Senate bill that interest only annually must, for the first ten years, be distributed throughout the Union in proportion to illiteracy. By the above figures the late slave States would get two-thirds of it, and the other parts the other third. Therefore for the first year they would get $17,878; and for each year $17,778 more would be added, because a new million would be annually added to the principal. In other words, we must multiply the interest by the number of the year to learn what sum will be realized each year in the ten. Doing this will give us an aggregate for those slave States for the first ten years of $1,008,890.

During those ten years the other parts of the Union will have the other third, and after that, when the distribution will be on school population and not illiteracy, the figures will be reversed and they will perhaps take the two-thirds, and the slave States the third.

To more accurately comprehend it, apply these figures to Georgia alone—she is a fair representative. By reason of her large colored population she had about one-ninth of that illiteracy in the slave States. Therefore, she would get of that fund the first year $1,975.33, and for the whole ten years $112,098.88. It would be five years before she would receive as much as she now appropriates annually to the colored university at Atlanta. Now, look at the Goode bill in the same light: For the first ten years distribute the principal. These free States would get one-third, or $333,333.33, and in the ten years $3,333,333.33; while the late slave States would get the first year $666,666.66, and in the first ten years $6,666,666.66. Of course, members from the late slave States would prefer this to the Senate distribution. But is it fair for us to ask and is it right for Congress to grant so much? We will see. Of that 5,658,144 illiterates in the United States, 2,789,689 were colored; and it is fair to put 2,500,000 of them in the late slave States. That would leave the illiterate whites in those States 1,556,005, about equal to the 1,602,106 illiterates in the remainder of the Union. Here are, then, a million and a half of persons over ten years old, lately slaves, set free without property, and in a community impoverished by war.

To show that it is right for us to ask this immediate aid in educating them, we wish gentlemen to consider what these States have been doing toward educating their late slaves. The following figures are from an address to the National Educational Association, lately assembled at Chatauqua, New York, by Hon. G. J. Orr, State school commissioner of Georgia. His learning, his position, and his high character all vouch for their accuracy. These are the figures:

In Virginia, beginning with the year 1871, the colored enrollment for successive years was as follows: 38,554, 46,736, 47,169, 52,086, 54,941, 62,178, 65,043, 61,772, 35,768. In South Carolina the same enrollment from 1870 has been 15,894, 33,834, 38,635, 46,535, 56,249, 63,415, 70,802, 55,952, 62,120, 64,095. In Georgia, beginning in 1871 and omitting 1872, when there were no public schools, the same record reads: 6,664, 19,755, 42,374, 50,358, 57,987, 62,330, 72,655; while in Mississippi, beginning with 1875, the same figures were 89,813, 90,178, 104,777, 111,796. The only year for which my correspondence enables me to present the grand aggregate for the entire South was the year 1878. The attendance this year foots up the astonishing sum of 738,164, the reports being accurate for all the States except Arkansas, Florida, and Louisiana, in which, as already stated, careful estimates were made.

* * * * * * *

The State of Maryland appropriates $2,000 per annum for the support of a normal school for the training of colored teachers.

Virginia sets apart $10,000 per annum out of the proceeds of the land scrip donated by Congress for the support of the school at Hampton.

Claflin University, now united with the colored agricultural college, and located at Orangeburgh, receives from the State of South Carolina $7,500 per annum.

Georgia pays out of her treasury to Atlanta University $8,000 a year, in discharge of the equitable claim of the colored people to participation in the land-scrip fund.

The average expenditure of the State of Mississippi upon the higher institutions for the education of the negro is about $10,000 per annum.

The new constitution of Louisiana, adopted in 1879, provides that the General Assembly shall establish in New Orleans a university for the education of persons of color, and make an annual appropriation for its support of not less than $5,000, nor more than $10,000.

Missouri appropriates $5,000 per annum to the Lincoln Institute, a school for the training of colored teachers.

I say nothing as to the education of the whites; figures on that are unnecessary. Of course if we do so much for our late slaves, we do more for our children. In Georgia the schools are separate, and in the common schools the whites about double the blacks in pupils and treble them in school-houses; and in private schools the whites have greatly the advantage.

Any one who has studied the situation and dispassionately considered the circumstances will admit that we have done well so far; but he will be appalled at the magnitude of the work yet to be done, will see our inability to do it unaided, and excuse if he will not sympathize with our insisting upon speedy relief. This is not the voice of a single man. In December, 1878, Georgia, by the solemn action of her General Assembly—

Resolved, That inasmuch as the educational wants of the Southern States are immediate and pressing, this General Assembly would suggest to Congress the consideration of the question whether it might not be best to distribute and apply the entire corpus of whatever educational funds that body from time to time may provide to the immediate relief of those wants.

And she added:

Resolved, That as the educational laws of this State make no discriminations in favor of or against the children of any class of citizens, and as those charged with the administration of these laws have endeavored in the past to have them carried into effect impartially, so does the General Assembly pledge every department of the State government to take the necessary steps to secure even-handed justice to all classes of citizens in the application of any educational fund provided by the National Government.

This is the voice of a Commonwealth containing a school population of 433,444, of which but 226,627 are enrolled and but 132,000 actually attend school. She calls for help for the 300,000 out of school. She is but a sample of the South. Now, should Congress grant this aid?

The illiterate males over twenty-one years old vote, and must help to build up or tear down our governmental structure. You men of the North say they cannot vote intelligently without education. You say that you intend to inaugurate a grand scheme to lift the masses out of their ignorance, and that you especially desire to help the South educate the colored people. We agree with your purpose, but not with your plan.

Common schools are like other co-operative projects, successful according to the density of population, &c. It is easy in Massachusetts, with her two hundred and twenty-eight people to a square mile, to have schools which would be impossible in Florida or Texas, with four or five to the square mile. New York, with her hundred to the square mile, can do much that the Carolinas and Georgia, with their twenty-seven per square mile, cannot accomplish. Your society is homogeneous; ours divided unavoidably and unalterably. Your people have been trained to co-operate; many causes make ours antagonize. Your teachers are aided by educated parents; the war robbed many of our whites of that grand home aid to education, and the negroes can have none of it yet. Our meager means are not well in hand; your wealth is organized. Can you build on such a foundation? The corners North, East, and West are solid and symmetrical; that at the South is unstable and ill-shaped. Until that corner shall be improved, building the house will be worse than folly.

Indeed, under the Senate bill, if the South is now doing her best, her corner cannot be built at all. There the common schools are in session but three months annually. It is so in Georgia. The Senate bill will not allow the distribution of the interest even after 1884, unless she maintains common schools for four months annually. Can she add this other fourth? Will she add it to get the pittance which that bill offers?

The argument is finished. Believe us to be both honest and intelligent judges of the situation. Be sure that you are free from prejudice and comprehend the demands of the occasion. If the South must be left alone to struggle under the load, be it so. The census about to be published will astonish you by an exhibition of how earnest has been that struggle and how glorious is the success already achieved. But if you are in earnest about helping her, say so; do it. Do not deceive yourselves; you cannot deceive her. She will understand whether your words are sound or substance.

A word in conclusion. The constitutions and laws of the States of our Union contain over three score limitations upon the exercise of suffrage. The Supreme Court has held that these limitations are not abridgments of the right to vote. And yet the appointment of a committee to inquire as to them would disturb every community from Maine to California. It would awaken in the South the fear of a repetition of the blunders and wrongs of past administration. It would destroy confidence and paralyze business. We know that in no view would enough be found in any State to affect its representation. But the stirring of the question would excite the masses and work nothing but evil. Ne moveas camarinam. This Congress will appoint no such committee. Shall we wait till the meeting of the next Congress? Wait when the Committee on the Census report unanimously in favor of a present apportionment? Wait till the General Assemblies of the twenty-odd States which meet this year shall have adjourned and compel them to reassemble at a cost of perhaps $10,000,000, or postpone till the Forty-ninth Congress (December, 1884) before the new districting of the States can take effect?

If such committee were raised and did report, Congress could act on it in the line asked for by the gentleman from New York only by passing a law for a new census. The Constitution is imperative:

The actual enumeration shall be made * * * within every subsequent term of ten years, in such manner as they shall by law direct.

Can any one suppose that it will be possible to pass such a law and complete such "actual enumeration" under it within ten years from the last enumeration? It requires as solemn a law and as accurate a census to find the sum to be deducted as to fix "the whole number of persons." Indeed, carelessness in increasing representation would do no injury comparable to carelessness in destroying representation.

The whole thing is impracticable and absurd. Let us hear no more of it. It was ignored in 1872; it would be inexcusable not to ignore it now. Let us lay aside all contention and go quietly and earnestly to our work. Let us not disturb the grand harmony which now blesses the business of the country by discord here. Let us remember that this distribution is required to be made among States, not sections. Let us, as far as may be, forget that there is a North and a South. The world has witnessed how grandly they fought; let it observe how grandly they are reconciled. Let the South glory in the wealth and order of the North and the North glory in the past history and magnificent capabilities of the South. Between them may there be no more warring, no more jarring.

Like twin suns in yon blue vault afar,
May each round each revolve a ruling star, in peace and harmony forever.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND] has twenty-five minutes of his time yet remaining.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. Then I yield fifteen minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas, [Mr. DUNN.]

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Speaker, I did not intend to participate at all in this debate, and would not now take any part in it but for some allusions which have been made to my own State, and reflections which have been passed upon our people in common with other Southern States, which I think are of an unjust character and require answer. I am not willing to see the State of Arkansas, which I have the honor in part to represent, placed under the influence of any wrong that may have been committed or permitted elsewhere, by other States, if any such wrong there has been.

The State of Arkansas has a republican form of government in truth and in fact, and the laws there are honestly, faithfully, and fairly executed. Equal and exact justice is measured to all alike regardless of race, nationality, party, or color. The ballot there is free to all who are qualified under the laws, and none are disfranchised except the insane, idiots, and those rendered infamous by conviction for crime. Our elections are fair and the vote honestly taken and counted by election officers who are chosen in equal numbers from each of the contending parties. The people of that State are as peaceable and law-abiding in all respects as any in the United States. I can truly say that we have there perfect freedom of conscience, thought, and speech.

Sir, it is sad to see the lengths to which party necessity can and does drive gentlemen. We have here a very simple and well-defined constitutional duty to perform, and one that we should all approach without party bias, for we cannot expect to gain any permanent or continuing party advantage by any decision that we may make. Sir, we may to-day agree upon a number and an apportionment of Representatives that may seem, judging by past elections, to give an advantage to the democratic party or to the republican party; but, sir, who could undertake to say that that apparent advantage would be retained through another election?

A few years ago Maine, New Hampshire, Connecticut, and New Jersey were solidly republican; yet within a few years we have seen each of them voting democratic. Even sturdy Massachusetts has had its lucid moments, and in that lucid interval has been known to experience an ebullition of virtue and vote democratic. New York, that has been regarded as the citadel of democracy, has, alas! turned its back upon the enemy, and deceived and betrayed the very elect of the democracy. Indiana and Ohio ever waver in the balance, and seem to be happy in the embraces of either party. But a few years ago quite all the Southern States were solidly republican, and so secure did the republican party feel of its hold upon those States that they proceeded to enfranchise the colored people, and give them representation according to their full numbers.

But now, sir, that scene is changed, happily, and we hear instead the denunciatory cry of the "solid democratic South!"

Colorado, that was admitted by a democratic Congress as a State because it was considered safe for the democracy in the approaching presidential election, played the truant and is found to be fiercely republican.

California and Nevada, that were but yesterday faithful republican States, have struck their republican colors and nailed the honest old democratic flag to the mast-head instead.

Oregon, that had so long kept the democratic faith, has proven recreant and gone astray, and is no more of the household of the faithful.

Sir, it will be in vain that party ingenuity will be taxed to gain any enduring advantage out of this apportionment. You may as well seek shelter from the fierce, burning rays of the sun in the shadow of the ever-changing and shifting clouds. The party that attempts it will be like the foolish person who built his house upon a sandy foundation. When political storms come, as they will, and the angry waters of party strife beat upon it, the entire structure will fall and crush the foolish people who take shelter within it. If the history of party politics teaches any one lesson more certainly than another, it is that mere party expedients and inventions always return to plague the inventor. No party has ever yet well served itself or the country by a resort to any such things. The ballot and full representation was given to the colored people of the South as a mere expedient, invented by the republican party to control the Southern States and make them republican.

It is said that the South thereby gained 35 members in Congress. These States are all now democratic, and the increased representation so invented now sorely torments the republican party, and the unseemly effort in which that party is now engaged to deprive the colored people in the South of representation is at once ludicrous and pitiful. It is wisest and best to be always just and fair, adhering to correct principles. We may gain an advantage to-day by such expedients, but in doing so we tear away from about us our only sure safeguards for the future.

No party can afford to do wrong, Mr. Speaker. This is not a party question. It is not a sectional question. It is a great national constitutional duty, which is in no sense questionable. It is always well to inquire what we have to do and what are the legal and constitutional guides to our action.

Section 2, article 14 of the Constitution, is as follows:

> Representatives shall be apportioned among the several States according to their respective numbers, counting the whole number of persons in each State, excluding Indians not taxed. But when the right to vote at any election for the choice of electors for President and Vice-President of the United States, Representatives in Congress, the executive and judicial officers of a State, or the members of the Legislature thereof, is denied to any of the male inhabitants of such State, being twenty-one years of age, and citizens of the United States, or in any way abridged, except for participation in rebellion, or other crime, the basis of representation therein shall be reduced in the proportion which the number of such male citizens shall bear to the whole number of male citizens twenty-one years of age in such State.

This is the law by which we have all sworn to be governed.

We have also before us the "whole number of persons" in the respective States, ascertained correctly, fairly, and according to law. The single question, then, to be settled is the number of members that shall compose this House. It would seem strange that this simple question should assume a party phase. But it has, and bids fair to become fierce and bitter on the part of our republican friends. With a few creditable exceptions, they have made it the occasion of partisan assaults that would be more worthy of the hustings than this forum. They have brought forth the ever-ready bloody shirt and given it a fresh airing, and finally they have solemnly consulted in secret and resolved to insist upon the most unfair apportionment they could invent, and if not yielded to they threaten to obstruct the progress of public business.

Mr. Speaker, the action of the democratic side of this House stands out in gratifying and honorable contrast with the course of the other side. The distinguished gentleman from New York, [Mr. COX,] in reporting this bill to the House, declared that, so far as he and this side of the House were concerned, this great work should "not be crowned with the ugly effigy of party." And most admirably and faithfully has he and the members on this side adhered to that pledge. Indeed, sir, in his able and remarkable presentation of the subject to the House he has left little for those who come after him to do. As I before said, our duty is plain and simple. Representation is to be apportioned—how? Not to New England, the Middle States, the Western States, and the Southern States, but to the States respectively, according to the whole number of persons, excluding Indians not taxed.

Some gentlemen object to this constitutional rule, and insist upon grouping certain States together. What reason or authority is there for that? Why will you group the New England States together? Why will you group the Middle States together? Why will you group the Northern, the Western, or the Southern States together? Does the Constitution show that this apportionment of representation shall be to New England, or to the Middle, or to the Southern, or to the Western States? Not at all; but to each State according to its numbers, counting all persons within the State.

Now, if the rule that these gentlemen insist upon, which is a mere party expedient, be the rule that is to guide us, then the East or Middle States, the Northern and the Western States must lose representation, because Rhode Island and Massachusetts have disfranchised certain classes of persons. If that rule be true and is a proper guide for our action, then Delaware, Maryland, Virginia, Kentucky, Tennessee, and Missouri must all lose representation because it is alleged that Louisiana bulldozes the colored voter and that South Carolina uses the tissue ballot. Is that just and constitutional? Must Arkansas be denied representation because these things exist elsewhere, if indeed it is true that they do exist? Let us take the guide of the Constitution, follow that and obey it. No man need go amiss. This is not a confused and much entangled question. No State has disfranchised any class of its citizens with the meaning of this limitation provided in the fourteenth article of the Constitution.

At the last apportionment there was found no such denial of the elective franchise as would warrant an abridgment of the representation of any State, and no State has since that time disfranchised any of its inhabitants. But if any of the States have done so, how should it be ascertained? We created by law the Census Bureau to ascertain the number of the people, and through that bureau the number of persons, if any, who were denied the right to vote should have been ascertained. But it did not appear from the laws and constitutions of the States that there was any such disfranchisement, and hence no one demanded the information.

Another says there should be no apportionment now because he is not yet satisfied with the census of the State of South Carolina. This gentleman seems to think that because he yet has lingering doubts as to the fidelity and correctness of the census of that State the remaining thirty-seven States should be denied their rights. If his apprehension was well founded the justice of his proposition would be questionable. But, sir, has he in fact the semblance of a reason for the doubt?

So much has been said about census frauds in South Carolina that I beg to call the special attention of the House and the country to the letter to the Secretary of the Interior of January 17, 1881, communicating the letter of that faithful and efficient public servant, General Francis A. Walker, Superintendent of the Census, of January 15, 1881. This letter was written in response to a resolution of the Senate "requesting and directing the Secretary of the Interior to forward for the information of the Senate the report of the Superintendent of the Census touching the alleged frauds of the enumeration of the inhabitants of South Carolina, under the law providing for taking the tenth census." It answers so completely the charges made from time to time by partisan stump-orators and newspapers that I shall ask the Clerk to read it for the information of the House and the doubting gentleman from Indiana.

The Clerk read as follows:

> DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, CENSUS OFFICE,
> Washington, D. C., January 15, 1881.
> SIR: I have the honor to be in receipt of Department letter of the 7th instant, inclosing a resolution of the Senate requesting and directing the Secretary of the Interior to forward, for the information of the Senate, the report of the Superintendent of the Census touching the alleged frauds of the enumeration of the inhabitants of South Carolina under the law providing for taking the tenth census.
> In compliance with the instructions of the Department, I have the honor to transmit herewith a printed copy of the report in question.
> The investigation, the results of which are set forth in this report, was conducted by Mr. Henry Gannett, special agent of this office, between the 7th and the 21st of September.
> The method adopted was the verification of names appearing upon the schedules of eighteen enumeration districts, in six different counties, through personal inquiry of prominent citizens familiar with the residents of their respective localities and of undoubted probity.

During the month of November I received oral instructions from the President to send a staff of special agents from this office to South Carolina to conduct a re-enumeration, by a house-to-house canvass, of a certain number of townships, with a view to a further test of the results of the June enumeration.

In compliance with these instructions I detailed F. G. Butterfield, esq., late supervisor of census for the State of Vermont, and now of this office, as chief special agent to conduct the proposed re-enumeration. The following persons were detailed as assistants to perform the actual work of enumeration:

Timothy Quinn, of New York; John B. Burt, of Massachusetts; John B. Isler, of Maryland; O. P. D. Stone, of Michigan.

These gentlemen were selected for their known ability and proved integrity, and with reference also to the fact that each of them had been accustomed to mounted service in rugged and difficult country; all of them having been in the Army of the United States.

Eight townships, situated in as many different counties, were, upon the recommendation of Colonel R. M. Wallace, marshal, taken for re-enumeration.

Two townships were assigned to each of the four assistant special agents. The schedules of inhabitants returned in the June enumeration were placed in the hands of the chief special agent. The several assistant special agents assigned to the actual enumeration of the townships were not shown these schedules, but were required to perform their work ab initio, without reference to the first enumeration. Their note-books, containing the description of every house in the township, as to location, material of construction, and general character, together with the name of each member of the family resident therein, were to be submitted to the chief special agent, having his headquarters at Columbia, who was instructed to make a careful comparison, name by name, of the results of the two enumerations.

The enumeration of seven of the townships in question was completed a week or two since, but owing to the large extent and considerable population of Waterloo Township, I was not advised until yesterday of the completion of the work in that district.

The following table gives the population of each township as ascertained in the re-enumeration just described:

County.	Township.	Reported at June enumeration.	Reported in December and January.
Abbeville	Due West	2,457	2,576
Barnwell	Williston	2,669	2,723
Chesterfield	Steerpen	2,080	2,090
Fairfield	Township No. 8	2,559	2,685
Laurens	Waterloo	4,018	4,150
Lexington	Broad River	2,426	2,441
Marion	Cains	2,405	2,430
Williamsburgh	Johnson	2,397	2,463
Total		21,011	21,608

It will be seen that in every township on this list an increase appears in the December and January enumeration over the June enumeration. This increase is due partly to the normal increase of population, which might easily be, in seven months, 1½ per cent.; partly to changes in population, such as frequently occur in rural communities, as between summer and winter; which changes, had a hundred townships been taken, would probably have offset each other, but which in so few as eight might easily leave an appreciable balance, to the gain or the loss, according to circumstances of the particular group of townships taken, and partly also, it is probable, to the greater care and thoroughness with which the last enumeration has been conducted.

It was not to be expected that the average of the four hundred and eighty-seven enumerators of South Carolina should be equal to that of a corps of selected officers, each of whom had had far more than the usual experience of life and of public service, all excellent scouts and horsemen, provided with guides, maps, &c., without regard to expense. It is not improbable, therefore, that the final result may show a score or two of families in these eight townships who were omitted by the June enumerators either through inadvertency or on account of some peculiar difficulty arising from the location of their dwellings.

The ordinary enumerator, canvassing a territory of fifty, sixty, or eighty square miles, might, without any great fault of his own, omit two or three cabins hidden away in ravines, sheltered by trees, and occupied by families having but very little of business or of social connection with the rest of the community.

I may, perhaps, be excused for remarking that in discussions relating to the census of the Southern States it needs always to be borne in mind that the most characteristic difference in the matter of residence, as between the Northern and the Southern States, is found in the location of dwelling-houses. As a rule in the Northern States houses are placed upon highways; as a rule in the Southern States houses are not so placed. In the Northern States families are habitually supplied with water from wells; in the Southern States they are habitually supplied with water from springs or running streams, and hence it is proximity to a natural water supply which determines the location of houses. Any one who has traveled throughout that region will not fail to acknowledge the truth of this general remark.

Time has not been given for a full comparison of the names upon the lists furnished by the two enumerators, which work will be completed upon Special Agent Butterfield's return to Washington.

In general he has advised the office that the results of the comparison, so far as it has been carried out, have been such as to corroborate the original enumeration.

I cannot but believe, however, that the result which I have now the honor to announce will be accepted as conclusive in favor of the integrity of the work done in June under the authority of the several supervisors of South Carolina.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

FRANCIS A. WALKER,
Superintendent of Census.

Hon. CARL SCHURZ,
Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. DUNN. This full and complete reply to the imputations of unfairness and fraud ought to satisfy the minds of all men, and, I doubt not, will. Another objection is that the vote polled in some of the States was small and below that of the actual number of voters in such States. It is assumed that those who did not vote were prevented from voting by violence or intimidation. This charge is laid at the door of the South especially. This is an old, stale, and baseless charge. But if it was true it is not of that class or character of disfranchisement which would abridge the representation of a State.

This would be individual violence and wrong, and punishable by law and within the jurisdiction of the courts. If the representation of the States is to be abridged because of crimes and violation of law by individuals, then we shall have endless confusion. But it is not. There is no warrant of law for it, and it is the merest subterfuge to so argue.

But, sir, is this charge, so flippantly made against the Southern States, true? Sir, we all in that portion of the country know that it is not. We are asked why our people do not vote if the ballot is in fact free? There are many reasons, known to all intelligent observers in the South, why full votes are not polled.

The vicisitudes and disasters of war and politics through which our people have passed during the last twenty years has gone far to discourage a great portion of them, and cause them to lose interest in public affairs. For a time after the close of the late war many were disfranchised and not permitted to vote. Others who were entitled to vote were so often denied registration or had their ballots falsely returned or cast out, that they came to think that it was not worth while to vote or to attempt to vote. It is undeniably true that many of our people have lost interest in public affairs, so much so that large numbers of them absent themselves from the polls. I will, however, let a Northern man answer. I send to the Clerk's desk a letter I received a few days ago from a very intelligent constituent of mine, who came a few years ago from Ohio to my State.

CORNING, ARKANSAS, February 5, 1881.

SIR: I have noticed in the newspapers since the election considerable said about the smallness of the ratio of votes to the census in the Southern States as compared to the Northern States, and unfavorable reflections made as to the cause of it, and have seen no explanation of it except the charge of intimidation made by the republicans. Now there is, and it ought to be known, a true explanation of it. My theory, based upon a fifty years' residence in the north (Ohio) and over four years here, is that the discrepancy in the ratio of votes is not for want of voters nor to intimidation, but to the apathy of our southern people. You can imagine my surprise when, in 1876, leaving a heated political campaign in the North and arriving here, and for days and even weeks never hearing a single word of a political tenor mentioned. Why, sir, in a town of the size of this you would hear more political discussion in any day of the campaign than you will here during the whole period. This apathy, I think, is due to the infrequency of our elections, the want of a party organization, the failure to make party nominations in counties, the indisposition of our people to read the current news, the sparcity of our settlements, by which the people are not frequently and intimately intermingled, and the overwhelming preponderance of the democracy, thousands of whom do not appreciate the necessity of voting, knowing that our ticket is safe anyhow. To illustrate: This township enumerated over fourteen hundred at the census, and there are nearly three hundred legal electors therein, and perhaps one hundred more males over twenty-one years old who are not voters by reason of not residing in the State, county, and township long enough to vote.

At the last State election 183 votes were cast, and at the presidential election 135, being 48 less than at the State election; and no intimidation was used; in fact, people were urged to vote, as we wanted to make a good showing of voters, but they did not near all vote. Several legal voters right here in town failed to offer their ballots. Now, the discrepancy between our State and presidential elections is explained by the fact that at the State election the candidates for the different county offices had induced their friends to turn out and vote, when at the presidential election no such motive existed, and they staid away from the polls, the people taking and feeling but little interest in national offices. Were the parties more equally divided, each party would make greater efforts to poll their full vote, and a much greater aggregate would be had. Here we do not talk politics, have but few political meetings, no pole raisings, no flags nor banners flying, no great rallies, little neighborhood speaking, and none of the paraphernalia of an exciting campaign, no nothing to get up political excitement and arouse the people and excite their passions and call out their prejudices like those brought to bear in the North, and hence the indifference and our meager vote at presidential elections.

The intimidation dodge of republicans is a cheat. Here we have no negroes to vote. Garfield got twenty-nine votes, within three or four of their full strength, yet our democratic friends neglected to vote their full strength, and let it go out to the world that either the census is fallacious, or that legal voters were prevented from voting. I might remark further, that, as you are aware, the laws of this State require a residence of one year in the State, six months in the county, and thirty days in the township to entitle a man to vote—this cuts out a great many; while in some of the Northern States six months only is required in the State and thirty days in the county, and perhaps in some no preceding residence in the county required to vote. Such a law here would have enfranchised thousands who were disfranchised under our laws.

The foregoing was suggested from reading the debate in Congress on the apportionment bill, and I trust that the democratic members will have backbone enough to sustain that and all other political measures pending this session.

Very respectfully yours, W. B. HARB.

Hon. P. DUNN, M. C., Washington, D. C.

Mr. DUNN. This statement every man in the South can verify and ought to satisfy all fair-minded and just men.

The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HORR] made a speech that amused the House, and I suppose it amused the country also. While he does not very positively or directly assert anything, he attacks most unjustly by innuendo. He alludes to the comparatively small vote in the South, assumes that those not voting are bulldozed, intimidated, or in some wicked way prevented from voting, and concludes that all the democrats vote and that those not voting are oppressed colored republicans. He mentions Arkansas as one of these lawless States; and his solution of the difficult question is to apportion representation to the States according to the number of votes cast. This proposition is refreshingly original. He does not propose to apportion the representation according to law, but, as it is said the Dutchman testified, to the best advantage for his party as things now look. He is certainly entitled to all the rights of discovery. But, Mr. Speaker, my chief object in seeking the floor at this time was to defend my own State from this unjust aspersion.

It is assumed generally by republican newspapers and speakers that the color line is the party line in the South. While this is not literally true, it is approximately so in that portion of my State where the colored population is chiefly located.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I invite the attention of the gentleman from Michigan especially, and of the House, to some tables which I have prepared on that subject with some degree of care. Party necessities may drive the demagogue to strange and extraordinarily extravagant assertions and declarations to subserve party ends. But when he is confronted with the cold figures of a trusted census and the official votes of the States, it will be seen that he will appear at great disadvantage. I have prepared here with some care from the census report of my own State and from the official vote of that State, as appears from the report of the secretary of state for 1880, a statement which is a complete refutation of the charge and a vindication of the State of Arkansas against all such strictures. I have prepared these tables, showing the white and colored population, the possible white vote and the possible colored vote on the basis of 1 to 5, the actual democratic vote, the actual republican vote, the number of whites absent from the polls, and the number of colored voters not voting. I take my State by counties, and I invite attention to the tables, for the figures they contain are official and as follows:

Counties.	Population.		Possible vote of whites, ratio, 1 to 5.	Possible vote of negroes, ratio, 1 to 5.	Actual democratic vote for President, 1880.	Actual republican vote for President, 1880.	Whites not voting, 1880.	Negroes not voting, 1880.

Total possible white vote	118,583
Total possible colored vote	44,104
Total democratic vote cast in 1880	60,930
Total republican vote cast in 1880	41,613

Of the whites 68,114 voted, being about 57 per cent.; of the colored voters 34,429 voted, being about 79 per cent.

These figures show what every man in my State knows to be true, namely, that the colored people take more interest in elections than the white people and are more prompt and reliable to vote.

In my own district, of a possible white vote of 27,572, only 15,792 voted, leaving 12,000 whites absent from the polls; while of a possible colored vote of 14,868, 11,621 voted, leaving only 3,670 absent from the polls. Surely this is sufficient to dispose of this audacious and baseless charge.

Mr. Speaker, I will not enter into an analytic argument of the tables I have submitted for the consideration of the House. I am not wedded to any particular number. I desire no advantage for my section or party. I desire to see the House dispose of this question in a spirit of judicial fairness. All can afford to do that, and none can afford to be unfair.

I desire to say in conclusion that those gentlemen who are so much troubled about the great gains which the South appears to make on each number below 319 should bear in mind the fact that by reason of the imperfect, unjust, and fraudulent census of 1870 the South has these ten years been unjustly deprived of representation to which it was entitled, and is now only recovering its own. The enumeration of 1870 was made under republican partisan auspices, by republican marshals and their deputies, not by enumerators selected by southern Senators and members of the House as non-partisans.

General Walker says of that census in his letter of October 5, 1880:

> The error lying between the two censuses indicated, it would at the first glance appear, that a strong presumption existed that it was the census of 1880 which was at fault, the census of 1870 being a census taken and completed, a census accepted by the proper Department at Washington, and incorporated into its reports to Congress, and made the basis of a redistribution of representation by the act of 1872. Unfortunately, however, the authority of the census of 1870 in some sections of the country was not such as to create a very powerful presumption against the subsequent census by reason of marked discrepancies appearing therein.
> The census of 1870 was taken under the act of 1850, an act by the provisions of which the control of the Census Office over the enumeration was reduced to a minimum, the authority attaching to the office being altogether insufficient, to any considerable degree of responsibility, for the results reported.
> In his report of November 1, 1872, the Superintendent of Census characterized this act in the following terms, to which, after the further experience of eight years, he would, if possible, add emphasis rather than subtract from the force of the condemnation expressed.
> "It is not possible for one who has had such painful occasion as the present Superintendent to observe the workings of the census law of 1850 to characterize it otherwise than as clumsy, antiquated, and barbarous.
> "The machinery it provides is as unfit for use in the census of the United States in this day of advanced statistical science as the smooth-bore, muzzle-loading Queen's arm of the Revolution would be for service against the repeating rifle of the present time. It ought not to be possible that another census should be taken under this law; such a thing ought not to be seriously proposed.
> "The country has suffered more than enough already of discredit and of loss on account of the wretched insufficiency and inappropriateness of the provisions of this ill-constructed and outgrown statute."
> By the act thus characterized the charge of the enumeration in the several judicial districts was committed to the United States marshals, officers appointed with reference to altogether different services, and already burdened with a great variety and extent of duties in connection with the courts. These officers were, moreover, not appointed, and were not removable, at the instance of the Census Office or of the Department of the Interior, but belonged to another Department of the Government, to which they were responsible. In the formation of the subdivisions of their districts for census purposes, the marshals were subject to no control whatever on the part of the Census Office, while they were, by law, permitted to constitute districts in their own discretion, not exceeding 20,000 inhabitants.
> But even worse in its effects upon the integrity and completeness of the enumeration was the provision of the act of 1850, by which the United States marshals were left to appoint their assistants—the actual enumerators—without any check or control on the part of the Census Office. Whatever the vices of any individual appointment, or however low the general tone of appointments in any district might be, the Census Office had no power except that of a barren protest, its right to make such a protest even being seriously a subject of question. The Census Office had not even authority or appropriation to send an agent to inspect the office of the United States marshal during the progress of the enumeration.
> The absence as above indicated of any power in the Census Office, first over the appointment of marshals themselves—the supervisors of enumerations; secondly, over the subdivision of the territory for the purposes of enumeration; and thirdly, over the appointment of assistant marshals—the actual enumerators—will be seen to justify the statement made above, that, under the act of 1850, the authority attached to the Census Office was insufficient to any considerable degree of responsibility for the results reported. In this condition the question whether the census of any judicial district should be a good one or a bad one became a question simply whether the United States marshal, appointed with reference to altogether different considerations, was himself competent to conduct the delicate and difficult work of supervising the census; whether he would give to the subject sufficient time and attention, in spite of other and pressing duties, and whether he would show good judgment and integrity in the subdivision of his district and in the appointment of his assistants. I have always been free in attributing to the United States marshals of 1870, as a body, a high sense of their duty in this respect and great zeal and vigilance. In preparing for and supervising the enumeration the marshals for 1870, as a body, did far more and better than was to have been expected of them in respect to this onerous duty imposed upon them, in addition to the regular work of their office. Moreover, the assistant marshals of 1870 were generally of good clerical abilities and good character, who labored faithfully in their calling, and made, as a rule, neat and intelligent returns.
> While the foregoing remarks respecting the deficiencies of the system in use at the ninth census apply indifferently to all the districts of the country, North and South, peculiar difficulties attended the enumeration at the South in 1870. The disturbed state of society in the States lately in rebellion and the supposed necessity of appointing the assistant marshals wholly from the dominant political party, the members of which, in some sections, were drawn almost exclusively from the race lately emancipated by the effects of war, combined to reduce to a very low point the assurance which the country could have of a good census being taken under such a thoroughly bad organization as that provided by the act of 1850. It is not necessary for me to recite facts of record showing the manner in which the State governments of more than one State were at that time administered to prove that there was no very strong probability that the appointments made to the office of assistant marshal in those States would be uniformly good.
> There was, moreover, lacking in 1870, throughout this general region, one very important safeguard of enumeration, namely, public interest in the result and general intelligence as to the population likely to be shown by the canvass. The interest generally manifested throughout the United States in the ninth census was far below that which has been shown the present year; but nowhere did the interest in the work of the census fall as low as in the States referred to, in which political activity under the Constitution of the United States had scarcely revived, and some of which had only just been restored to their representation in Congress and in the electoral college. Public interest in the result of the enumeration is oftentimes very troublesome to the officers of the census; but it is as wholesome as troublesome, since, while it frequently leads to unreasonable complaints, it almost certainly calls attention to any actual omissions from the enumeration and to any negligence on the part of the agents of the census.

Moreover, there could, in 1870, be no intelligent expectation at the South as to the population which should be shown by the census. No statistician could, at that time, claim to be able to make even an approximate estimate of the population of any Southern State. What would be found to be the effects upon population of four years of devastating civil war, involving vast loss of life, with diminution of vitality on the part of the survivors, the separation of husbands and wives, and the procrastination of marriage on the part of the young, throughout a population of which all able-bodied adult males were declared by law to be soldiers, subject to be called to arms at any moment? What would be the effects upon the distribution of the colored population, as between States and counties, of their recent emancipation, leaving them for the first time free to place themselves according to their interest or their fancy? These were questions which the best-informed student of population could not have presumed in 1870 to answer. There was, consequently, on the eve of the ninth census, no intelligent estimate possible on the part of any southern community as to the population which would be found to exist; and hence there could be no intelligent criticism of the results of the census as announced by the marshals of the several judicial districts. Scarcely any result as to population was incredible in a region over which armies had been passing for four years, to the destruction of crops, of houses, of fences, and of agricultural implements, and in which one-third, one-half, or, as in the so-called "Black Belt," two-thirds, four-fifths, and even seven-eighths of the population were, for the first time in their lives, as the result of the war, left free to choose their own location and mode of living.

INVESTIGATION OF THE RESULTS REPORTED IN 1880.

From the above considerations this office was not disposed, on the first announcement of the extraordinary apparent gain of population from 1870 to 1880, to conclude that it was necessarily the census of 1880 which was in fault, and thereupon to charge upon the 10,000 officers engaged in the service throughout the Southern States the perpetration of a monstrous political crime through a gigantic conspiracy to falsify the census. Knowing that the provisions of law at the tenth census were infinitely better suited to accomplish the purposes of a correct enumeration than in 1870; knowing that in South Carolina the work of supervision had not, as in 1870, been intrusted to a single officer already overworked in the performance of the regular duties of the marshal's office, but to three officers, each of whom gave many months of arduous labor to the work of preparation and supervision; knowing that in place of one hundred and twenty-one enumeration districts, as in 1870, covering an average area of two hundred and eighty square miles, there had been, at the recent count, four hundred and eighty-seven districts, each covering an average area of only sixty-nine square miles, securing, as a necessary result, a far higher degree of local and personal knowledge on the part of the enumerators of the districts to be canvassed by them respectively; knowing that the enumerators were no longer chosen from a single party, but were taken from the mass of citizens without any restriction on account of supposed partisan necessities; knowing all these things, I felt that the question, whether the census of 1870 or that of 1880 were in fault, should be approached and investigated without any strong presumption in favor of the former enumeration. The result of this investigation I have now the honor to state.

Mr. Speaker, the southern people have passed through rebellion, revolution, war, and all of them have their sad lessons as well as revenges; they are merciless, cruel, and destructive. We have patiently waited and hoped that their wounds would cicatrize, and that the graves of the dead past would be sodded over with respectful oblivion, and would rest in peace on through the ages; but still there are found political ghouls who dig into those graves and growl over the forms of the passions that are there buried.

But we can stand all this. We have stood more, and we shall continue to bear it with that proud resignation "born of the knowledge that all good men despise it and its authors." Sir, turning away from the bitterness of sectional strife, from the excitement of politics, and from the prejudices of partisanship, we shall move steadily forward in the path of constitutional duty.

It has truly been said that—

The "star of the South" has been shrouded by the cloud of slavery for two centuries, but as it rises and warms with the effulgence of freedom, it will mingle its rays brightly among the brightest in the constellation of States. The growing confidence of the people of the South in their ability to keep step to the music of free institutions in this Republic will vitalize their energies and give point to their efforts in the race for power.

This whole country is beginning an era of unrivaled prosperity and development, and if the powers of Government and forces of society are held with a steady, considerate hand, the eleventh census will reveal a degree of healthful progress never dreamed of by the most ardent believer in the capacity of republican institutions for the promotion of human happiness.

Relieved of the incubus of slavery, that bête noir of the past, and left free to rehabilitate herself upon terms of equality with other States of the Union and regulate her domestic concerns in her own way so as to secure and maintain law and order, and the peace and happiness of her whole people, the South will realize a marvelous increase in wealth and prosperity.

And, sir, I believe all good men of all parties and sections will sincerely rejoice if this prediction shall prove true. The jaundiced partisan who nurses "envy, hatred, and malice," and practices "all uncharitableness," will find himself the gloomy, isolated apostle of hate, breathing harmless and helpless discords into the grand harmonies of the Republic, reunited in heart and purpose as well as in form.

Mr. HORR. Will the gentleman permit me to interrupt him a moment?

Mr. DUNN. Yes, sir.

Mr. HORR. I do not know if I understand the gentleman's tables. Does the gentleman assume no white man voted the republican ticket?

Mr. DUNN. Not at all. I will show all that before I am through. I am arguing this case on the basis you placed it on yourself.

Mr. HORR. Does the gentleman claim that I said the color-line was established between the two parties? There was not one word of any such thing in my speech.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. DUNN] has expired.

Mr. DUNN. I should like to have a moment more.

Mr. SPARKS. Regular order.

Mr. DUNN. I ask leave to print the balance of my remarks.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND] has ten minutes of his hour remaining.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. I yield that time to the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. HAYES.]

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Speaker, in discussing a question of such great magnitude and importance as the one now before us, we should endeavor to divest ourselves of all prejudice, sectionalism, and party spirit, and to rise to the dignity of true statesmanship. The apportionment for representation in this House among the several States of the Union is not a local matter, but is in every respect national and should be so treated. Viewed in its true light it is as broad as this great nation itself, reaching out to and affecting every citizen of the Republic, no matter what may be his age, rank, or condition, or in what portion of the land he may reside.

Having to deal with a matter of such vast importance and so far-reaching in its effects, it becomes us to rise above party prejudice, to divest ourselves, as far as possible, of State and sectional pride, and to act for the good of the whole people. I am aware, sir, that it is natural for gentlemen to feel some degree of pride in the State which they may represent in this House, but they should feel a higher, nobler pride in the nation of which their State forms only a part; and while they should labor earnestly to promote the welfare of their State, they should labor more earnestly to promote the welfare of the nation. No man in this body should forget that, in the highest and best sense, he is a representative of the whole people and that he should act for their good.

And this leads me to say that this apportionment which we propose to make should be made, not in the interest of any one State or any one section of the country, but in the interest of all the States and all the sections. Our object should be to make an apportionment which shall be both wise, just, and national in its character, giving to each State and each section the full representation they are entitled to under the Constitution. Representation in this body is based upon population. Having once fixed the number of Representatives which is to constitute this body for the next ten years, our next duty is to give to each State and to each section their due proportion of these Representatives according to their population. This is all there is about the matter, and there is no reason why we should quarrel because, in making this apportionment, one State happens to lose and another to gain. Of course, I may not feel perfectly happy if the number of Representatives in my State is cut down and that of some other State is increased. Such a condition of things may not be altogether satisfactory to my State pride. Yet it is something I cannot prevent. In fact, it is something I ought not to wish to prevent, so long as the apportionment is made among the several States according to their respective population.

Having said this much, Mr. Speaker, let me call attention for a moment to the various bills that have been submitted to us for our consideration. The bill offered by the minority of the Census Committee is, in my estimation, the only fair bill of the three, and I will cheerfully vote for it, provided I cannot get something which I consider better. But the bills offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] and the majority of the Census Committee are not fair at all. The bill of the gentleman from New York provides for a representation in this body of 301 members, upon a ratio of one member to every 164,018 inhabitants, while the bill of the majority of the Census Committee provides for 311 members, upon a ratio of one member to every 158,745 inhabitants.

Both of these bills I regard as exceedingly objectionable, being, as they are, decidedly sectional and partisan. They seem to have been framed on the basis of sectionalism and to have been gotten up to accomplish some partisan end. They seem especially designed to give the South the advantage. Their chief aim and object seem to be to increase the power of that section in an undue proportion both in this body and in the electoral college. This, sir, I am opposed to. The South has had an undue proportion of power long enough in this Government. In fact, it is impossible to remember the time when it has not had more power than it was entitled to. In the days of slavery it had a representation, both in Congress and in the electoral college, based upon its slave population, which it never ought to have had. To-day it has a like representation, based upon its colored population, a considerable portion of which it is not entitled to under the provisions of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution. Every one knows that if this amendment were enforced the representation from the South on this floor would be diminished by at least one-third.

Now, sir, I do not wish to be unjust to the South. I am willing to give that section all that it can justly claim. If prosperity has reached out its hand and blessed its people, developing its resources, building up its industries, and adding to its population, I am willing to recognize that fact in this apportionment bill, just as I am willing to recognize a similar fact in the East or the West. I would give the claims of its people the same consideration that I would give those of the North. I would treat them with the same spirit of fairness in every respect. But I would do no more than that. And it is because of this that I cannot favor either the bill offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] or that offered by the majority of his committee. Neither of them seems to me to be characterized by that spirit of fairness and justice to all sections which ought to characterize a measure of this kind.

But, sir, I wish to say one more thing, and that is that I am not wholly satisfied with the bill presented by the minority of the Census Committee which makes the ratio of representation 154,764 and the number of Representatives 319. I am in favor of a larger representation in this body than is provided for even in this bill. I believe not only that a larger representation will be fairer to the various sections of the country, but that the best interests of the people demand a larger representation. From what little thought I have been able to give this matter I have come to the conclusion that it will be better for all concerned to have this House made up of at least 325 members. I am not one of those who are frightened at the idea of having a larger House than we now have. I believe that we can increase our number to 325 not only with safety, but with profit. I will say more than this. The interest of the people and of good government will be best subserved by making such an increase.

With a representation of 325 in this body each member will represent a constituency of 151,906 people, almost 152,000. Now, will any gentleman, who has had the experience of one term in this House, say that such a constituency is not large enough? I will leave it to any member of this body to say if his duties are not sufficiently onerous now when he represents a constituency of only 131,000 persons? In attending to the numerous wants of his people, going to the Departments, keeping up his immense correspondence, looking after his committee work, and performing his duties on this floor, does he not find his time fully occupied? My experience and observation have led me to the conclusion that any man who represents 131,000 constituents and who attends to his duties as he ought has all to do that can reasonably be expected of him. Scores of gentlemen here have told me that they never worked harder in their lives than they have since they have been in Congress, and I believe the same to be true in regard to a large majority of the members now serving in this body. If this be the case with a constituency of 131,000 people, how will it be when 33,000 are added to this number, as proposed by the bill offered by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. COX?] It does seem to me that such an increase would be altogether too great and ought not to be made. The increase of 20,000, as I propose, is abundantly large, and we ought not to think of going beyond that.

It is a fact, that, on our present basis of representation, each member of this House represents a constituency larger than is represented by a member of any similar body in any of the other leading nations of the world. In Great Britain, with a population of 31,628,338, the House of Commons consists of six hundred and fifty-two members, each member representing 48,500 people. In France, with a population of 36,905,788, the Chamber of Deputies consists of 532 members, each member representing almost seventy thousand people. In the German Empire, with a population of 42,727,360, the Reichstag consists of 397 members, each member representing 108,000 people. In Austria, with a population of 21,742,884, the Lower House consists of 353 members, each member representing 62,000 people. In Prussia, with a population of 25,742,404, the Lower House consists of 434 members, each member representing 60,000 people. In Spain, with a population of 16,835,506, the Cortes consists of 408 members, each member representing 41,000 people. In Italy, with a population of 27,769,475, the Camera de Deputati consists of 508 members, each member representing 55,000 people. In Hungary, with a population of 15,609,455, the House of Representatives consists of 444 members, each member representing 35,000 people. In Belgium, with a population of 5,412,231, the Chamber of Representatives consists of 124 members, each member representing 44,000 people.

It will be seen from these figures that in all these nations except one the ratio of representation is less than 100,000. We, of course, do not want a ratio of representation as small as this. But we certainly want it smaller than 164,000. I believe in a small ratio. I think it the part of wisdom to have small constituencies. The smaller we make the ratio of representation, the nearer we bring the Representative to his constituents, the better opportunity will he have to get acquainted with them and learn their wants, and the more fully qualified will he become to act as their Representative. The original idea in creating this House was to make it the direct representative of the people—the embodiment and exponent of popular sentiment. It was to secure this end that the term of membership was limited to two years. It was to make this House emphatically the exponent of the popular will that provision was made whereby its entire membership might be changed every two years. This being the case, we can only make this House what it was intended to be by making the ratio of representation comparatively small.

There are a great many objections to large constituencies. The larger his constituency the further removed a Representative is from it. Knowing little of his people and they knowing little of him, he feels under less obligation to consult their wishes than he would feel if his constituents were less numerous and he could know more of them. Neither Representative nor people will take much interest in each other so long as they are strangers to each other. The object should be to bring the Representative as near to his people as possible. Let him get acquainted with them and learn their wishes. By so doing we make this emphatically the "popular branch" of our National Legislature, a body where the will of the people is regarded, their interests consulted, and their rights maintained.

I am aware, sir, that there are gentlemen on this floor who are opposed to any increase of reprsentation above the present number of 293. But in this I must be allowed to take issue with them. I confess that I cannot see any serious objection to an increase. I do, however, see a great many strong reasons in favor of it, some of which I have already given and others I will give before I get through. The great objection urged against an increase is that a large House is disorderly, and that even in this body, with only 293 members, it is impossible for those who sit on the outer circle to keep track of what is being done, thus making it impossible to transact business with that expedition with which it could be transacted in a smaller body. If such be the case, every one knows that the fault must be with the members and with them alone. If members are determined to create disorder and thus interfere with the transaction of public business, they will do so whether their number be 293 or 325. On the contrary, if they are disposed to preserve order and give their attention to the business before the House, they can do so as easily with a membership of 325 as with one of 293.

It may be that business can be transacted more rapidly in a small than in a large House. Yet I cannot believe that an addition of 32 members to our present number would cause business to drag along any more slowly than it does now. But the rapid transaction of business is neither the only nor the greatest question to be considered in making this apportionment. If it were, then it would be the part of wisdom to limit representation here to 50 or 25 members, for there can be no doubt that, with a House of such small proportions, we could not only have better order, but could easily transact in three months the business that now requires six. But there are other questions besides the rapid transaction of business to be considered, and the most important of these is to see that the people have such representation in this body as will give voice to their wishes, best promote their welfare in all their varied interests, and make them secure in all their rights and privileges. Now, I hold that we can more readily secure these objects by having small than by having large constituencies. Give us a membership in this body of 325, and each member will then represent 152,000 people, which are all that any one man can represent with any degree of satisfaction to himself or justice to them.

But, sir, I wish to say another thing, and that is, that the people of this country during the hundred years of our national life have always favored a comparatively small ratio of representation. At every decade but one since the first apportionment act, there has been an increase in the number of Representatives in this body. In 1789 the number of Representatives was fixed by the Constitution at 65. Three years after that, in 1792, the first apportionment act was passed, increasing the number to 105, allowing one member to every 33,000 people. In 1802 the number was increased to 141 with a ratio the same as before. Ten years after this the ratio was increased to 35,000, and the membership of the House to 181. In 1822 the number of Representatives was increased to 212, each member representing 40,000 people. In 1832 the ratio was fixed at almost 48,000, which gave a membership of 240. In 1842 the number of Representatives were cut down to 223, making the ratio of representation a little over 70,000. Ten years after this the ratio was 93,420 and the membership 233. In 1862 the membership was fixed at 241 and the ratio at 126,823. In 1872 there was another increase, the membership being fixed at 293, with a ratio of 131,425.

These figures show that the general policy of Congress has been to increase the number of members in this body at each apportionment. That policy has worked well and has given abundant satisfaction, and I cannot see any good reason why we should not adopt it at this time. There may be some disadvantages in a large House of 325 members, as there are in a House of 293 members, and would be in one of 200 members, but the advantages so far preponderate in favor of a large House that I am surprised that any one should oppose it. It is not necessary that I should stop to specify all these advantages, but there are a few to which I wish to call attention in order to emphasize them, although some of them have been referred to by gentlemen who have already spoken on this question. In speaking on this subject Chancellor Kent uses the following language:

> A due acquaintance with the local interests of every part of the Union ought to be carried into the House, and a sufficient number collected for all the purposes of information, discussion, and diffusive sympathy with the wants and wishes of the people.

These words are to the point in regard to the measure now before us. A large House and small constituencies are necessary to secure this "information, discussion, and diffusive sympathy with the wants and wishes of the people" which are here spoken of as so desirable. With a small constituency the individual Representative is brought nearer to his people than with a large constituency. He thus comes to understand their circumstances and wants and is thus better able to serve them. Besides this, with a large representation, you secure a great diversity of talent and a vast amount of mental force which cannot fail to be profitable in investigating and discussing the almost innumerable variety of questions which come before this body. In a large House you will find one man who is well informed in regard to one subject, and another in regard to another subject, and thus you get a variety of intelligence and information which is extremely valuable.

There is something, too, in the point already made, that large bodies are less apt to be corrupt, that they are not so easily influenced (because they cannot be) by large corporations and special interests.

Again, a large House helps wonderfully in committee work. It gives you large committees, thus dividing the work and causing it to be better and more promptly done. In fact, in almost every point of view a large House is desirable, and I hope to see this House enlarged to 325 members. While I think that this number is none too large, I think it is the fairest to all sections of the country of any yet suggested. I know that it is impossible to fix upon any number that will not be liable to the charge of unfairness in some directions. But we should endeavor to give as little cause for such a charge as possible. During the past ten years our population has increased 11,000,000, and this fact is recognized more fully in my proposition than in any other yet made. I propose to give an additional representation of 32 members to this additional population. If this be done there will be a gain in representation in twenty-two States and a loss in only three. The gain will be as follows:

Arkansas, 1; California, 2; Georgia, 1; Illinois, 1; Iowa, 2; Kansas, 4; Kentucky, 1; Massachusetts, 1; Michigan, 2; Minnesota, 2; Mississippi, 1; Missouri, 1; Nebraska, 2; New York, 1; North Carolina, 1; Ohio, 1; Pennsylvania, 1; South Carolina, 2; Texas, 5; Virginia, 1; West Virginia, 1, and Wisconsin, 1.

The States losing are as follows: Maine, 1; New Hampshire, 1; Vermont, 1.

It will be seen by consulting the figures giving the population of the several States that wherever there is a gain on a fraction in the above list, that gain is on a large fraction and, in almost every instance, in a State where the population is increasing with great rapidity. For instance, California gains one on a fraction of 105,156; Iowa on a fraction of 105,560; Kansas on a fraction of 84,530; Kentucky on a fraction of 129,648; Massachusetts on a fraction of 112,046; Michigan on a fraction of 117,271; Nebraska on a fraction of 148,621; New York on a fraction of 70,912; South Carolina on a fraction of 84,186; Texas on a fraction of 73,514; Virginia on a fraction of 145,652, and Wisconsin on a fraction of 100,232.

Nearly all of these States are now growing rapidly, and it is highly probable that in a majority of them the population will so increase as to swell their respective fractions to the full ratio of representation very soon after the apportionment bill which we are now considering goes into effect. Indeed, I shall be disappointed if every one of these States is not entitled on an even division to the gain above given it on a fraction before half the present decade is gone by.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I wish to say that I am in favor of passing an apportionment bill before this Congress expires, provided we can get a bill that is fair and just to all sections of the country and that is not partisan or sectional in its character. But if we are to have a narrow, contracted, sectional, and partisan measure, I for one will not favor it. We had better let the matter go over to the next Congress than to pass a measure that is not equally fair and just to each and every portion of the country. If we are to frame an apportionment act at all, let us undertake the work with a disposition to do right. In a matter of such national importance we should endeavor to act in a statesmanlike manner. I want to see the members of this House look at this matter from a national stand-point. I want to see them take views as broad as the nation itself. I want to see them come up to and occupy the plane of a true and exalted statesmanship, and then we shall get an apportionment act that is both creditable to ourselves and just to the country.

Mr. ROBESON. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] having charge of the bill.

Mr. COX. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RYON] to offer an amendment of which he gave notice about four weeks ago.

Mr. CONGER. I object to that; the general debate on this bill has not been closed.

Mr. COX. I call for the previous question.

Mr. ROBESON. I trust the gentleman will not call the previous question until we have had further opportunity for debate.

Mr. RYON, of Pennsylvania. I offer this amendment——

Mr. CONGER. I object to any amendment being offered until general debate is closed.

Mr. COX. I call the previous question on the bill and amendments.

Mr. CONGER. We have several amendments to offer.

Mr. RYON, of Pennsylvania. I offer this amendment to come in at the end of the third section of the bill reported by the majority of the committee, and ask that it be read.

Mr. CONGER. I object to the reading of any amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] rises and demands the previous question.

Mr. SPRINGER. I thought it was understood that when general debate closed amendments could be offered and be considered as pending. I suggested an amendment during this general debate, and was informed that it could be offered when the general debate had been closed. I desire to offer it now.

The SPEAKER. That can be done by general consent.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I desire to suggest to the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] that there are gentlemen on this side of the House, five or six of them, who want an opportunity to be heard. I hope the gentleman will not demand the previous question for at least an hour.

Mr. COX. I would be very glad, after the previous question has been ordered, to yield my hour to gentlemen on the other side.

Mr. CONGER. I desire to say——

Mr. RYON, of Pennsylvania. I believe I have the floor to offer an amendment.

Mr. CONGER. When the chair was occupied by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CLYMER] when this bill was last under consideration, and the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND] obtained the floor for an hour which he has occupied this morning—at that time there were on the Speaker's list the names of fifteen members (I have a copy of it here in Mr. CLYMER'S own handwriting) who desired to speak upon this bill; and not one of them has yet had the opportunity.

Mr. COX. And whenever I proposed to call up the bill you voted it down; you would not allow it to come up for debate.

Mr. CONGER. Here are fifteen members, whose names are on the Speaker's list, who have as yet had no opportunity to speak.

Mr. COX. I will yield my hour to them.

Mr. CONGER. We do not want the gentleman's hour.

Mr. ROBESON. We want our own hour.

Mr. COX. I will yield my hour.

Mr. CONGER. We do not take that hour.

Mr. COX. Then I call the previous question.

Mr. ROBESON. I desire to say that there have been six more speeches on the other side than have been accorded this side in the discussion of this question.

Mr. COX. That is not correct.

Mr. ROBESON. And we mean to have a free discussion on this question.

Mr. MORRISON. Well, take all you can get.

Mr. COX. The gentleman's statement is not correct; I say that over and over again.

The SPEAKER. There is no occasion for any excitement.

Mr. KEIFER. Nobody is excited.

Mr. COX. I will insist upon my right, and I am not going to get red in the face talking about it. I call the previous question, and will yield my hour to gentlemen on the other side if they choose to take it.

Mr. ROBESON. I do not know that the gentleman has any hour until the previous question has been ordered.

Mr. COX. The gentleman had better read the rules.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] rises and makes a demand for the previous question, and he can take his hour before or after the main question is ordered.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. I suggest that there be two hours' further debate and then we proceed to vote on the bill and amendments, voting first on the proposition for the highest number of Representatives, and so on down.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. THOMPSON] suggests that gentlemen on the left of the Chair have two hours further for debate.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. Yes, sir, provided that we will then vote on the bill and amendments, voting first on the highest number, and so on down.

Mr. CONGER. If gentlemen on the other side do not wish to speak, why not let gentlemen on this side go on and talk until they have had an opportunity to be heard?

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. They might never get through.

Mr. COX. Gentlemen on the other side have had opportunities, but they always voted down their opportunities.

Mr. ROBESON. Oh, no.

Mr. CONGER. Five gentlemen of the committee have spoken on the other side to two on this.

Mr. COX. I have asked you to take an hour, and you will not do it.

Mr. CONGER. We do not like to take gifts in that way.

Mr. COX. I will give it to you in advance.

Mr. CONGER. We want what belongs to us, if we can get it.

Mr. COX. All you want is to talk; why do you not talk?

Mr. CONGER. The gentleman talked his hour out, and, I thought, said some very interesting things. My friends differed with me, however. [Laughter.] And the gentleman's time was extended by unanimous consent.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask the gentleman from New York to allow me to offer an amendment so that it may be pending when the previous question is called.

Mr. CONGER. I object to that.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to state the present situation of the bill. The original bill proposes 301 as the number of Representatives; the substitute as offered by the gentleman from Kentucky was for 311; the amendment to the substitute as offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SHERWIN] was for 319, and the amendment by the gentleman from New York to the original text proposed 307.

Those are the amendments actually in and pending. There have been various notices of amendments. The present occupant of the chair has not presided during the entire discussion of this subject, but he understands that notice was given by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RYON] and by other gentlemen of their intention to offer amendments if opportunity should present. That is the situation.

Mr. RYON, of Pennsylvania. The chairman of the committee has yielded to give me an opportunity to offer my amendment.

Mr. CONGER. In regard to the statement of the Chair, I wish to say a word. The first bill is the bill sent to the committee, House bill No. 6958.

The SPEAKER. Proposing 301 Representatives.

Mr. CONGER. I am giving the number of the bill. The second proposition is the substitute of the majority of the committee, House bill No. 7026. Next in order would be the substitute offered by the minority of the committee for House bill No. 7026. Now that substitute does not apply to any other of the bills.

The SPEAKER. There cannot be two substitutes.

Mr. CONGER. I mean the amendment. Bill No. 7026 is the amendment offered by the minority. Now, there is no amendment by the minority either to the original bill sent to the committee or to the amendment proposed by the gentleman who has charge of this matter; and if his proposition is adopted, then there is nothing to which to attach the minority proposition.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is mistaken. If the amendment to the original text should be adopted in lieu of the original bill as referred, then the question would come up on the substitute.

Mr. CONGER. Not if the previous question was pending.

The SPEAKER. The previous question is pending on the substitute and the amendment to the substitute, as well as on the amendment in the first degree to the original proposition.

Mr. CONGER. Then there would be no opportunity to make these amendments to any other bill or proposition.

The SPEAKER. Why, after the original text had been perfected, or if it should not be disturbed, the question would then come up on the substitute and the amendment to the substitute, the first vote being on the amendment to the substitute.

Mr. CONGER. After the previous question has been ordered there can be no further amendment.

The SPEAKER. Prior to the ordering of the previous question there can be amendments in the first and the second degree to the original bill, and then there can be a substitute and a single amendment to the substitute. This is the extent allowed by the rules.

Mr. CONGER. There are now two amendments pending to the original bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not. The Chair understands there is still room for an amendment to the amendment to the original bill.

Mr. COX. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RYON] desires to offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER. If that should come in as an amendment to the amendment to the original bill, no further amendment would be in order under the rules.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. I wish to put an inquiry to the Chair. A few days ago I moved an amendment, which was admitted by unanimous consent and printed in the RECORD, to strike out all after the enacting clause of the original bill——

Mr. CONGER. I object to any further amendments now.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. I wish to put a question to the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. A few days ago I offered an amendment, which was printed in the RECORD and to which there was no objection, to strike out all after the enacting clause of the original bill and to insert a provision fixing 315 as the number of Representatives. That is pending before the House, surely.

The SPEAKER. Did the gentleman offer that as an amendment to the amendment of the original bill?

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. Not an amendment to the amendment.

The SPEAKER. It could not come in in any other way.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. It was offered as an amendment to the original bill—to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert.

The SPEAKER. There is one amendment pending to the original bill—the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York, proposing 307 as the number of Representatives. The amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. THOMPSON] might come in as an amendment to that amendment, but not as a substitute.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. I desire to ask whether my amendment is not pending before the House in that shape?

The SPEAKER. The Chair was not aware of that fact. He will cause to be read what was stated at the time.

Mr. CONGER. I object to the offering of any amendments while the gentleman from New York still holds the floor.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will conform to the rules of the House in every respect.

Mr. COX. I insist on my demand for the previous question.

The SPEAKER. Gentlemen in front will be kind enough to be seated. The Clerk will read from the RECORD.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a substitute for the apportionment bill which I propose to offer when I get the opportunity to do so.

There was no objection and it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. If that is the statement, then the RECORD is in error; but I will have to stand by it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair must be bound by it. On examination the Chair found that to be the case. Now, after research the Chair will state the exact situation of the bill. There is a place where an amendment to the amendment to the original text comes in, and after that no other amendment under the rules can be received at present.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. Then I offer mine now.

Mr. COX. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania to move his amendment.

Mr. CONGER. The proffer of an amendment does not carry it in as a proposition before the House. If it does, I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York yields to the gentleman from Pennsylvania to offer his amendment.

Mr. CONGER. We object to it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can object, but the majority of the House has control of the matter.

Mr. CONGER. But I alone can compel the Chair to abide by the rules.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan will be kind enough to point out any rule the Chair has not complied with.

Mr. CONGER. This bill has not been read by sections, and I demand it shall be read by sections before an amendment is received.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will point to the rule for that.

Mr. COX. It is not in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. This is in the House.

Mr. CONGER. But this bill has never been read before the House for amendment.

Mr. COX. Yes; it has.

Mr. CONGER. Not for amendment.

The SPEAKER. The bill is open for amendment and has been open for amendment or otherwise amendments would not be pending.

Mr. CONGER. They are only pending as reports from committees.

The SPEAKER. Three amendments having been allowed there can under the rule be a fourth.

Mr. CONGER. There is no amendment pending but as the report of committees.

The SPEAKER. They are amendments nevertheless.

Mr. CONGER. But only as reports of committees.

The SPEAKER. There is no distinction which the rules recognize between an amendment offered by a committee and an amendment offered by an individual member.

Mr. COX. They are not all amendments of committees.

Mr. CALKINS. When does the time come when any member of the House may offer an amendment?

The SPEAKER. That depends on the majority of the House, which has control of the matter.

Mr. WILSON. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WILSON. Some days ago I gave notice of an amendment which I proposed to offer, not touching the number of members of Congress hereafter, but re-enacting section 23 of the Revised Statutes.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from New York yield for that purpose?

Mr. WILSON. The chairman of the committee said I should have an opportunity to do so. He asked me to postpone offering it until before the previous question was called. I desire to have that opportunity now.

Mr. CONGER. There are two irregular amendments now.

Mr. COX. There can be no more amendments.

Mr. WILSON. I ask, in view of the notice I gave and the promise of the chairman of the committee, that I may be allowed to offer it.

Mr. COX. I made no promise.

Mr. WILSON. The gentleman absolutely promised I should have an opportunity to offer that amendment before the previous question was called.

Mr. COX. All my promises are of record.

Mr. WILSON. It was a promise to me, and not of record.

Mr. COX. Then I do not remember it.

Mr. WILSON. I most distinctly remember it.

Mr. RYON, of Pennsylvania. I object to any amendment until mine is before the House.

The SPEAKER. There is but one amendment under the rules which can now come in and that is an amendment to the amendment of the original text. The gentleman from New York has yielded to the gentleman from Pennsylvania to offer an amendment to the amendment to the original text of the bill, after which he demands the previous question.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to know whether the motion for the previous question embraces the engrossment and third reading, or whether it is upon the bill and pending amendments——

The SPEAKER. The Chair will cause to be read the rule governing the previous question. The first clause of Rule XVII provides that the demand for the previous question may be upon a pending amendment or a series of amendments embracing all authorized motions up to the engrossment and third reading of the bill. The Clerk will read the rule.

The Clerk read as follows:

There shall be a motion for the previous question, which, being ordered by a majority of members present, if a quorum, shall have the effect to cut off all debate and bring the House to a direct vote upon the immediate question or questions on which it has been asked and ordered. The previous question may be asked and ordered upon a single motion, a series of motions allowable under the rules, or an amendment or amendments, or may be made to embrace all authorized motions or amendments and include the bill to its engrossment and third reading, and then, on renewal and second of said motion, to its passage or rejection. It shall be in order, pending the motion for or after the previous question shall have been ordered on its passage, for the Speaker to entertain and submit a motion to commit, with or without instructions, to a standing or select committee; and a motion to lay upon the table shall be in order on the second and third reading of a bill.

Mr. ROBESON. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The Chair decides that the present situation is controlled by the clause just read, where the previous question may be demanded on a series of amendments; that motion being in order under the terms of this rule.

Mr. WILSON. I ask whether under the circumstances I have the right to offer the amendment for incorporation as a section in this bill?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has no right except such as the rules give him, such rights as are known under the rules.

Mr. WILSON. But by the promise of the chairman of the committee I was to be allowed to offer this amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York in demanding the previous question under the rule as it stands can confer no right to offer an amendment under the circumstances. Two amendments are already proposed to the original text; then the gentleman demands the previous question as far as the rule permits.

Mr. WILSON. If he does not give the right to have this amendment considered as pending or read for consideration at this time, then I hope that the previous question will be voted down, so that I can then offer it.

Mr. CONGER. I object to any further amendments until debate has been closed upon this bill.

The SPEAKER. The demand for the previous question closes the debate and covers every amendment which under the rule is not excluded.

Mr. WILSON. Then I give notice that if this amendment is not permitted to come in I shall do what I can to defeat the demand for the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania submits an amendment under authority of the chairman of the committee, which completes the series of amendments which may be received under the rule.

Mr. WILBER. Is there to be no opportunity for amendments except for the other side?

Mr. ROBESON. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ROBESON. Is there to be an opportunity to offer other amendments? I want to understand whether gentlemen on the other side mean to cut off all opportunity on this side of the House to offer amendments.

Mr. COX. You have an amendment already, 319, agreed to by your best men.

Mr. WILSON. Under the notice which I had from the chairman of the committee, have I the right to have this proposed amendment read?

The SPEAKER. The amendment can be read by consent.

Mr. COX. I object to it. The gentleman can have it printed.

Mr. WILSON. I do not want to have it printed. I want to have it read.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The Clerk read as follows:

And it shall be unlawful to divide any county——

Mr. CONGER. Where does that come from?

The SPEAKER. It is proposed as an amendment to the amendment to the original text, and completes the series of amendments admissible under the rule.

Mr. CONGER. Where is it to come in?

Mr. RYON, of Pennsylvania. It is proposed as the third section to the bill.

Mr. CONGER. There is already pending an amendment.

The SPEAKER. Well, there can be one in the second degree also.

Mr. CONGER. This is an amendment in the third degree to the original bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the gentleman is mistaken, th record does not bear him out.

Mr. COX. This is an amendment to the amendment to the original text of the bill.

Mr. CONGER. This bill, No. 7026, is reported as a substitute for the original bill, as it shows on its face.

The SPEAKER. The committee must bring back the original bill referred to them, otherwise the House would not be in possession of the very basis of the reference which caused their action.

Mr. CONGER. That is a substitute presented by the chairman of the committee, and it shows on its face that it is presented as a substitute.

The SPEAKER. The Chair cannot help what may be on the face of the bill. It is the duty of the committee to report back the original bill which was referred to them.

Mr. CONGER. They have reported a substitute for the original bill.

The SPEAKER. That is the first amendment.

Mr. CONGER. Then there is a minority report to the bill making——

The SPEAKER. There is a minority bill, 319, which is an amendment to the 311 substitute of the committee. But the original bill must come back, and amendments to perfect that original bill are allowed in two degrees. Now, the gentleman from Pennsylvania offers the remaining amendment to perfect the text of the original bill.

Mr. PAGE. I rise to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. PAGE. Would it be in order to amend the minority report by increasing the number from 319 to 322?

The SPEAKER. It would if the previous question is voted down and the amendment to the substitute voted on, so as to have no amendment pending to the substitute. Then there would be of course the right to offer an amendment to that substitute, the one pending now having been cleared out of the way.

Mr. PAGE. If the previous question is sustained there will be no opportunity to offer 322 as a substitute for 319?

The SPEAKER. There will not.

Mr. WILSON. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WILSON. If the previous question shall not be sustained, then will the opportunity be presented of offering new sections?

The SPEAKER. In that case the bill will be opened, of course, for a vote on the amendments, and as fast as one is gotten out of the way another can be offered under the rule.

Mr. CONGER. Not after the main question has been ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not say so, but said the reverse.

Mr. REED. After the previous question is voted down we can then offer amendments.

The SPEAKER. After the pending amendments are cleared away. Amendments cannot be offered beyond the extent allowed by the rule.

Mr. ROBESON. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ROBESON. I desire to know if the Chair has ruled that this bill is open to amendment before it is read by sections for amendment?

The SPEAKER. This bill has been opened to amendment and amendments are pending.

Mr. ROBESON. I asked the Chair if he has ruled that this bill has been read by sections for amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Chair never rules when the occasion for the ruling is not presented.

Mr. ROBESON. Then I ask if the bill is open for amendment before that happens? I make the point of order that this bill is not open to any amendment—although it may be open to notice of amendments—until it is read by sections for amendment.

Mr. COX. The bill has been read.

Mr. ROBESON. That is a question of fact.

Mr. COX. I state it as a fact, of course.

The SPEAKER. The bill has been read, amendments are pending, and the Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. BAYNE. I desire to ask a parliamentary question. Suppose the main question to be ordered, can further amendments then be offered to this bill?

The SPEAKER. Not if the main question is ordered.

Mr. BAYNE. Then I desire to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill on the other side to permit amendments to be offered. I have an amendment that I desire to offer to this bill. I regard it as a very important amendment, important to that side of the House, important to this side of the House, in the interest of fair play all around and not partisan in its character at all. And I say the gentleman from New York would facilitate the passage of this bill if he will listen to these suggestions that come from different sides, and permit amendments to be freely voted on. They can be voted down if they are not acceptable to the House. I very much desire to offer this amendment, because I think it is a very important one.

Mr. BRIGHT. Let it be read for information.

Mr. BAYNE. I ask that my amendment be read for information.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. COX. I object.

The SPEAKER. The amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RYON] will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

And it shall be unlawful to divide any county or parish where any district shall consist of more than one county or parish; and in all districts consisting of more than one county or parish, the counties or parishes contiguous to each other having the number of inhabitants nearest to the parish fixed by law for a Representative in the Congress of the United States, shall be made a representative district.

Mr. RYON, of Pennsylvania. I desire to say——

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order.

Mr. RYON, of Pennsylvania. I wish merely to state that that is an amendment to the third section.

The SPEAKER. The question is on ordering the main question.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 102, noes 10.

Mr. CONGER. No quorum.

The SPEAKER. A quorum not having voted, the Chair will order tellers.

Mr. ROBINSON. I do not think the question is understood. Some gentlemen near me think we are voting on amendments and some that we are voting on ordering the main question.

The SPEAKER. The vote is on ordering the main question on the bill and amendments pending thereto, as far as the rule will permit.

Mr. FRYE. I rise to inquire as to the matter of fact. Is the motion to order the main question on the bill and pending amendments or on the amendments only?

The SPEAKER. The Chair understood the gentleman from New York to make his motion to the extent up to the engrossment of the bill and the pending amendments. But under the rule the main question could be ordered on a single amendment, or single motion, or a series of amendments, or upon the bill and amendments up to the third reading.

Mr. FRYE. If the gentleman would confine his demand for the previous question to the pending amendments, the bill would then be open to further amendments?

The SPEAKER. It would. That is the only way in which further amendments could come in after ordering the main question.

Mr. CONGER. That would not give the opportunity for debate?

Mr. COX. It would give you a chance to offer amendments.

Mr. CONGER. It would give no opportunity for debate. I have made the point that no quorum has voted on the demand for the previous question.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. ANDERSON and Mr. COX were appointed.

The tellers took their places, but before the count was concluded,

Mr. CONGER said: What is the report of the tellers?

The SPEAKER. The tellers have not yet concluded their report.

The count was concluded, and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 136, noes 10.

The SPEAKER. The tellers report ayes 136, noes 10.

Mr. CONGER. I move to adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The Chair votes in the affirmative, making a quorum.

Mr. CONGER. Before the Chair made the announcement, I moved to adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman cannot interrupt the announcement by the Chair.

Mr. CONGER. I did interrupt it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair can recognize no such interruption. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] moves that the House adjourn.

Mr. CONGER. And I move that when the House adjourns it be to meet at ten o'clock to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. That would be a recess.

Mr. CONGER. Then I move to meet at twelve o'clock to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. That would be a change of the rule.

Mr. CONGER. I am coming to that.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the first motion of the gentleman.

Mr. CONGER. I want the other motion to be pending also.

The SPEAKER. It is not the duty of the Chair to suggest; but the Chair is somewhat familiar with dilatory motions. [Laughter.] The gentleman can move that when the House adjourns to-day it be to meet on some day after to-morrow. The Chair would recognize that motion.

Mr. CONGER. I supposed the Chair would overrule me, upon which I proposed to appeal.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not overrule anything. The Chair only stated that the gentleman could not make a motion the effect of which would alter a rule of the House. The Chair has submitted every motion the gentleman has a right to make.

Mr. CONGER. Well, I move that when the House adjourns to-day it be to meet the day after to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. That motion would be in order. The gentleman from Michigan first moves that the House adjourn, and pending that motion he moves that when the House adjourns to-day it be to meet on Saturday next.

Mr. PAGE. Pending that motion I move that the House take a recess until three o'clock this afternoon.

The SPEAKER. That would not be in order pending a motion to adjourn to a day certain, for the motion to adjourn would have the precedence under the rule. The motion for a recess might be pending, but it could not be voted on before the motion to adjourn.

Mr. PAGE. Does the Chair rule that I cannot make that motion? If so, I will appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will cause the rule to be read; clause 4, Rule XVI.

The Clerk read as follows:

When a question is under debate, no motion shall be received but to fix the day to which the House shall adjourn, to adjourn, to take a recess, to lay on the table, for the previous question, (which motions shall be decided without debate,) to postpone to a day certain, to refer or amend, or to postpone indefinitely, which several motions shall have precedence in the foregoing order; and no motion to postpone to a day certain, to refer, or to postpone indefinitely, being decided, shall be again allowed on the same day at the same stage of the question.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the motion to take a recess would be in order if made first; but even if allowed now to be made, according to the order of motions laid down in the rules a motion to adjourn and a motion to adjourn until Saturday would take precedence.

Mr. PAGE. I have a right to appeal from the decision of the Chair respectfully.

Mr. CONGER. I will withdraw the motion to adjourn until Saturday and also the motion to adjourn.

Mr. PAGE. Then I move that the House take a recess until three o'clock this afternoon.

Mr. CONGER. And pending that motion I move that the House adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California [Mr. PAGE] moves that the House take a recess until three o'clock this afternoon; pending which motion the gentleman from Michigan moves that the House now adjourn.

Mr. CONGER. And pending that I move that when the House adjourns to-day it be to meet on Saturday next.

The SPEAKER. The question will first be taken on the latter motion.

Mr. ATKINS. Will the gentleman from Michigan yield to me for——

Mr. CONGER. Not a thing; I want to settle this question.

Mr. ATKINS. I desire to ask the gentleman if he understood the request I made?

Mr. CONGER. I could not hear, there was so much noise.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan heard something, and then declined to hear anything further. [Laughter.]

Mr. CONGER. I thought the gentleman was making some proposition.

Mr. ATKINS. I did not suppose the gentleman heard my proposition.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ATKINS] desires to submit a report from the Committee on Appropriations on the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

Mr. CONGER. I have no objection to that. I stand here in behalf of my party as urging the passage of appropriation bills against the combined democracy of the House.

Mr. COX. And I stand here for the people——

Mr. ATKINS. This is no party matter.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ATKINS] rises to submit a report touching the legislative appropriation bill.

Mr. CONGER. And pending that I desire to have order.

The SPEAKER. Gentlemen will be seated, and as far as able will be quiet. [Laughter.]

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ATKINS. I submit from the Committee on Appropriations the report which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the bill of the House No. 7101, making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1882, and for other purposes, together with the amendments of the Senate thereto, having considered the same, beg leave to report as follows:

They recommend non-concurrence in all the amendments of the Senate.

Mr. ATKINS. This report is unanimous. I ask that it be accepted, and that a conference committee be appointed.

The question being taken, the recommendation embraced in the report of the Committee on Appropriations was agreed to.

Mr. ATKINS. I now move that a conference with the Senate be asked.

The SPEAKER. The Senate might possibly recede from its amendments. Does the gentleman desire to anticipate that the Senate will insist?

Mr. ATKINS. I am not particular; but I know the Senate will not recede. I think it would expedite public business to ask a conference at once.

The SPEAKER. The Senate is not in session now, so that there could be no action there on the subject just now. The Chair, however, will be governed entirely by the wish of the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. ATKINS. I prefer that we should ask a conference at once.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee moves that the House ask a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and that conferees on the part of the House be appointed.

The motion was agreed to.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. COBB. Mr. Speaker, I desire to state that the gentleman from Connecticut, [Mr. HAWLEY,] one of the conferees on the part of the House on the District of Columbia appropriation bill, is absent—perhaps indefinitely. I cannot learn when he will return. I therefore ask that the Chair be authorized to appoint another gentleman in place of the gentleman from Connecticut.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly; and the Speaker announced the appointment of Mr. HISCOCK to fill the vacancy caused by the absence of Mr. HAWLEY.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION.

Mr. KENNA, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills and joint resolution of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. No. 6514) concerning settlement of boundary-lines between New York and Connecticut;

A bill (H. R. No. 6532) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, and for deficiencies, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. No. 7172) to admit free of duty two watches presented to Joseph Upton and G. W. Curtis for rescuing the crew and passengers of the steamship American; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 387) authorizing the printing of 30,000 copies of the third report of the United States Entomological Commission.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The question recurs on the motion of the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. CONGER,] that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Saturday next.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 1, noes 98.

Mr. CONGER. No quorum.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. COX and Mr. ANDERSON were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 1, noes 133.

Mr. CONGER. The point is still made that there is no quorum. I suppose I need not repeat it every time.

Mr. COX. I move a call of the House.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. COX, a call was ordered.

The Clerk proceeded to call the roll, when the following members failed to answer to their names:

Barlow,	Hawley,	Miles,	Singleton, O. R.
Butterworth,	Henry,	Murch,	Stephens,
Camp,	Houk,	Nicholls,	White.
Davis, Joseph J.	Hubbell,	O'Brien,
Ewing,	James,	O'Connor,
Gillette,	Mason,	Orth,

The SPEAKER. The roll-call develops the presence of 271 members. The doors will now be closed. The Chair directs the calling of the absentees, that excuses may be presented.

The names of the absentees, as already given, were called, no excuse being presented.

Mr. MONEY, (when the call was concluded.) I desire to state that my colleague from Mississippi, Mr. SINGLETON, is dangerously ill. I ask that he be excused.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. COX. I ask the absentees be sent for.

Mr. BROWNE. My colleague, Mr. ORTH, has been confined to his room for three days by illness, and I ask that he be excused.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. STEELE. My colleague, Mr. DAVIS, of North Carolina, is absent by leave of the House.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF, of Ohio. My colleague, Mr. BUTTERWORTH, is also absent by leave of the House.

The SPEAKER. Those who are absent by leave of the House will not be sent for.

Mr. WILSON. I ask that Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia, be excused.

Mr. HUNTON. I object.

Mr. WILSON. He was here, and remained as long as he could. He has gone home on account of illness. He ought to be excused.

Mr. CONGER. A motion to excuse at this stage is in order; and I move therefore that Mr. STEPHENS be excused.

Mr. HUNTON. I withdraw my objection.

There was no further objection, and Mr. STEPHENS was excused.

Mr. BOYD. I move that my colleague, Mr. HENDERSON, be excused on account of illness.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. BAILEY. My colleague, Judge MASON, has been confined to his room by illness for several days, and I move he be excused.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. HUBBELL. Is my name entered as present?

The SPEAKER. It is not, as the gentleman did not answer. The Chair will take notice, however, that the gentleman is present.

Mr. ANDERSON. General HAWLEY, of Connecticut, was compelled to leave the city last evening, and I move he be excused.

Mr. HUTCHINS. I object.

Mr. ANDERSON. I move that General HAWLEY be excused.

Mr. ANDERSON demanded a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 64, noes 29.

So the motion was agreed to.

Mr. AIKEN. I move my colleague, Mr. O'CONNOR, be excused on account of illness. His physician has prohibited his leaving his room.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. HUTCHINS. I have urgent business which I should like to attend to, and I ask to be excused.

Mr. CONGER. No objection.

Mr. ROBESON. In order to save time, I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. HUTCHINS. I withdraw my motion.

Mr. LOWE. I move that the gentleman from Maine, Mr. MURCH, be excused on account of sickness.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. CLYMER. I move that Judge JAMES, of New York, be excused on account of illness.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. COX. I submit the following resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Sergeant-at-Arms take into custody and bring to the bar of the House such of its members as are now absent without leave of the House.

Mr. CONGER. I move that all further proceedings under the call be dispensed with.

Mr. HOOKER. I hope not; let the law be enforced.

Mr. CONGER. I demand a division on my motion.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 72, noes 97.

Mr. CONGER demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and the Speaker appointed Mr. ANDERSON and Mr. COX.

Mr. WILBER. We have a quorum present and let us go on with the business.

Mr. BUCKNER. That is what we wish to do, but when the business is brought before the House gentlemen on the other side will not vote, and we are left without a quorum.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 30, noes 111.

So the motion was disagreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question recurs on the resolution offered by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. COX.]

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. CONGER. Ought not the doors to be closed?

The SPEAKER. The Chair ordered the doors to be closed some time ago. The Clerk will read the rule.

The Clerk read as follows:

In the absence of a quorum, fifteen members, including the Speaker, if there is one, shall be authorized to compel the attendance of absent members, and in all calls of the House the names of the members shall be called by the Clerk, and the absentees noted; the doors shall then be closed, and those for whom no sufficient excuse is made may, by order of a majority of those present, be sent for and arrested, wherever they may be found, by officers to be appointed by the Sergeant-at-Arms for that purpose, and their attendance secured; and the House shall determine upon what condition they shall be discharged.

The Sergeant-at-Arms appeared at the bar of the House having in custody Mr. CAMP.

The SPEAKER. Mr. CAMP, you have been absent from the sitting of the House without its leave. What excuse have you to offer?

Mr. CAMP. I left the House about half past one or quarter to two to attend to business of importance, and when I returned I found my entrance to the House barred.

Mr. ANDERSON. I move the gentleman be excused.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Speaker, is debate now in order?

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. CHALMERS in the chair.) Debate is not now in order.

Mr. WHITE. Such being the case, I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. BLAND. I would inquire if the gentleman from Pennsylvania answered to his name on the roll-call?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The motion to adjourn is always in order.

Mr. BLAND. My inquiry is whether the gentleman from Pennsylvania is legally present, whether he answered to his name on the call of the roll, and whether the fact is not true that he was absent when the roll was called?

Mr. WHITE. I am here now.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman is present.

Mr. BLAND. I make the point of order that the gentleman was not present when his name was called and has not been excused by the House for being absent at that time without leave of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Such being the case, the point of order is probably well taken. The Chair is informed by the Clerk that the gentleman was absent from the roll-call, and that his name was included in the warrant furnished to the Sergeant-at-Arms. The Sergeant-at-Arms should have taken the gentleman in custody and presented him at the bar of the House to make excuse for his absence.

Mr. WHITE. I beg pardon. I got a very polite note from the Chair indicating that he would recognize me.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair was not then aware that the gentleman had been recorded as an absentee.

Mr. WHITE. If I am reported as an absentee the record is incorrect.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair cannot recognize any gentleman who was not here upon the roll-call and has not been excused by the House.

Mr. WHITE. But I was here.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. But have not been excused.

Mr. WHITE. But I say that I was present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Did the gentleman answer to the roll-call?

Mr. WHITE. I ought to have answered to it. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is informed that the gentleman is reported absent, that he did not answer to the roll-call.

Mr. WHITE. I beg pardon; I was in the House when the roll-call was commenced, and if I am recorded as not being present the record is incorrect.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair cannot go behind the record.

Mr. WHITE. I ask, then, that the record be corrected.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The motion is not in order at this time.

Mr. WHITE. Then by unanimous consent I ask it.

Mr. BLAND. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that the record be corrected.

Mr. BLAND. My point of order is that the gentleman was not in the House when his name was called; that he did not respond on the call of the House, and is not present to ask unanimous consent, and that under the circumstances, until he has purged himself of the contempt of the House, and been excused by the House, he can make no motion and make no request.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair sustains the point of order, but the gentleman asks unanimous consent.

Mr. BLAND. But how can he make the request?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. He states that he was present; and now asks unanimous consent to correct the record in his own case.

Mr. BLAND. If he has any excuse to offer that is another thing. Otherwise, I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Missouri object to unanimous consent?

Mr. BLAND. I do. If the gentleman states to the House that he was present during the roll-call and by some inadvertence failed to answer to his name, why of course I shall not object.

Mr. WHITE. I desire to say, Mr. Speaker, that I was in the House when the call of the House was ordered. I was in at the beginning of the proceedings and present at the beginning of the call. Possibly I was not in the House when my name was called. I may have gone out into the lobby or some of the adjacent rooms or by inadvertence did not respond.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Did the gentleman answer to either roll-call?

Mr. WHITE. I was just stating that I think I did; but at the same time I know I was in the House when the call was commenced, and if I did not answer to the call of the roll, it was by inadvertence, or as I say I was possibly temporarily absent in the lobby or smoking-room.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman present that as an excuse?

Mr. WHITE. I do.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman asks to be excused on the statement made.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CONGER. Mr. Speaker, I move that further proceedings under the call be dispensed with.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 83, noes 21.

Mr. COX demanded tellers.

Mr. KEIFER. Gentlemen would not vote against this proposition if they knew the special purpose of it. It is proposed that the House shall proceed to extend the usual courtesies to the memory of the late distinguished Senator from Wisconsin, Mr. CARPENTER. [Cries of "Regular order!"] This is the regular order. Such courtesies have never been refused heretofore.

Mr. COX. Let him go on, then, with the public business of the House.

Mr. KEIFER. I am going on with it.

Mr. COX. Why do you not vote, then?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the demand for tellers.

Tellers were ordered.

Mr. COX and Mr. ANDERSON were appointed tellers.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 110, noes 111.

So the motion was not agreed to.

Mr. CONGER. I ask the yeas and nays upon that proposition. My object is to extend the usual courtesies, which have never been refused in such cases, to the memory of Senator CARPENTER.

Mr. SPRINGER. Before the yeas and nays are called, I desire to make a proposition to the other side of the House, which I make with the consent of the gentleman from New York in charge of this bill. I suggest, then, to gentlemen on the other side of the House that this subject be postponed until to-morrow morning after the morning hour, and at that time it be taken up; that two hours for debate be allowed on the subject, and then the matter be disposed of.

Mr. CONGER. This comes up as unfinished business to-morrow, I understand, without any agreement.

Mr. SPRINGER. Is there objection to the proposition I have made?

Mr. PAGE. There is no necessity for an agreement; it comes up as unfinished business to-morrow.

Mr. SPRINGER. It will come up as it is now; but it is for the purpose of having an understanding that I have made the proposition.

The SPEAKER. It will come over with the previous question prevailing.

Mr. CONGER. No, sir; the second of the previous question is all that has taken place.

The SPEAKER. The rule does not recognize a seconding of the previous question. The main question was ordered. That was done by a vote by tellers and the yeas and nays were not called for.

Mr. CONGER. I make the point the tellers did not report the motion was carried.

The SPEAKER. The Chair announces the result, and not the tellers; and he announced the main question was ordered.

Mr. CONGER. Then he announced it in a voice that could not be heard. I did not hear it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair announced the result in a voice that could be heard. The Chair himself voted.

Mr. CONGER. The tellers did not announce the result.

The SPEAKER. The tellers announced the vote, and the Chair announced the fact that the main question was ordered.

Mr. CONGER. The Speaker merely said, by way of joke, as I supposed, that not having passed between the tellers, he voted.

The SPEAKER. Oh, no; the Chair exercised the constitutional right to vote.

Mr. CONGER. The Chair has no right to vote unless he passes between the tellers. [Cries of "Regular order!"] The count by tellers is because the House has a right to vote by tellers and not merely by a count of the Chair.

The SPEAKER. There was a quorum without the vote of the Chair.

Mr. CONGER. Oh, no.

The SPEAKER. There were 146 votes cast.

Mr. CONGER. Which is not a quorum.

The SPEAKER. There is one vacancy by resignation, and one by death, so that 146 is a quorum of the whole House. But the Chair voted.

Mr. PAGE. That was on seconding the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The rules do not recognize a second of the previous question.

Mr. CONGER. There never has been a time when the demand for a second concluded the thing.

The SPEAKER. There has been; and that occurred to-day.

Mr. CONGER. It never has been in the memory of members of this House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair submitted the question very distinctly: Shall the main question be ordered? And the Chair announced, the "ayes" had it. The Journal shows it. The gentleman, somewhat to the surprise of the Chair, omitted to call the yeas and nays.

Mr. CONGER. Before this matter is decided I ask for the minutes of the reporters. I am willing to go by them.

The SPEAKER. The motion prevailed and the main question was ordered.

Mr. COX. I rise to a question of order. I submit the gentleman from Michigan has no right to interpose this question at this time.

The SPEAKER. The Chair always hears.

Mr. CONGER. And I desire to say any such ruling as the Chair has now announced would be contrary to that spirit of fairness which I admit the Chair has always exercised.

The SPEAKER. The Chair submitted the question, as the record will show, Shall the main question now be ordered? On that question a quorum voted by tellers, and the Chair subsequently declared the main question had been ordered. The Chair then himself voted.

Mr. CONGER. I ask the Chair if I did not demand, before the vote was announced, that my motion to adjourn should be recognized?

The SPEAKER. The Chair stated distinctly that he would announce the result, and that the announcement of the result could not be interfered with by a motion to adjourn.

Mr. CONGER. But I made the motion before the Chair announced any result.

The SPEAKER. The House was dividing, and it was the duty of the Chair to announce the result before he recognized the motion to adjourn.

Mr. CONGER. Not if the motion to adjourn was intended to prevent the announcement.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has nothing to do with the motives of members or with their intentions.

Mr. COX. My friend from Michigan was caught napping; that is the truth.

The SPEAKER. There was no napping about it. The House, by a majority of a quorum, decided in favor of ordering the main question.

Mr. CONGER. I do not ask for it at this moment, but I appeal to the exact record of the reporters.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan is at perfect liberty to appeal to the record.

Mr. CONGER. I do so because the Journal can be corrected at any time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan calls for the yeas and nays on the motion that all further proceedings under the call be dispensed with.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question being taken, there were—yeas 121, nays 135, not voting 34; as follows:

So the motion to dispense with further proceedings under the call was not agreed to.

Mr. COX. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the unfinished business.

Mr. CHALMERS. I desire to make a proposition.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CHALMERS] rises for some purpose.

Mr. CHALMERS. I desire to propose that there be an agreement to proceed to vote upon the number for the next apportionment, commencing at 322 and then upon the next number below, and so on down until a majority shall agree upon the number of Representatives for this House.

Mr. CONGER. That would be good.

Mr. CHALMERS. Or commencing at 293 and voting up.

Mr. CONGER. That is a very liberal offer for the majority to make; to vote on numbers until the majority shall find its level.

Mr. CHALMERS. There is not a majority of this House on either side. Neither the minority nor the majority are agreed; the gentleman knows that very well. Therefore it is unnecessary to talk about the majority or the minority.

Mr. COX. That proposition was made by General HAWLEY the other day; that we should vote upon the different numbers until the majority shall have selected a number.

Mr. CONGER. I regret that General HAWLEY is not here to contradict the gentleman.

Mr. COX. I have made the statement, and the gentleman does not know anything to the contrary.

Mr. CONGER. I wish General HAWLEY was here.

Mr. COX. The gentleman from Michigan has no right to talk that way.

Mr. CONGER. Bring your proof.

Mr. COX. If you want to wind up this business and go to the President's reception to-night, you ought to take such a proposition as that.

Mr. CONGER. We do not want to do anything to interfere with the passage of the general appropriation bills.

Mr. COX. There is no general appropriation bill in the way.

Many MEMBERS. Oh, yes!

Mr. COX. The gentleman knows very well that the talk about appropriation bills is a mere sham for the purpose of preventing the carrying out of his duty under the Constitution.

Mr. CONGER. If it is, then it is the democratic majority that have thrust that sham upon us, and that is now pending.

Mr. WEAVER. I wish to make a proposition.

Several MEMBERS. Let us hear it!

Mr. WEAVER. My proposition is that the right and the left submit this matter to the arbitration of the center, and agree to abide by our action. We will act impartially.

Mr. BURROWS. That would be a fiat decision.

Mr. WEAVER. It would be better than the House seems able to make.

Mr. PAGE. I have a proposition I desire to make. It is that unanimous consent be given to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. WILLIAMS] to offer a resolution at this time.

Many MEMBERS. Regular order! Object!

Mr. COX. That cannot be done until the end of this legislative day.

Mr. PAGE. All right; let the gentleman from New York object.

Mr. COX. You have no right to make that proposition.

Mr. PAGE. I have a right to make it, and I have made it.

Mr. COX. You have no right to make it.

Mr. CALKINS. No right to ask unanimous consent?

Mr. PAGE. I ask unanimous consent; let the gentleman object.

Mr. CONGER. The gentleman himself may live to ask that privilege for himself. [Laughter.]

Mr. COX. I will never ask any privilege of that kind when a great constitutional question is pending.

Mr. McCOOK. Is it in order, Mr. Speaker, to ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole from the consideration of a bill for a pension to a totally blind soldier?

The SPEAKER. It is not. The regular order has been demanded; and that is not the regular order.

Mr. McCOOK. If it is in order, I would like to ask unanimous consent for that purpose. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded.

Mr. WILSON, (after a pause.) I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry; and I want the attention of the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] while I make it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. WILSON] desires to make a statement. Is there objection?

Several members objected.

Mr. WILSON. This whole question might have been disposed of long ago if a more sensible course had been taken.

Mr. CHITTENDEN, (after a pause.) I would like the attention of the House for a few minutes——

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. COOK. I object.

Mr. WHITE, (after a pause.) Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. WHITE. To make a proposition.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Several members objected.

Mr. WHITE. I think my proposition will be acceptable.

Several MEMBERS. Let us hear it?

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. COX. I object. I want to say to gentlemen——

Mr. WILSON. I object. [Laughter.]

Mr. COX. I want to say—[cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. WEAVER. I move that the House now adjourn.

Mr. SAMFORD. I rise to a question of order. Has there been any business since the last motion to adjourn?

The SPEAKER. There was a motion, on which the House voted, to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The question being taken on the motion to adjourn, there were—ayes 95, noes 103.

Mr. PAGE. I call for tellers.

Tellers were ordered.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 119, nays 133, not voting 38; as follows:

YEAS—119.

So the motion to adjourn was not agreed to.

The following additional pair was announced:

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee, with Mr. LORING, for to-day, on all questions except to make a quorum.

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

Mr. BREWER. I ask that my colleague, Mr. MCGOWAN, and the gentleman from Vermont, Mr. JOYCE, may be excused from further attendance to-day on account of illness.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. I hope that will be done.

Mr. BREWER. I know that both these gentlemen are unable to remain here.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan asks that his colleague, Mr. MCGOWAN, and the gentleman from Vermont, Mr. JOYCE, who are both present, be excused from further attendance on account of illness.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER, (after a pause.) The gentleman from Maine, Mr. LINDSEY, asks to be excused for the remainder of to-day's session on account of illness in his family. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CONGER. Why is not the order of the House executed?

The SPEAKER. The order of the House is being executed by the Sergeant-at-Arms.

Mr. CONGER. There has been a long interval since there has been any report from the Sergeant-at-Arms.

Mr. CLYMER. Some of the gentlemen who are absent are in New York.

Mr. BAKER. We ought to have a report in writing from the Sergeant-at-Arms.

Mr. HOOKER. I demand the regular order.

Mr. CONGER. If an additional force is required by the Sergeant-at-Arms, we should know it.

The SPEAKER. The Sergeant-at-Arms makes no demand for such additional force.

Mr. WARNER. The militia will be here in a few days.

Mr. CONGER. The Sergeant-at-Arms is not present to make it.

Mr. ROBESON. I move the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering the sundry civil appropriation bill.

Mr. HOOKER. I demand the regular order of business. I object to anything but the enforcement of the order of the House.

Mr. ROBESON. Let us go on with the sundry civil appropriation bill while we are waiting for report from the Sergeant-at-Arms.

Mr. WHITE. I have a proposition to make, if the House will hear me.

Mr. HOOKER. No; I object.

Mr. WHITE. I do not think gentlemen will object when they know what it is. It is in the interest of harmony. Gentlemen on both sides have been talking privately together, and I think we may arrive at some understanding.

Mr. HOOKER. I object to everything except the enforcement of the order of the House.

Mr. WHITE. I have a proposition to make, if the House will hear me.

Mr. HERNDON. I make the point of order that gentlemen must take their seats.

The SPEAKER. Gentlemen will be seated and preserve order.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WILSON. Yes; I object.

Mr. COX. I desire to make this statement, as the gentleman from West Virginia has gone out. Gentlemen on the other side have told me they would be content——

Mr. VALENTINE. I object to any debate; and I shall continue to object to any proposition from that side until they remove the guards from the doors of the House. We have tried to dispense with all further proceedings under the call, and every motion to that effect has been voted down.

Mr. MANNING. The gentlemen on the other side rendered it necessary to have a call of the House, and consequently closed doors.

Mr. COX. Having charge of this bill, I will take it for granted [cries of "Regular order!"] that I am allowed to make a proposition. It is a proposition coming from the other side, that we shall commence voting at 319, and so on down. If the other side is not satisfied with that, let them make a counter proposition.

Mr. DWIGHT. Why not vote up?

Mr. ROBESON. I will make a counter proposition that this House, having been notified by the Senate [cries of "Regular order!"] of the death of a Senator, we do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. Gentlemen must preserve order.

Mr. WHITE. I have another proposition, and it is that this matter be allowed to go over until to-morrow and we now adjourn. [Cries of "Regular order!"] I submit to gentlemen on the other side there are members who are talking over the details of some proposed settlement.

Mr. HOOKER. I object to the gentleman from Pennsylvania proceeding out of order. He and others on the other side of the House made the point of order there was no quorum present, which has caused the present obstruction of business.

The SPEAKER. The regular order has been demanded.

Mr. WHITE. I have only done it out of the kindness of my heart.

Mr. HOOKER. I object to anything being said out of order.

Mr. ATHERTON. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is not here, and I object to any man not present speaking.

Mr. WRIGHT. I ask the indulgence of the House, Mr. Speaker, that I shall be excused from further attendance at this day's session. I am ill, and unable to remain longer.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin. I ask leave of absence for this night session for the reason that I have been unable to obtain any rest or sleep during the last twenty-four hours. And in that connection, Mr. Speaker, I wish to say that the delegation from Wisconsin had hoped to obtain the adoption of the ordinary resolution of respect for our dead Senator. [Cries of "Regular order!"] We find the House in such an unfortunate condition—[cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. HOOKER. I insist that the regular order shall be maintained by the Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the motion of the gentleman from Wisconsin, to be excused from further attendance on this day's session.

Mr. HOOKER. Very well, then; let us have a vote on that, but nothing else.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin to be excused.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin. Gentlemen on the other side misunderstand me. I ask them to hear me for one minute.

Mr. HOOKER. I insist on the regular order.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin. I am entirely misunderstood by gentlemen on the other side of the House. I merely wanted to say that we make no complaint as we find the House in its present unfortunate condition.

Mr. HOOKER. I object to anything out of order.

Mr WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin. We give notice we do not at this time ask to call up the resolution of respect coming from the Senate, but will postpone doing so until the next regular session of the House. [Cries of "Regular order!"] That is all I wish to say.

Mr. HOOKER. Very well. Let that be done to-morrow.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin. That is precisely what I was trying to state, and with no desire to cast reflection on any side of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin has been excused from further attendance on this day's session.

Mr. STEELE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to be excused from further service on this day's session, as I am physically unable to stand a night session.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. WAIT. I am not able to be here at the night session. I am paired with the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. WRIGHT, who has already been excused. I staid here the other night, and was sick as a consequence. I ask to be excused.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. CALKINS. I ask that Mr. MORTON be excused. He is under the care of his physician.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. He does not ask to be excused himself.

Mr. MORTON. I have been ill for several days and am now under the care of a physician. I ask to be excused from further attendance on this day's session.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I move that my colleague [Mr. COX] be excused. He has been here for some time, and I think some rest would do him good.

Mr. COX. I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. COX. My point of order is that there is nothing in order but the regular order. I hope members will be seated so that we may know what is going on in the House.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the order of the House that the Sergeant-at-Arms shall arrest and bring before the bar of the House the absentees; which order is being executed.

Mr. PHISTER. Mr. Speaker, I am not able to be in the House to-night. I have not been well for some time, and I ask permission therefore to retire for the balance of the session to-day. It is a favor that I have never yet asked of the House, and I would not ask it now but for the fact that I am positively unable to remain.

Mr. SIMONTON. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SIMONTON. I wish to know if it is competent for the House under this proceeding to excuse members or to transact any business except, under the call of the House, to excuse members who may be brought in by the Sergeant-at-Arms on the warrant of the House.

Mr. PHISTER. I hope the gentleman from Tennessee will not make the point of order on this motion. I have announced my inability to remain here, and I hope no objection will be made.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that it will require a vote of the House where a question is raised to excuse a member. Does the gentleman from Tennessee demand that the regular order shall be proceeded with in that respect?

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Illinois. I hope unanimous consent will be given the gentleman from Kentucky.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not understand the gentleman from Tennessee as making an objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky, and if no objection is made the Chair assumes that the request is granted by unanimous consent.

Mr. ATKINS. I have no objection to the gentleman from Kentucky being excused or to any other gentleman being excused. I would like to be excused myself, but what I want to know is, can the House transact any business whatever excepting that which is necessary to produce a quorum which it is now proceeding to accomplish? In other words is there a House in parliamentary parlance until that action of the House is concluded and a quorum produced?

The SPEAKER. The practice of the House has always been under such circumstances to allow gentlemen to state their desire to be excused.

Mr. ATKINS. I know that is the practice, but my point is whether, even by unanimous consent, it is in order for the House to transact any business in the absence of a quorum?

Mr. PHISTER. Do I understand, Mr. Speaker, that I have been excused from the attendance to-night?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has heard no objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky. The Chair understands the gentleman from Tennessee as not pressing the point of order.

Mr. ALDRICH, of Rhode Island. Mr. Speaker, I ask that my colleague, Mr. BALLOU, be excused for this day's session on account of ill-health.

Mr. HUTCHINS. I would like to ask the question: If nine members are allowed to go for every one who is brought in, how long we will have to remain here until we get a quorum?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is unable to answer that question.

The gentleman from Rhode Island moves that his colleague, Mr. BALLOU, be excused.

Pending a demand for a division on this question,

Mr. McCOOK said: I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. HOOKER. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOOKER. I wish to know if any new business has intervened since the last motion to adjourn was determined by the House so as to authorize this motion to be renewed.

The SPEAKER. Several excuses have been made for members, and action thereon has been taken by the House.

Mr. HOOKER. If that is the case, the motion to adjourn can be renewed for every single member who happens to be excused.

The SPEAKER. So it can.

Mr. HOOKER. There ought to be nothing in order but the report of the Sergeant-at-Arms, and under the rules of the House I hold there is nothing else in order.

Mr. PAGE. I raise the point of order that a motion to adjourn is pending.

The SPEAKER. In response to the point of order raised by the gentleman from Mississippi, the Chair will say that there were excuses made, by consent of the House, for absent members, and for members present at the call, no objection being made. Technically that requires, the Chair thinks, unanimouns consent.

Mr. HOOKER. Then I give notice that I shall object to any excuses hereafter, if such action is to be the basis for unlimited motions to adjourn.

Mr. ALDRICH, of Rhode Island. The House was dividing upon the motion to excuse my colleague.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi objected, as he had a right to object under the circumstances.

Mr. PAGE. There have been several leaves of absence granted——

The SPEAKER. That was by consent; but the gentleman from Mississippi now raises the question and objects.

Mr. ALDRICH, of Rhode Island. But leave of absence has been granted by direct vote of the House to-day.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks they were granted by consent, no objection being made to that course of proceeding; but the gentleman from Mississippi now raises the direct issue, and the Chair must recognize it under the rules.

Mr. KNOTT. Mr. Speaker, I am requested by the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. HUBBELL,] who left the Chamber a short time ago quite sick, and who has been unwell for a number of weeks, to ask the House to excuse him from further service to-day. I hope the request will be granted.

Mr. PAGE. There was a motion to adjourn. Is it in order?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will entertain the motion to adjourn in view of the action of the House in granting these leaves of absence. These motions to excuse members in consequence of sickness have been allowed by unanimous consent. The gentleman from Mississippi now raises the point and objects to further excuses.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. Then excuse members by a vote of the House.

The SPEAKER. A single member, under the circumstances that now exist in the House, the Chair thinks, can prevent a member from being excused who is present. The decision will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

It is not in order for the House to take a recess during a call of the House.—Journal, 2, 26, page 843. [No motion, except to adjourn or with reference to the call, is in order or ever entertained during the call.]

The SPEAKER. Of course the Chair has recognized requests to be excused by unanimous consent.

Mr. CONGER. Now, let that portion of the rule be read which refers to the time for offering excuses after a call of the House is ordered.

The SPEAKER. That relates to absentees. The Chair will cause to be read the rule to which the gentleman from Michigan refers.

The Clerk read as follows:

2. In the absence of a quorum, fifteen members, including the Speaker, if there is one, shall be authorized to compel the attendance of absent members, and in all calls of the House the names of the members shall be called by the Clerk, and the absentees noted; the doors shall then be closed, and those for whom no sufficient excuse is made may, by order of a majority of those present, be sent for and arrested, wherever they may be found, by officers to be appointed by the Sergeant-at-Arms for that purpose, and their attendance secured; and the House shall determine upon what condition they shall be discharged.

Mr. HOOKER. It will be observed that the rule applies only to the excuses for absentees.

The SPEAKER. And the rule has been satisfied in that respect.

Mr. HASKELL. I desire to make a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will proceed.

Mr. HASKELL. A proceeding under a call is a proceeding to compel the attendance of members of the House. Under a call of the House, unless there is a special rule specifically to the contrary, any motion concerning the attendance of a member is in order. The proof of that is seen clearly when the Sergeant-at-Arms brings in a member or reports a member sick, or when a member is taken sick upon the floor. Under a call, without any rule or decision or precedent, I submit the Chair is entitled and bound to recognize a motion concerning attendance, either to excuse or to compel attendance, either to bring a quorum here or let it go. And that has been the recognized practice.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman think that in proceeding under a call of the House to compel the attendance of absent members there is any right to break a quorum through the agency of allowing excuses for those present?

Mr. HASKELL. By the vote of a majority all can go. By a motion you can excuse a member whom the Sergeant-at-Arms has found sick in his bed. If fifteen men have the power to compel attendance they have the power also to cease compelling attendance. If they have the power to bring every member here they have the power to bring every member but one and excuse that one. The very logic of a call of the House compels the acceptance of a motion to excuse a particular member. That is an incident to the call.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that the character of the excuse to which the gentleman from Kansas refers is such that it requires unanimous consent. The ruling has always been so and the practice has always been so.

Mr. HASKELL. Is there any rule that requires that?

The SPEAKER. The practice of the House forms a rule for the action of the House?

Mr. HASKELL. I am not finding fault with the decision of the Chair; but, in this connection, since this is a good deal of a general proposition and an understanding of it may be of use in the future, I want to know if there is any rule of the House that requires the acceptance of an excuse to be by unanimous consent?

The SPEAKER. The ruling has been that no motion except to adjourn or with reference to the call is in order or ever entertained during a call. Now the Chair does not think that the question of accepting the excuse of a member who is present when that is disputed does relate to the call of the House in the manner specified in the words of the decision.

Mr. REED. I wish to ask the Chair if it is not within the power of the House to excuse a member who may be taken sick on the floor?

The SPEAKER. When some gentleman is taken sick on the floor the Chair will decide.

Mr. REED. I only wished to know if that was embraced in the Chair's decision?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has simply decided that under the practice of the House a motion, if it be resisted, to excuse a present member would not be in order; and the Chair has caused to be read the ruling in that regard.

Mr. HOOKER. And the ruling is very explicit.

The SPEAKER. But under the circumstances stated by the gentleman from Maine the Chair supposes unanimous consent would be given.

Mr. REED. I made the suggestion in no captious spirit, because it is in fact included in the general proposition of the gentleman from Kansas.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not suppose it was submitted in any factious spirit. He merely declined to rule on a supposed case.

Mr. REED. I did not wish to ask the Chair to rule on it, but only made a suggestion as to what was the necessary result of his decision.

The SPEAKER. The Chair supposes if a member was taken sick on the floor unanimous consent would be given to have him taken out.

Mr. MILLS. I desire to be excused, and I wish to state the reason for making the request.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the gentleman from Texas making a statement?

There was no objection.

Mr. MILLS. My little girl was sick all night, and I was up with her till morning. I wish to be excused at least long enough to see her.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. PAGE. Put it to a vote of the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will not put it to a vote. [After a pause.] The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. McCOOK. May I ask what has become of my motion to adjourn?

The SPEAKER. The Chair under the circumstances will submit the motion to the House.

Mr. HOOKER. What is the motion?

The SPEAKER. That the House now adjourn.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. We may as well have the yeas and nays at once on that.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 103, nays 120, not voting 67—as follows:

The following additional pairs were announced:

Mr. BERRY with Mr. PACHECO, on this vote.

Mr. KNOTT with Mr. HUBBELL, the latter being absent on account of indisposition.

Mr. RYAN, of Kansas, with Mr. PHISTER, for this evening.

Mr. STEELE with Mr. BOYD, for the remainder of to-day's session.

Mr. WRIGHT with Mr. WAIT, for the remainder of to-day's session.

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. I am a small factor in this body at any rate; and I have an engagement to visit the President to-night. I ask unanimous consent that I may be excused.

Several members objected.

Mr. CONGER. I move that further proceedings under the call be dispensed with.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 69, noes 82.

Mr. PAGE. I call for tellers.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

So the motion of Mr. CONGER to dispense with further proceedings under the call was not agreed to.

The following additional pair was announced:

Mr. MULDROW with Mr. DWIGHT.

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

Mr. WEAVER. I wish the attention of the House for a moment. [Cries of "Regular order!"] I think members will not object when they understand what I wish to say. I ask unanimous consent that we take a vote on this single proposition—whether we will accept 319 as the number of Representatives. Let a vote be taken on 319.

Mr. BLOUNT. Why stop with that?

A MEMBER. If that is voted down, what then?

Mr. HOOKER. We are willing to begin at the lowest number and go up to the highest, or to begin at the highest and go down to the lowest, taking a vote on all of them. I object to everything which does not include a vote on each proposition.

Mr. WEAVER. I am satisfied that a majority of this House would vote in favor of 319.

Several MEMBERS objected.

Mr. WEAVER. Then I ask unanimous consent to take a vote on 311.

Mr. COOK. I rise to a point of order. The confusion in the Hall is such that we cannot hear a word of what the gentleman says.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. GOODE.) It is impossible for the Chair to preserve order unless he has the assistance of members.

Mr. WEAVER. I propose now, Mr. Speaker——

Mr. CONGER. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER] is on the floor.

Mr. WEAVER. I simply wish to ask unanimous consent that we vote on three propositions—first, 322, then 319, then 311.

Mr. HOOKER. I want to say, in answer to the gentleman's suggestion, that if the various propositions be put, one at a time, under the operation of the previous question, we will agree to it, whether the vote begins with the lowest number and goes up to the highest or begins at the highest and goes to the lowest.

Mr. WEAVER. Now, I make another proposition—that we vote on 322, 319, 311, and 307.

Mr. ATKINS. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I desire to know——

Mr. COOK. Whom does the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER] represent in his proposition?

Mr. ATKINS. I believe I have the floor.

Mr. WEAVER. I have made a fair proposition.

Mr. ATKINS. I have the floor, I believe.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will recognize no gentleman till the House shall be in order.

Mr. ATKINS, (after a pause.) Now, Mr. Speaker, I rose to inquire whether the House had finished the execution of its order to send for absent members. If it has not, does it intend to do so?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The present occupant of the chair is informed that there are members still absent, and the Sergeant-at-Arms is in search of them.

Mr. ATKINS. Is the Sergeant-at-Arms now engaged in executing that duty?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. His deputies are, as the Chair is informed.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. He never goes himself; he must stay here to keep members in order.

Mr. WEAVER. Now, Mr. Speaker, my proposition, which I presume was not heard by the entire House in the confusion——

Mr. CONGER. I object to debate and insist on my motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan objects to debate.

Mr. CONGER. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question being put on the motion to adjourn, there were—ayes 68, noes 71.

Mr. CONGER. I call for tellers.

Mr. CLYMER and others called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 88, nays 115, not voting 87; as follows:

YEAS—88.

So the House refused to adjourn.

During the roll-call the following additional pairs were announced from the Clerk's desk:

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky, with Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois.

Mr. MULDROW with Mr. DWIGHT, on this vote.

Mr. ROBINSON with Mr. CLARK, of Missouri, on this vote.

Mr. HISCOCK with Mr. MCMAHON, on this vote. Mr. HISCOCK would vote "ay" and Mr. MCMAHON "no."

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. BROWNE. I have been suffering with intense headache for two hours. I am not fit to be in this House, and I ask that I be excused.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. HASKELL. I ask leave of absence for the purpose of going home and having my leg attended to. I am suffering too much to stay here, and, with due deference to the House, will have to go home whether I am excused or not. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. ANDERSON. My colleague is sick and not able to be here, and I hope he will be excused.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection being made, the motion cannot be entertained.

Mr. ANDERSON. Under a call of the House a motion to excuse a member is in order. I make that motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That point has already been ruled upon by the Speaker, and the Chair cannot entertain it.

Mr. ANDERSON. The Chair submitted a like motion this morning during a call of the House to excuse General HAWLEY, and similar motions were made to excuse other members.

Mr. HAZELTON. I am not feeling first rate to-night, and I ask to be excused. [Laughter.]

Mr. BERRY. The gentleman from Kansas ought to be excused, and I hope will be. He is sick, and shows it, and I ask the question be again put to the House.

Mr. HAZELTON. I move to amend so I may be excused also.

Mr. CULBERSON. I object.

Mr. HOUSE. There is some misunderstanding in reference to this matter. There is no objection to Mr. HASKELL being excused, as I understand he is really sick.

Mr. WILSON. He is suffering from wounds received in the Army.

Mr. HOUSE. I ask unanimous consent he be excused from further attendance on account of illness.

Mr. KLOTZ. I object.

Mr. HAZELTON. I have a proposition to submit that we take a vote on the basis of 293, those who favor it voting "ay" and those who oppose it voting "no," in order that we may test the disposition of the House.

Mr. HAYES. A sort of informal vote.

Mr. COX. I rise to a point of order.

Mr. HAZELTON. There is nothing going on, and let us see where we stand.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order being demanded the proposition is not before the House.

Mr. COX. Let members resume their seats so we may know what is going on.

Mr. HAZELTON. I understand the gentleman from New York desires me to state my proposition.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The House must come to order as no business can be transacted in this great confusion.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. As we are likely to stay here to-night I should like to have the rule against smoking enforced.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Sergeant-at-Arms will see that the rule is enforced against smoking in the Hall.

Mr. HAZELTON. My proposition is this: as a sort of test of the disposition——

Mr. KLOTZ. I demand the regular order.

Mr. HAZELTON. That is just what I am giving you, the regular order.

Mr. KLOTZ. I insist on the regular order.

Mr. HAZELTON. My proposition is that we take the sense of the House on the basis of 293 members—those in favor of it voting "ay" and those against it "no." Let us see where we stand and how far we are from anything.

Mr. COX. Does the gentleman speak for his side of the House?

Mr. HAZELTON. I speak for this side of the House. [Laughter.]

Mr. PAGE. Oh, no.

Mr. HAZELTON. Do I not speak for this side of the House? [Cries of "Yes!" "No!"]

Mr. UPDEGRAFF, of Ohio. I demand the regular order of business.

Mr. ATHERTON. I want to know whether the major-general on that side of the House has any privates?

Mr. ROBESON. I desire to submit a proposition.

Mr. KLOTZ. I demand the regular order.

Mr. ATHERTON. If it is a proposition in reference to this bill I do not object, otherwise I do.

Mr. ROBESON. It is a proposition in accordance with precedent. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is made.

Mr. ROBESON. If I am permitted to state the proposition I am sure gentlemen on the other side will accept it, as it is in accordance with precedent.

Mr. ATKINS. What is it?

Mr. ROBESON. That we call the roll and each member as his name is called shall state the number he prefers. Then we can see how near we are to agreeing. That is the only way to see whether we can come to an agreement or not. The same thing was done before on an apportionment bill ten years ago.

Mr. ATKINS. I am willing to do that.

Mr. HOOKER. Let us vote on the proposition commencing at the highest or the lowest, as gentlemen choose.

Mr. ROBESON. I make the proposition.

Mr. ATHERTON. If it is acceptable to that side of the House it will be to this.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will entertain no proposition until the House shall come to order.

Mr. WILSON. Let us try the proposition of the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. ATKINS. I believe, Mr. Speaker, that the House will agree to that proposition.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is willing to entertain it and will submit it to the House if there be no objection.

Mr. ATKINS. I do not believe there will be any objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is moved by the gentleman from New Jersey that the roll of members be called and as each member's name is called he designate the number which he prefers.

Mr. COX. I desire to say this in response to the gentleman from New Jersey——

Mr. COOK. I object.

Mr. COX. I desire the attention of members for a moment. If gentlemen upon the other side had gone in a proper way to transact this business and not attempted to delay it I think the House would have been perfectly willing to accept such a proposition as a reasonable basis of settlement. I am willing now to adopt the suggestion of the gentleman from New Jersey that each man's name be called on the roll and as it is called he name the number that he prefers and the majority shall determine the vote of the House upon the question. [Cries of "Oh, no!" on the republican side. "That is not the proposition."]

Mr. ROBESON. Mr. Speaker, my proposition was this, that the roll be called and each man name his number, and when that number is named we ascertain exactly how we stand. That being done, we have obtained a basis for a fair accommodation of the difference. Accept that if you choose, reject it if you please. [Loud cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair must insist upon order being restored in the Hall. The Sergeant-at-Arms will proceed with his mace and compel members to be seated.

The Sergeant-at-Arms proceeded through the Hall with the mace.

Mr. CONGER. I think the bird had better be put back. When the eagle is taken from its place the House is not in session by the rules of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The eagle is taken as the emblem of authority and will be replaced when the House comes to order. [After a pause.] The House is now in order and the Sergeant-at-Arms will proceed no further.

Mr. CONGER. Put the bird back.

Mr. ATKINS. I ask if the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. VAN VOORHIS] have the right to defy the authority of the House?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is not aware that such is the case.

Mr. ATKINS. They have refused to obey the order of the House. These gentlemen did not take their seats in obedience to the direct order of the Speaker that the House should be in order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that the gentlemen have complied with the demand of the Speaker.

Mr. ATKINS. They did not take their seats until after the Chair had ordered the Sergeant-at-Arms to retire. [Cries of "Regular order!"] I insist that gentlemen should be required to obey the order of the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not know the circumstances under which the Sergeant-at-Arms had been directed to act.

Mr. GOODE. I will state the Sergeant-at-Arms was directed by myself, occupying the chair at the time, to proceed with the mace through the Hall and require members to maintain order on the floor, so the public business might be proceeded with.

Mr. ATKINS. And these gentlemen have defied the House.

The SPEAKER. As soon as order was restored the Chair directed the Sergeant-at-Arms to restore the mace to its place.

Mr. ATKINS. The order that the Sergeant-at-Arms should restore the mace was given while the gentleman from New York and the gentleman from Michigan were upon the floor, having refused to take their seats, and obey the order of the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understood both gentlemen as complying with the order of the House.

Mr. ATKINS. They were not in order. Neither one was in his seat. One was far away from his seat. The Sergeant-at-Arms was standing between them; and they defied the authority of the House by refusing to be seated.

Mr. FRYE. The gentleman from Michigan was in his seat, which he now occupies.

Mr. ATKINS. He was standing up at his seat and would not take it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will endeavor to enforce the rules of the House.

Mr. ATKINS. I insist that the dignity of the House shall be respected.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is advised the gentleman from New York was making a statement.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, in response to what fell from the gentleman from New Jersey, I desire to say that he made the proposition that an informal vote should be taken which would develop the sentiment of the House, a vote to be taken in the manner he suggested. I am willing, speaking for the delegations around me, to accede to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey, and have each member, as his name is called, announce the number that he prefers.

Mr. WILSON. That is right.

Mr. HOOKER. I object to it.

Mr. CONGER. I desire to say for myself that when the gentleman from New York shall withdraw his demand for the previous question and permits us to vote on all of these propositions, we will do it. Had he not insisted upon that motion we would long before this have been through with voting. Now he refuses to do it, and I object to any informalities and desire to go on with the public business.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has not the power to withdraw the motion.

Mr. COX. If we come to a vote on each of these propositions, will my friend say that he will not make any more dilatory motions?

Mr. CONGER. If the gentleman will confer with me out in the corridor, I will give him my frank opinion.

Mr. COX. I want to talk frankly with you here.

Mr. CONGER. Let the business of the House go on. Let the gentleman withdraw his demand for the previous question.

Mr. COX. I am not at liberty to do that, as the previous question has been ordered.

Mr. CONGER. I think the gentleman is mistaken.

The SPEAKER. That has been the order of the House; the main question has already been ordered.

Mr. CONGER. If that question is raised, and if the Chair decides that now, and for the first time, then I shall appeal from that decision.

Mr. COX. The appeal comes too late

Mr. CONGER. That is the first time, as far as I am aware of it, that the Chair has made such a decision. I could not have appealed before the decision was made.

The SPEAKER. The Chair decided it at the time the order was made. The Chair then decided that the main question was ordered, and the Journal will show it.

Mr. CONGER. I advise the Chair the time will come when an appeal will be taken from that decision.

Mr. PAGE. I would like to ask the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] a question for information. Does he propose we take an informal ballot; that all proceedings meanwhile shall remain in statu quo as they appear now; that after the formal ballot we return to the possession of our original rights as we have them now?

Mr. COX. The proposition did not come from me, nor from this side.

Mr. PAGE. But I ask the gentleman from New York if that is the understanding on that side of the House?

Several MEMBERS. Of course.

Mr. PAGE. Then let me appeal to my friend from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] that if an informal ballot can be taken as suggested by the gentleman from New Jersey, [Mr. ROBESON,] and if we can then return to the same condition as we are in now without having prejudiced our case at all or our standing in this matter, I see no reason why that should not be done.

Mr. CONGER. I see a reason why this House should not determine anything with its doors barred. I have made repeated motions to discontinue further proceedings under the call, and the House has refused to order that to be done. Let us open the doors to members and let them come in. And then let such propositions be made, and not while we are shut up here as it were in a prison.

Mr. WILSON. I wish to inquire of the Chair how we are to ascertain whether there is a quorum present. I believe there is a quorum here.

The SPEAKER. There is a quorum present; but when a particular vote is reached no quorum appears, and the Chair supposes that practically a call of the House was made for the purpose of securing a quorum on such votes.

Mr. WILSON. We have been nearly six hours waiting for a quorum. A quorum is present. Let us proceed and vote.

Mr. CHALMERS. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CHALMERS. Is it in order to move another call of the House at this time?

The SPEAKER. It is not. The House is proceeding under a call now. Call cannot be piled on call.

Mr. CHALMERS. A number of gentlemen who answered to their names on the roll-call have gone.

Mr. KITCHIN. I rise to a question of order. I ask that gentlemen stop talking until members take their seats.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has asked gentlemen over and over again to take their seats.

Mr. COX. I rise to a parliamentary question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. COX. It has been suggested that gentlemen who answered to their names when the call of the House was made are now absent not by order of the House and not by leave of the House. I ask the Chair what proceeding can be adopted to bring them here?

The SPEAKER. The gentlemen who were in the House, and answered to their names at the call of the House, and have left since the doors were closed must have left upon the honor of their parol; and if they have gone out of the building the Chair is of the opinion they have violated that parol.

Mr. COX. What is the remedy?

The SPEAKER. It is not for the Chair to state what is the remedy.

Mr. CARLISLE. The Chair will permit me to state that the same condition of affairs occurred a few weeks ago during the all-night session when I had the honor of occupying the chair. A motion was made to call again the names of those who had answered on the first roll-call. Precedents were looked for, and one or two were found. Thereupon the roll was again called, and it appeared that certain gentlemen who had answered on the first roll-call were then absent; and the House by resolution directed the Sergeant-at-Arms to bring them in.

The SPEAKER. Under the practice suggested by the gentleman from Kentucky the Chair could not entertain a motion for another call of the House as a motion recognized by the rules; but he would recognize a motion for another roll-call to ascertain what members if any had violated their parol.

Mr. COX. I move that there be another call of the roll.

Mr. HOUSE. Oh, no; not another roll-call, but a call of those who answered when the call of the House took place.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is not able to make that distinction; nor does he see how the clerks could do it.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. They did the other night.

Mr. WILSON. The clerks have the list of those who answered on that roll-call and could call their names again.

Mr. TALBOTT. I desire to suggest that at the door the name of each member going out is taken down and it can be ascertained at the door whether that member has returned or not. That is a more speedy way of ascertaining what is desired than again calling the roll of the House.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. The Doorkeeper's list will show what is wanted.

Mr. ATKINS. I rise to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ATKINS. Would it not be the easiest way to ascertain whether any gentlemen who answered to their names are now absent, to get the Doorkeeper to make a report?

Mr. TALBOTT. At the door there is kept a list of all who have gone out and have not returned, who answered to their names at the call of the House.

Mr. ROBERTSON. And when they return their names are erased.

Mr. HAYES. Has not the Clerk a copy of the roll which was called at the time the call of the House was ordered?

The SPEAKER. They have the original.

Mr. HAYES. Cannot they call from that.

The SPEAKER. They can.

Mr. HAYES. I mean the roll of those who answered to their names at the call when a call of the House was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The usual way is to call the list of names of those who failed to answer.

Mr. HAYES. We want to ascertain those who answered to their names and have since gone away.

Mr. FRYE. Who answered then and who will answer now.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I move that the list of names kept by the Doorkeeper of those who have gone out of the Hall and have not returned be now called over.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will cause the roll of those who answered to their names on the original roll under the call of the House to be again called.

Mr. BAYNE. I object to that.

Mr. ATKINS. The Doorkeeper has the list of absentees.

Mr. HOUSE. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOUSE. What roll is it proposed to call now?

The SPEAKER. The roll of those members of the House who answered on the roll-call, for the purpose of ascertaining who are not now here.

Mr. ATKINS. By what order is that to be done?

The SPEAKER. Upon motion.

Mr. ATKINS. That motion should be submitted to the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ATKINS] made the motion, and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CARLISLE] stated that that was done on a former evening, and the Chair heard no objection to it.

Mr. RUSSELL, of North Carolina. Objection is made.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will cause the entire roll to be read, and that will disclose who are absent. The Clerk will now call the list of names of members.

Mr. CONGER. Pending that I move that all further proceedings under the call be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. The last motion submitted to the House and voted upon was a motion that the House adjourn. The Chair will entertain the motion that all further proceedings under the call be dispensed with.

Mr. BURROWS. That had better be done.

Mr. ACKLEN. I call for the yeas and nays on that motion.

The question was taken upon ordering the yeas and nays; and there were 40 in the affirmative.

So (the affirmative being more than one-fifth of the last vote) the yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HOUSE. I do not think members understand what we are about to vote on.

The SPEAKER. On the motion that all further proceedings under the call be dispensed with.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 98, nays 123, not voting 69; as follows:

YEAS—98.

So the motion to dispense with further proceedings under the call was not agreed to.

At the conclusion of the roll-call,

Mr. MULDROW said: I am paired on this vote with Mr. DWIGHT, of New York. I voted inadvertently in the negative and withdraw my vote.

The following additional pairs were announced:

Mr. PHISTER with Mr. HASKELL.

Mr. HEILMAN with Mr. THOMPSON of Kentucky, on this vote.

Mr. RICHMOND with Mr. JORGENSEN, on all questions for the remainder of the day, Mr. RICHMOND reserving the right to vote to make a quorum.

The result of the vote was then announced as above stated.

Mr. CONGER. And now I move that the House adjourn.

Mr. DUNN. I call for the yeas and nays on that motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 94, nays 114, not voting 82; as follows:

So the motion to adjourn was not agreed to.

At the conclusion of the second call,

Mr. WARNER said: I move to dispense with the reading of the names in order to save time and labor.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I object.

The Clerk read the names of those voting.

Mr. CALKINS. I voted inadvertently. I am paired on this vote and will withdraw my vote.

The following additional pairs were announced:

Mr. MULDROW with Mr. DWIGHT, Mr. MULDROW reserving the right to vote to make a quorum.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky, with Mr. CALKINS, on this vote.

Mr. YOUNG, of Ohio, with Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi, on all questions until Monday next at noon.

The result of the vote was then announced as above stated.

Mr. MCLANE. I rise to a question of privilege.

Mr. CONGER. I desire to move that all further proceedings under the call be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. McLANE] is recognized to make a motion. The Chair will hear it and then decide which has precedence.

Mr. McLANE. I desire to submit an order directing the Sergeant-at-Arms to arrest those members who have left the House without leave since the call of the roll. And as a preliminary to that order I move that the list of those members who answered to their names on the first call of the roll be again called, in order that the House may be able to ascertain what members shall be arrested.

The SPEAKER. The Chair entertains the motion.

Mr. ROBESON. Does the gentleman from Maryland mean the list of those members who answered to their names on the call of the House?

Mr. McLANE. I mean to have arrested those members who answered on the call and who have since absented themselves without the leave of the House.

Several MEMBERS. That is right.

The SPEAKER. The Chair entertains the motion.

Mr. ALDRICH, of Illinois. I move to lay that resolution on the table.

The SPEAKER. The motion to lay on the table is not in order.

Mr. CONGER. Pending that, I move that all further proceedings under the call be dispensed with.

Mr. HOUSE. I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOUSE. The motion made by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. McLANE] was entertained by the Chair and was pending at the time the other motion was made to dispense with all further proceedings under the call.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has not entertained the other motion yet.

It is not in order for the House to take a recess during the call of the House. No motion, except to adjourn or with reference to the call, is in order or ever entertained during a call.

The Chair entertains the motion of the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. McLANE] because it has reference to the call.

Mr. CONGER. Pending that, I move that all further proceedings under the call be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not entertain anything as pending but the one motion in respect to the call of the House.

Mr. CONGER. I make the motion, which is of higher privilege, to dispense with all further proceedings under the call.

Mr. WARNER. Can he take the gentleman from Maryland off his feet to make the motion?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of opinion that there must be somewhere in the House a power to compel gentlemen who have answered to their names and gone hence to return to the House in obedience to its summons; otherwise the call provided for in parliamentary law and in all parliamentary bodies could be evaded and made as a rope of sand.

Mr. CONGER. The point of order I make is that the motion which I submit is one of higher privilege——

The SPEAKER. In addition to which the Chair thinks this is a question which relates to the dignity of the House and to its proceedings. [Loud cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. CONGER. Does the Chair rule that the motion is not in order?

The SPEAKER. The Chair rules that the motion of the gentleman from Maryland is in order, and entertains it. The Chair will submit the motion to the House.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. McLANE. I now ask that the Clerk call the roll and report the names of those persons who were present on the first roll-call, and who failed to respond to this call.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will proceed to call the roll. As this involves an important proceeding on the part of the House, the Chair hopes and requests that members will be seated that the clerks may have an opportunity of hearing responses, so that there will ultimately be no mistake as to the gentlemen who have gone hence.

The Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask leave to make a request to the House [cries of "Regular order!"] which I hope will be granted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. CLYMER in the chair.) Is there objection to the gentleman from Pennsylvania making a request to the House?

There was no objection.

Mr. KELLEY. I ask that I be excused from the balance of this session. I was traveling last night until near midnight, and am very much fatigued; and the old gentleman appeals to his children to excuse him.

Mr. STEVENSON. I move that the gentleman from Pennsylvania be excused.

There was no objection.

Mr. McLANE. I do not object to the gentleman being excused, but I insist that this must not be taken as a precedent. I claim that the House has no right to excuse anybody under the circumstances.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understood this to be a request on the part of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, and an act of personal kindness on the part of the House toward him, and understood that there was no objection to it.

Mr. McLANE. I do not make any objection to it. I have only said that I did not wish it to be established as a precedent.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will now report the names to the House of those members who failed to answer to this call, but who answered upon the first call. It will be remembered that several gentlemen who answered on the first call have since been excused. Of course they will not be included in the warrant contemplated by the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. WILSON. Has General GIBSON been excused?

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to state that the gentleman from Kentucky, Mr. PHISTER, the gentleman from North Carolina, Mr. STEELE, and the gentleman from Wisconsin, Mr. WILLIAMS, as he recollects, were all excused. Other gentlemen were probably excused while the present occupant of the chair was temporarily absent.

Mr. WILSON. Has the gentleman from Louisinia, Mr. GIBSON, been excused?

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not recollect that he was. As the Chair has stated, other gentlemen have occupied the chair during the night, and possibly he may have been excused during that time.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I move that my colleague be excused.

Mr. WILSON. I hope Mr. GIBSON may be excused. I know he is very unwell. I bought some medicine for him myself from the drug store this afternoon.

Mr. MITCHELL. In the case of Mr. YOUNG of Ohio, I wish to state that I had a conversation with him just before he stepped out of the Hall, and he informed me that unless he could make some arrangement that he would be compelled to go to New York to-night in reference to business matters of great importance to himself which might possibly call him to Europe.

Mr. CLYMER. I desire to ask, Mr. Speaker, by unanimous consent, that Dr. LORING be excused. He was in a most unfortunate dilemma, having agreed to deliver a lecture by an engagement made some two weeks ago, and he has been away under circumstances which he could not have avoided.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. I object.

Mr. WILSON. Has the motion to excuse General GIBSON been adopted?

Mr. McLANE. I demand the regular order.

Mr. ANDERSON. I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry; whether it is in order at this time to move that my colleague, Mr. HASKELL, be excused on account of sickness. I thought that he had been excused but I am informed that there is some doubt about it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is informed by the Clerk that Mr. HASKELL was excused.

Mr. HOUSE. I made the motion, and my impression was that he was excused.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I objected a few moments ago to the motion to excuse Dr. LORING. I made it under a misapprehension, and I desire to withdraw it.

Mr. FRYE. I wish to state, Mr. Speaker, that the gentleman from Louisiana, Mr. GIBSON, went home sick just after the first roll-call to-night, to my personal knowledge. I hope he will be excused.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I desired to make that statement myself, and move that he be excused.

Mr. FRYE. And the gentleman from Maine, being sick, intends to go home very shortly.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection [laughter] to the request to excuse the gentleman from Louisiana, Mr. GIBSON.

Mr. McLANE. I demand the regular order and object to the Chair entertaining any further applications for excuses at this time. I insist now that the order of the House be carried out and the Sergeant-at-Arms be directed to bring the absentees to the bar of the House.

The SPEAKER. As soon as the list can be made out it will be reported to the House and handed to the Sergeant-at-Arms to be executed.

Mr. ATKINS. May I inquire what is the object of sending for absentees when gentlemen are being excused?

The SPEAKER. The excuses which have been granted have been by unanimous consent and on account of illness.

Mr. ATKINS. To be very plain about it, let me say this: I understand the object of sending for these gentlemen is to get enough democrats present in the House to constitute a quorum in order to pass this bill simply because the republicans will not vote and make a quorum. Now, if we are to excuse democrats from attendance, I ask when in the name of common sense shall we ever reach a point when we shall have a majority?

The SPEAKER. That is for the House to determine. When the request is made that a gentleman be excused from attendance any one member can prevent it by objecting.

Mr. ATKINS. I say we ought not to excuse anybody.

The SPEAKER. Then all the gentleman has to do is to stand up and object.

Mr. ATKINS. I will object from this time forth to any member being excused. I move to vacate all excuses. [Cries of "Regular order!"] When it is perfectly demonstrated a man cannot possibly be here, let him be excused. But a great many have been excused on the score of sickness who are just as able to be here as I am.

Mr. MANNING. The Sergeant-at-Arms will no doubt exercise his discretion when he goes after absent members.

Mr. ATKINS. I make my motion to vacate all excuses. Let the gentlemen who are absent send the certificates of physicians that they are sick and then their excuses may be accepted.

Mr. DIBRELL. I ask for the enforcement of the rule in regard to smoking in the Hall.

The SPEAKER. The Sergeant-at-Arms will enforce the rule and see that no gentlemen smoke upon the floor.

Mr. WEAVER. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WEAVER. Would it be in order to move that the House take a recess?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has already decided it is not in order for the House to take a recess during a call of the House; and he has had read the decision on the subject which is found in the Digest.

Mr. ATKINS. What became of my motion? Is it in order?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ATKINS] asks unanimous consent that all excuses be vacated.

Mr. ATKINS. Does it require unanimous consent?

Mr. ANDERSON and others objected.

Mr. MANNING. Is unanimous consent required?

The SPEAKER. Where the motion to excuse came in by unanimous consent and was adopted by unanimous consent the Chair thinks that to vacate the action of the House in that respect would require unanimous consent.

Mr. ANDERSON. Then I object.

Mr. McLANE. I rise to a question of privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. McLANE. I demand from the Chair the execution of the order of the House.

The SPEAKER. It is being executed as fast as physical energy will permit.

Mr. SPARKS. I wish to ask the Chair whether the House by a majority vote cannot vacate an order made by the House.

The SPEAKER. The motions that members be excused originally came in by unanimous consent.

Mr. SPARKS. But if a member is excused by an order of the House, that order can be vacated, as I understand, by a vote of the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks such a motion is not now in order.

Mr. SPARKS. When will it be in order?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will endeavor to inform the House. The House is now engaged in a proceeding under the call which concerns the dignity of the House, in relation to members who went hence without authority.

Mr. CONGER. I ask that the names of the gentlemen who are being sent for be read.

The SPEAKER. The warrant is being filled up.

Mr. CONGER. Will the Chair have the names read when it is filled up?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will.

Mr. AIKEN. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentlemen will state it.

Mr. AIKEN. Is it the purpose of a call of the House to ascertain whether a quorum is present? Is not the object of it to cause a quorum to be present?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. AIKEN. I ask the Chair whether he is not convinced there is a quorum now present?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is now executing the order of the House.

Mr. AIKEN. I think that is not a reply to my inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will now cause the warrant to be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

February 24, 1881.

By authority of the House of Representatives of the United States, to John G. Thompson, Sergeant-at-Arms, or his special deputies:

Whereas the House has this day adopted the following order; which said order is in the following words, to wit:

Ordered, That the Sergeant-at-Arms take into custody and bring to the bar of the House such of its members as are found absent without the leave of the House and who left the House after the call of the House, and who appear by a call of the roll to be the following members, to wit: Mr. CONVERSE, Mr. DE LA MATYR, Mr. DWIGHT, Mr. HUTCHINS, Mr. MILLER, Mr. MORSE, Mr. NEWBERRY, Mr. O'NEILL, Mr. O'REILLY, Mr. POUND, Mr. DAVID P. RICHARDSON, Mr. P. B. THOMPSON, jr., Mr. WISE, Mr. YOCUM, and Mr. THOMAS L. YOUNG—

Now, therefore, I, SAMUEL J. RANDALL, Speaker of the House of Representatives, do hereby command you to execute the foregoing resolution of the House of Representatives.

SAMUEL J. RANDALL, Speaker.

Witness my hand and the seal of the House of Representatives on the above day and date.

Attest: GEORGE M. ADAMS, Clerk.

Mr. AIKEN. I desire a ruling of the Chair whether or not that order of the House can be issued under the second clause of Rule XVII, which I ask to have read.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is perfectly familiar with that rule.

Mr. REED. The point of order was not made at the time.

The SPEAKER. The rule will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

A call of the House shall not be in order after the previous question is ordered, unless it shall appear upon an actual count by the Speaker that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. Under the construction which the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. AIKEN] indicates, if correct, the original call would not have been possible. The practice has been under that clause for the Chair to take, as being more accurate than any other mode of ascertaining the result and as conclusive, the roll-call developing the fact that no quorum was present and voting.

Mr. AIKEN. I desire to say that the people of this country are informed to-night that the majority of this House who are responsible for its legislative action are the obstructionists of legislation; whereas if we had proceeded under the rule, then the minority, who have sate here and refused to answer to their names, would be recorded as the obstructionists.

The SPEAKER. That is a matter about which the Chair is not called upon to express an opinion.

Mr. CONGER. I desire to inquire if the list just read by the Clerk contains the names of all the gentlemen who answered on the first call and not upon the second who have not been excused?

The SPEAKER. It was the intention to have the list so made.

Mr. CAMP (at 10 o'clock p. m.) moved that the House adjourn.

Mr. STEVENSON. On that question I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 55, nays 150, not voting 85; as follows:

So the motion to adjourn was not agreed to.

The following additional pair was announced:

Mr. BUCKNER with Mr. KELLEY, for to-day.

Mr. CALKINS. I move to dispense with all further proceedings under the call.

Mr. SAPP. On that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The motion of Mr. CALKINS was not agreed to, upon a division—ayes 3, noes 67.

The Sergeant-at-Arms then appeared at the bar of the House, having in custody Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. HUNTON.) Mr. THOMPSON, you have been absent from the House during its sittings without the leave of the House. What excuse have you to make?

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. Like most other members here, I was a little hungry, and after remaining here awhile I went over to the Senate restaurant to obtain something to eat. While I was gone there was a call of the roll, and when I returned I could not at first get into the Hall. I waited outside for a time, and then came in here, accompanied by a friend of mine, (the Sergeant-at-Arms,) who has accompanied many of us on similar occasions. That is all the excuse I have.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I move that my colleague be excused.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] moves that his colleague [Mr. THOMPSON] be excused.

Mr. KEIFER. Let the excuse offered by the gentleman be read to the House, so that we may understand it.

Mr. BLACKBURN. It is not required to be in writing.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is the fault of the House that the excuse of the gentleman was not heard.

Mr. EINSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, is he not on the Census Committee?

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. I will answer—yes, sir.

Mr. CONGER. I desire to have the Chair report to the House whether Mr. THOMPSON has been brought in under the last order of the House?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is informed that he has been.

Mr. ROBESON. As it appears that Mr. THOMPSON left the House intending to return, I move that he be excused.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. No gentleman will be recognized until order is restored.

Mr. TALBOTT, (after a pause.) As the gentleman left the House on account of the demands of hunger, I hope he will be excused.

Mr. CONGER. I have nothing to say about this particular case; neither would I like to signalize any gentleman as the subject of the remarks I propose to make at this time. The Speaker of the House, then occupying the chair, stated that those present at a roll-call who leave without consent of the House violate their parol, and it became necessary by a summary proceeding to vindicate the dignity of the House, which had been offended. The Speaker, occupying that chair, made it apparent to the House that those who had violated the rules should be summarily sent for and dealt with to the suspension of all other business. If there was any necessity for this proceeding or any force in those remarks, it becomes the House to pay proper regard to its own dignity in excusing a member thus brought in. I desire that before we act upon the motion to excuse Mr. THOMPSON his excuse be made to the House, so that all members may understand it. It may probably be reasonable, and the House will be willing to adopt the motion. But if the gentleman be without a sufficient excuse, I submit we are merely tampering with ourselves and with the dignity of the House if we let it pass by with laughter.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair begs leave to state that the main reason why the remarks of the gentleman from Kentucky in excuse for his absence were not heard was the noise and confusion upon the floor of the House. Now, if the House will be in order everything that occurs will be heard by every member desiring to hear it.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I desire to say in behalf of my colleague who is now at the bar of the House that I do not think he is amenable to criticism under the ruling made by the Speaker of the House, nor to the suggestions of the gentleman from Michigan, for the reason that I am informed by him (and I ask to make this statement as I have submitted the motion to excuse him) that after answering to his name on a call of the roll he left his name at the door, and went to the restaurant of the Senate; and while he was out other calls of the yeas and nays had been had on which he was absent, and on his return after another call of the House he was not permitted to enter, as he thought he had the right to do, but was taken into custody by the Sergeant-at-Arms. I do not understand, nor do I believe, that under the severest construction which can be put upon the ruling of the Chair my colleague is amenable to criticism or is in the slightest degree in intentional contempt of the House.

Mr. CONGER. I desire to say that if the gentleman left as many others have done, for refreshment within the Capitol, with no intention of leaving the building, that is a sufficient excuse.

Mr. BLACKBURN. It was that for which he left, with the intention of returning before another roll-call.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair begs leave to state to the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. CONGER,] who alluded to the remarks of the Speaker of the House, that Mr. THOMPSON, according to his own statement, did not come within the remarks made by the Speaker. He had not left the building.

Mr. CONGER. I now understand that is so. I wished to make the statement that it might appear I had no personal object in my remarks, but merely sought to carry out the wish of the House. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. TALBOTT. I suggest that when the gentleman from Michigan gets up and asks us to enforce the rules against a member, he had better wait until some member from his own side comes in.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. BLACKBURN to excuse Mr. THOMPSON, it was declared agreed to.

Mr. ATHERTON. I call for a division on this question. I insist that the House shall treat this matter as other questions are treated. I wanted to find out the facts, and was unable to do so.

The question being again taken, there were—ayes 124, noes 1.

So the motion of Mr. BLACKBURN was agreed to.

The Sergeant-at-Arms appeared at the bar of the House, having in custody Mr. MORSE and Mr. HUTCHINS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Mr. HUTCHINS, you have been absent from the sitting of the House without its leave. What excuse have you to offer?

Mr. HUTCHINS. Mr. Speaker, I was here from the opening of the session until a short time ago, when, feeling in need of some refreshment, I went below, and not being able to obtain anything, those who had preceded me having exhausted the supply, I went out for the purpose of refreshing the inner man, and returned immediately. When I returned, I found the door closed, and have been there waiting ever since, seeking entrance into the Hall.

Mr. WILBER. I move my colleague be excused.

Mr. ATHERTON. I wish to inquire how long the gentleman was gone? I understood there was a rule that no gentleman who went out on his parol should remain longer than five minutes. [Cries of "Oh, no!"]

Mr. WILBER. I have myself been out longer than that.

Mr. ATHERTON. Where did the Sergeant-at-Arms find the gentleman from New York?

Mr. HUTCHINS. At the door trying to get in.

Mr. ATHERTON. How long were you gone? If we are going to make a farce of this, we might as well have an end of it at once.

Mr. SPARKS. If this is not a farcical proceeding we should have a fuller excuse.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is not a matter of importance how long the gentleman was gone.

Mr. ATHERTON. It may not be for the Chair, but it is for the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is whether the excuse offered is sufficient or not. The gentleman from New York moves that his colleague be excused.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Mr. MORSE, you have been absent from the sitting of the House without its leave. What excuse have you to offer?

Mr. MORSE. I was in the House during several of the roll-calls, and then went out, intending to return, which I did voluntarily.

Mr. BAILEY. But went out where? Where did you get those fine party clothes?

Mr. CLAFLIN. I move my colleague be excused.

Mr. BAILEY. I think we ought to have a fuller excuse in this case. This gentleman since he left the Hall has changed all his paraphernalia. [Laughter.] He went out of this House in simple garments, and he now returns arrayed in purple and fine linen. [Laughter.] Yes, as I am reminded, and in a swallow-tail coat. [Laughter.] I think we ought to have a fuller explanation, and we ought to be informed at least what is going on at the other end of the Avenue.

Mr. TALBOTT. May be the gentleman is too full for explanation. [Laughter.]

Mr. ATHERTON. We have not heard any excuse offered in this case, at least on this side of the House.

Mr. BAILEY. Nor have we heard any on this side. I think the gentleman from Massachusetts should be compelled to make a fuller explanation.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 64, noes 67.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia, demanded tellers.

Tellers were not ordered.

So the motion was disagreed to.

Mr. TALBOTT. I move to reconsider that vote.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. And I move to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

Mr. ATHERTON. But the gentleman did not vote in the affirmative.

Mr. CLYMER. There was no record, and it does not matter whether he did or not. He has the right to make the motion.

Mr. TALBOTT. Certainly, I have the right to do it.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 80, noes 65.

Mr. CLAFLIN demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. CLAFLIN, and Mr. CLARK of Missouri, were appointed.

The House again divided; and there were—ayes 52, noes 84.

Mr. ATHERTON. I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. On what motion?

Mr. ATHERTON. On the last vote.

Mr. TALBOTT. Does the gentleman demand it on the motion to reconsider?

Mr. ATHERTON. I do.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I demand the yeas and nays on the vote to lay upon the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is too late.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I am not too late.

Mr. TALBOTT. The gentleman from Ohio was asked the question whether he demanded the yeas and nays on the vote to lay upon the table or on the motion to reconsider, and he said on the motion to reconsider.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I know what the motion was, and everybody heard it. He demanded the yeas and nays one the vote last taken.

Mr. TALBOTT. I appeal to the gentleman from Ohio whether he did not answer that he demanded the yeas and nays on the motion to reconsider?

Mr. ATHERTON. I meant to demand the yeas and nays on the vote last taken.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Did the gentleman demand the yeas and nays on the last vote taken or upon the motion to reconsider?

Mr. ATHERTON. Upon the vote which had just been taken.

Mr. TALBOTT. I put the question to the gentleman from Ohio whether he demanded the yeas and nays on the motion to reconsider, and he said he did.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman now states that he meant to demand the yeas and nays on the motion to lay upon the table.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

So the House refused to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question now recurs on the motion of the gentleman from Maryland, to reconsider the vote by which the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MORSE] was not excused.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 79, noes 49.

So the motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. ATHERTON demanded tellers.

Mr. TALBOTT. I ask a division on the demand for tellers.

The House again divided; and there were ayes 14, noes not counted.

Mr. ATHERTON. I make the point of order that no quorum voted on the motion to reconsider.

Mr. TALBOTT. It is too late to make that motion.

Mr. BLAND. It is not necessary that there should be a quorum under such circumstances.

Mr. TALBOTT. A quorum is not required.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair decides that a quorum is not necessary to decide a question of that sort.

Mr. ATHERTON. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The genteman will state it.

Mr. ATHERTON. I wish to know whether questions are to be settled by the ruling of the Chair or by the gentleman from Maryland?

Mr. TALBOTT. It makes very little difference which, so it is right.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The House having determined to reconsider the vote by which the gentleman from Massachusetts was not excused, the question now recurs on the original motion that he be excused.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. What has become of my appeal from the decision of the Chair?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair did not suppose the gentleman to seriously press it.

Mr. LOUNSBERY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to move an amendment to the original motion. I move that the gentleman from Massachusetts be discharged upon paying a fine of five cents.

Mr. TALBOTT. Better make it more than that if you want to collect costs. By the common law ten cents carries costs.

Mr. LOUNSBERY. I understand the fact to be that the gentleman now before the House was not arrested by the Sergeant-at-Arms outside of the Capitol, but that he voluntarily appeared at the bar of the House. Although I do not think he is absolutely excusable, yet I feel that this nominal penalty would sufficiently satisfy the dignity of the House. [Great laughter.]

Mr. TALBOTT. I am opposed to the motion of the gentleman from New York for the reason——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York has the floor.

Mr. LOUNSBERY. I find, Mr. Speaker, that there is a great deal of diversity of opinion around me, expressed by many gentlemen, as to the exact amount of the fine; but in the great diversity of opinion I think I have struck the proper sum; that sum which is considered nominal, and therefore I move that it be made that amount. It is not oppressive upon the gentleman, and yet is reasonably adequate, so as to make him feel the weight of the hand of the House upon him. I therefore move that he be released on payment of a fine of five cents. [Laughter.]

Mr. TALBOTT. The only objection I have to the motion of the gentleman from New York is this——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Maryland is not in order.

Mr. TALBOTT. I want to say that I object because it is not in the line of retrenchment and reform. It ought to be made six for a quarter. Ten cents is even change. [Laughter.] You know well that when you go to make a purchase it costs six for a quarter. I am therefore in favor of a reasonable fine, but I object to the absurd sum that the gentleman proposes. Seriously, however, Mr. Speaker, this House has gone on and excused first one member and then another who has been derelict in his duty here, and I see no reason why the same indulgence that has been granted to other gentlemen from other localities should not be granted to Massachusetts, especially when the motion is made by Maryland. I ask, therefore, sir, that the State of Massachusetts, in the person of Mr. MORSE, be excused now from further attendance upon the House, whether it is for this day or the rest of the session, I do not care which. [Laughter.]

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I made a point of order on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from New York.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I make a point of order that it is not in order to offer such an amendment, for the reason that the House has no power to fine under such circumstances. The House has power under the Constitution to compel the attendance of absent members, but after they are here there is no law providing for imposing a penalty upon them.

Mr. ATKINS. Is not the Sergeant-at-Arms entitled to a fee?

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. Very true; but that does not come out of the member whom he happens to arrest.

Mr. ATKINS. It is the practice to fine members on such occasions.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. It is not the practice, and there is no warrant for imposing the fine.

Mr. ATKINS. But it is the practice of the House.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I direct the attention of the House to the rule of this House upon the subject, which shows that the Speaker and the House are powerless to fine for a violation of the law. The eighth rule of the House provides that—

1. Every member shall be present within the Hall of the House during its sittings, unless excused or necessarily prevented; and shall vote on each question put, unless, on motion made before division or the commencement of the roll-call and decided without debate, he shall be excused, or unless he has a direct personal or pecuniary interest in the event of such question.

Mr. ATKINS. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question? I wish to ask if he does not know that it has been the uniform practice of the Speaker to entertain a motion to discharge a member, upon the payment of a fine and costs?

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. That may be so. It may have been the practice of the House; but I insist upon it that under our rule it is not. There is no such power in the House, I hold, under our rules. I argue by analogy. If the House has no power to fine a gentleman who remains in his seat and declines to vote—and I contend it has no such power—by what authority can it fine a member who has failed to attend the sittings of the House and violated the rules by his non-attendance? I think the analogy is perfect. After you have required his attendance, and he is present before the House, you have no more right to fine him for absence and contempt than you have a right to fine him if he remains in his seat and declines to vote.

Mr. ROBESON. I ask the gentleman from Virginia to yield to me for a moment.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman with great pleasure.

Mr. ROBESON. I read from the Constitution of the United States as follows:

Each House shall be the judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its own members, and a majority of each shall constitute a quorum to do business; but a smaller number may adjourn from day to day, and may be authorized to compel the attendance of absent members, in such manner, and under such penalties as each House may provide.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. That is precisely what I say.

Mr. ROBESON. Now, then, there is no penalty provided for not voting by the Constitution. But the House by the Constitution may prescribe the penalty.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. It may prescribe the penalty by a law, but not in each particular case.

Mr. BURROWS. I ask to have read the latter part of the second clause of Rule XV.

The Clerk read as follows:

In the absence of a quorum, fifteen members, including the Speaker, if there is one, shall be authorized to compel the attendance of absent members, and in all calls of the House the names of the members shall be called by the Clerk, and the absentees noted; the doors shall then be closed, and those for whom no sufficient excuse is made may, by order of a majority of those present, be sent for and arrested, wherever they may be found, by officers to be appointed by the Sergeant-at-Arms for that purpose, and their attendance secured; and the House shall determine upon what condition they shall be discharged.

Mr. WILLITS. I ask that the first clause of section 5, article 1, of the Constitution be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Each House shall be the judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its own members, and a majority of each shall constitute a quorum to do business; but a smaller number may adjourn from day to day, and may be authorized to compel the attendance of absent members, in such manner, and under such penalties as each House may provide.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me on the important question that is now pending in this House and at this midnight hour, we ought to have some power to "compel," to use the language of the Constitution, the attendance of members in the interest of the public. If we have no power to fix a penalty for a breach of honor, if we have no power to compel members to attend our sessions, then I say this body is practically defunct.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I beg to ask my friend from New York a question.

Mr. COX. I will hear the gentleman.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. Of what value is the power to compel the attendance of absent members when you cannot compel them to vote? What is the object of bringing them here but that they may vote? And if you cannot compel them to vote when they are here, of what value is the power to make them attend?

Mr. COX. I am not arguing the question of power. What I seek to impress upon the House now is this: that members, at great inconvenience and discomfort, have been sitting here all day and all the evening, two hundred of them; and whether they have been rightfully or wrongfully compelled to sit here, they had the right to have their associates with them. And if gentlemen must go off junketing and having their comfort outside, let them pay the penalty. [Applause.]

Now, when we compel members to attend here we are exercising the highest prerogative belonging to a democratic republic. This is a republican Government. And unless you can enforce the attendance of members here by penalties that will reach them, there may come a time when the legislative body of this country will be dissolved. What I desire to impress upon this House is simply this: that we have a right to the attendance of our associates; and I say irrespectively of the persons who are brought here before this bar, let us enforce that right.

I have been here for many years, and I never heard before the question raised which has been raised just now by my friend from Virginia [Mr. HARRIS] when he claims we cannot impose penalties upon members for failing to be here with us in the discharge of our public duties.

Mr. WARNER. We have got new rules.

Mr. CARLISLE. I understand nobody questions the authority of this House to prescribe a penalty and impose it for failure to attend its sittings. But that is not the question presented here. The question is, whether the House must not in advance prescribe the penalty.

Mr. COX. Let the gentleman read the Constitution. The House can now and here prescribe the penalty in each particular case. Otherwise we have no power to compel the attendance of absent members.

Mr. ROBESON. Will the gentleman permit me to interrupt him a moment?

Mr. COX. Yes, sir.

Mr. ROBESON. The House has the right to enforce penalties, such penalties as it may prescribe under the Constitution. Now, the House provided by rule that no man shall be excused except upon such conditions as the House at the time the excuses are being made shall provide.

Mr. CARLISLE. What penalty has the House provided?

Mr. ROBESON. It reserves to itself the right to impose at the moment of excuse any condition which shall operate as a punishment, according to the character and degree of the offense.

I wish to make one other remark before I sit down. The gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] is exactly right. The question of the attendance here of the Representatives of the people is the highest question which can agitate us in the progress of our business. We are authorized by express provision of the Constitution to bring members here under any penalty which we think it right to impose. But the question as to whether they are to vote or not is a different thing. Gentlemen must understand that voting is not all the duty of a Representative.

Mr. COX. I must resume the floor.

Mr. ROBESON. He may sometimes be called upon to discharge another duty, and to exercise his right as one of a minority before the country. And if he is here he has a right to do that and no power can compel him to do otherwise.

Mr. COX. I must resume the floor. There is no doubt that under the Constitution which has been read here the House may provide such penalties as it chooses. When? says my friend from Kentucky, [Mr. CARLISLE.] I say that our rules indicate when. I answer now and here. As the very last phrase of the second clause of Rule XV has it "the House shall determine upon what condition they shall be discharged." When discharged? On the instant of their being brought to the bar. Where is indicated any other time, any other place, or any other opportunity?

My friend from Virginia [Mr. HARRIS] has been here a great many years, and he must remember that members have again and again been discharged upon the payment of costs. I know that costs have hardly ever been exacted. But the House holds the power not merely to exact of members the fees of its officers in arresting and bringing them here, but also the power to deduct from their pay and to inflict other penalties; I will not go so far as to say that it may expel members in some cases.

Mr. BOWMAN. I wish to call the attention of the House to one point in this discussion which it seems to me has not been touched. The question is whether a penalty can be imposed on my colleague from Massachusetts, [Mr. MORSE.]

Now, there are two points to this question of arrest: first, the question of compelling the attendance of absent members; and, second, the entirely distinct question of the mode and manner of punishment. A quorum of this House is necessary for everything not especially delegated to less than a quorum.

It is provided by the rules under the Constitution that less than a quorum, if fifteen members, can do, what? Impose a penalty? No. Impose a fine? No. Impose imprisonment? No. Can compel the attendance of absent members. There the power of the fifteen members stops. The Constitution and the rules show that. What does the rule say? When the fifteen members, or less than a quorum, have compelled the attendance of a member by arresting him, then "the House"—a quorum of the House, not fifteen members—"the House" may impose a penalty; "the House" may say what punishment shall be imposed; "the House" may grant the excuse. You nowhere find a word or a sentence which says that less than a quorum can do a single thing but to compel the attendance of absent members. What says the rule? Rule XV says:

> In the absence of a quorum, fifteen members, including the Speaker, if there is one, shall be authorized to compel the attendance of absent members.

And then it goes on to provide:

> And the House shall determine—

When a quorum is reached, is the meaning—

> And the House shall determine on what condition they shall be discharged.

Is less than a quorum the House? Are fifteen members the House? Can you find anywhere in the Constitution or in any rule that fifteen members make a House? Take the old rule:

> Upon a call of the House the names of the members shall be called over, &c. When a member shall be discharged from custody and admitted to his seat, the House shall determine whether such discharge shall be with or without the payment of fees.

The point of order which I make and ask the ruling of the Chair upon is simply this: that less than a quorum has simply the power to arrest and bring a member into the House and place him on the floor. And when the higher question which is in the power of the House arises, what the fine shall be, what the penalty shall be, what the punishment shall be affecting the personal rights of the individual, then there is nothing in law, statute, or rule which says that anything less than a legal quorum, a legal, constitutional House, shall assume that great power of personal punishment.

Mr. COWGILL. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BOWMAN. Certainly.

Mr. COWGILL. If less than a quorum of the House has no power other than to bring a member before it, does not that member remain in custody, remain under arrest, until the House finds itself with a quorum, by which it may punish him or release him? In other words, can he be released by less than a quorum?

Mr. BOWMAN. In reply to that question, I have only to say that it seems to me after the member is brought here and placed on the floor, and has his rights as a member, an independent question, one entirely independent of the question of arrest, the independent question of punishment, is relegated to the House, and is a very important question. The Constitution and the rules do not intend that fifteen members alone should say whether one man should be fined $5,000 or 1$,000, or imprisoned for a term of days. It is precisely like this: The law gives the right to a constable or a sheriff to arrest a man on a certain warrant. When that man is arrested and brought into the court-house or lodged in jail, the law does not say that the sheriff, the arresting officer, can try the man and impose a penalty. That power is given to a distinct body, the same as here the power of imprisonment and fine is given to a body distinct from the arresting body of fifteen members, namely, to a full quorum of a whole House.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair desires to say that he is entirely ready to decide this question. He has indulged this debate longer than he thought necessary; and it is hoped by the Chair that the debate will terminate.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me important that this question be settled before we go on from precedent to precedent under the new rules. I made this point of order on another occasion.

The Constitution undoubtedly gives to the House authority to "compel the attendance of absent members in such manner and under such penalties as each House may provide." Under our new rules the House has undertaken to provide for arresting absent members and securing their attendance, and also to determine upon what conditions they shall be discharged.

Now, I maintain that the practice of this House under the old rules cannot be taken as a precedent under this rule; and I agree entirely with the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. BOWMAN,] that while a quorum may compel the attendance of absent members, and in doing so may arrest such members, nevertheless when the attendance of the absentees is secured the power of a minority, or less than a quorum, is ended. The language of the second clause of Rule XV changes entirely the old rule on this subject. I read from Rule XV:

> In the absence of a quorum, fifteen members, including the Speaker, if there is one, shall be authorized to compel the attendance of absent members, and in all calls of the House the names of the members shall be called by the Clerk, and the absentees noted; the doors shall then be closed, and those for whom no sufficient excuse is made may, by order of a majority of those present, be sent for and arrested, wherever they may be found, by officers to be appointed by the Sergeant-at-Arms for that purpose, and their attendance secured.

But, that being done, their absence must be reported to the House, and the House must determine on what conditions they shall be discharged, according to the closing language of the rule:

> And the House shall determine upon what condition they shall be discharged.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the point to be ruled upon, it seems to me, is whether we are now here acting as a House, or whether it is a minority, less than a quorum, that is acting. If we are acting as a House, I think there is no question about our authority to impose penalties and to say on what conditions members who have been absent may be excused. Before there can be any punishment there must be a constitutional House.

Mr. HOUSE. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. WARNER. Certainly.

Mr. HOUSE. The gentleman concedes, I understand, that fifteen members have the right to compel the attendance of absent members?

Mr. WARNER. Certainly.

Mr. HOUSE. The House was engaged in that business. A call of the House had been made. The gentleman now at the bar had answered to his name; and while the House was engaged in the act of securing a quorum, he left the House without its authority, and is in contempt of the House. Now, what becomes of the power of fifteen members to compel attendance if they cannot punish for a contempt while they are in the act of securing the attendance of a party who absents himself from the House without its leave?

Mr. WARNER. I think the gentleman begs the question in assuming that the House is acting. It is a number less than a quorum that is compelling attendance.

Mr. ATHERTON. It is not less than a quorum. There was a quorum and more, as shown by the vote.

Mr. WARNER. That is just the point. If we are acting as a House, then we have the right to impose conditions and penalties.

Mr. ATHERTON. The gentleman's point does not arise in this case.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is informed that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MORSE] at the bar desires to make a statement.

Mr. ATHERTON. Has the question of order been disposed of?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is ready to dispose of it, but the House will not let him. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MORSE] desire to say anything on the point of order?

Mr. MORSE. I do not desire to speak upon the point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Then the remarks of the gentleman could not be in order now, because the only thing before the House is the point of order.

Mr. MORSE. I desire to make a statement.

Mr. LOUNSBERY. I wish to be heard on the point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is ready to decide the point of order. The question before the House was the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts to excuse his colleague, [Mr. MORSE.] To that motion an amendment was offered by the gentleman from New York, that the gentleman from Massachusetts be excused on the payment of five cents. Upon that amendment the gentleman from Virginia raised the point of order that it was not in the power of the House to excuse upon the payment of a sum of money.

Mr. LOUNSBERY. I desire to be heard on the point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair desires to state his decision. [Cries of "That is right!" "Decide the question!"]

Mr. BOWMAN. Mr. Speaker, there was a further point of order, that it was not in the power of less than a quorum of the House to impose a penalty.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understood the gentleman's proposition thoroughly, and is about to respond.

Several members addressed the Chair.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair cannot recognize any gentleman while he is deciding the point of order.

The question raised by the point of order of the gentleman from Virginia is whether the House can excuse a member on the condition of paying a fine. The Chair has no doubt as to the power of the House to do it. The last clause of Rule XV reads:

> And the House shall determine upon what condition they shall be discharged.

The motion of the gentleman from New York is that the gentleman from Massachusetts be discharged on condition that he pay five cents.

Now, the argument of the gentleman from Massachusetts is it took the House to do this; that is, a quorum of the whole House, a majority of the whole House. If that were true, the last vote discloses more than a quorum is present. Therefore, the House as it stands is thoroughly able to do what the House can do on any other subject. But the Chair believes the House mentioned in this rule is that House which is authorized to compel the attendance of members, fifteen in number. The Chair thinks it would have been an exceptionally poor rule which would have authorized fifteen members to excuse a number absent without leave of the House and not allow that same number to impose a condition. The House spoken of there is the House authorized to compel the attendance of absentees, and that House may be composed only of fifteen members. But that question cannot arise here, because there is a quorum of a full House. The point of order of the gentleman from Virginia is therefore overruled.

Mr. WARNER. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is not through. The question, therefore, is on the amendment of the gentleman from New York as an amendment to the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. LOUNSBERY. I demand the previous question.

Mr. WARNER. I rise to a parliamentary question.

Mr. ATHERTON. I wish to move an amendment before the previous question is demanded.

Mr. WARNER. I understood the decision of the Chair to be the House was acting in its capacity with more than a quorum present. If that is the decision I do not desire to appeal from it; but if the other part of the decision is to stand as the judgment of the House that less than a quorum can punish, I shall feel bound to appeal.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state to the gentleman he can take the decision of the Chair on either point. The Chair overrules the point of order of the gentleman from Virginia and recognizes the gentleman from New York.

Mr. ATHERTON. In case this amendment of the gentleman from New York is voted down, I propose to offer a motion to excuse the gentleman under arrest on the payment of a fine of $25.

Mr. LOUNSBERY. I demand the previous question.

Mr. ATHERTON. Mr. Speaker, you know parliamentary law better than I do, but I believe I have a right to amend by striking out five cents and inserting $25.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That amendment would be in order.

Mr. ATHERTON. I move, then, to strike out five cents and insert $25.

Mr. SIMONTON. The gentleman from New York has demanded the previous question.

Mr. ATHERTON. But I move my amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York, who has not yielded the floor, has demanded the previous question, and therefore the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio is not in order.

Mr. ATHERTON. I understood the gentleman from New York to yield to me for the purpose of moving my amendment, and therefore I have waited for him to demand the previous question. In good faith he should now yield to me to move my amendment. I appeal to him whether he did not agree after he had demanded the previous question to yield to me for an amendment? I ask him whether he proposes to keep his faith with me?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio is informed that after the previous question is demanded his amendment is not in order.

Mr. LOUNSBERY. I will yield to the gentlemen to move his amendment, but for no other purpose.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Then the gentleman must withdraw temporarily his demand for the previous question.

Mr. LOUNSBERY. I do so for that purpose.

Mr. ATHERTON. I move to strike out "five cents" and insert "$25," and I demand the previous question.

Mr. MORSE. I ask to be heard for a moment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the gentleman will proceed.

Mr. MORSE. A great deal has been said about this question, and really it seems to me the House does not understand the facts in the case. I believe that I am not actually under arrest, as I voluntarily returned to the House, as I intended to do, and was only stopped from entering the Hall by the door being closed.

Mr. CONGER. Had the gentleman returned to the Capitol and was he in the Capitol before he was arrested?

Mr. MORSE. Yes, sir; I was at that door trying to get in. I was not arrested nor did anybody attempt to arrest me until I arrived at that door.

Mr. ATHERTON. What time did the gentleman leave, and how long was he gone?

Mr. MORSE. I do not know that I am on the witness stand, to be cross-examined by you or any other person on this floor. I mean to be respectful to the gentleman and to the Chair.

Mr. ATHERTON. I object to the gentleman's proceeding any further if he proposes to use that language to the House. He must be respectful to me and everybody else.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Unanimous consent was given to the gentleman from Massachusetts to make his statement.

Mr. ATHERTON. But not to insult members of this House.

Mr. MORSE. I beg the gentleman's pardon if any insult has been imagined, as I certainly was not aware I had offered any. I do not intend to insult anybody at any time, and particularly in this House.

Mr. FRYE. The gentleman from Ohio had no right to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts the question without first rising in his place and addressing the Speaker, asking if he might be permitted to address such a question to the gentleman from Massachusetts

Mr. ATHERTON. That may be so, Mr. Speaker, and as to that I ask the pardon of the House if I have offended. But I have asked a question proper for me to ask and for the House to know as judges of the facts in this case as to whether or not the gentleman should be excused.

Mr. FRYE. And further I wish to state, Mr. Speaker, this point, that nobody has a right to question the prisoner except the Speaker, and that every question must be asked through the Speaker. If there is to be a cross-examination in which every member of the House may participate I would like to know where these proceedings would terminate.

Mr. ATHERTON. And I would like to ask the gentleman from Maine if he did not himself commit the same breach of decorum just now in addressing himself to me without first proceeding as he has cautioned me to do, by addressing the Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will decide that the gentleman from Massachusetts has the right to proceed; and will further rule that if a member of the House desires to address any remarks to the gentleman from Massachusetts it must be done through the Chair.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. Speaker, I only intended to make a single point, which I have stated to the House. I staid here during the whole day until late in the evening, and I answered to one, two, or three roll-calls. I had an engagement, which was made some time ago, for this evening, and I thought fit and proper that I should keep that engagement, with the intention of returning as soon as I could to the House. I did return to the House without being arrested by anybody.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from New York to the original motion.

Mr. TALBOTT. On that I want to ask a question. [Cries of "Regular order!"] I desire to ask the question whether this House can impose a fine upon any person until a conviction?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That question has already been ruled upon by the Chair. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"] The gentleman from New York demands the previous question on the pending amendment to the original motion.

The main question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question now recurs upon the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio to the amendment of the gentleman from New York, namely, to strike out "five cents" and insert "$25."

The House divided; and there were ayes 29, noes not counted.

So (no further count being demanded) the amendment to the amendment was not agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question recurs on the amendment of the gentleman from New York to excuse the gentleman from Massachusetts on payment of a fine of five cents.

Mr. HORR. I move to strike out all after the word "excuse."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is not in order while the previous question is prevailing.

Mr. SPARKS. I submit that this question has not been correctly stated. The Chair states that the question is on the motion to discharge the gentleman on payment of five cents. It should be on payment of five cents and costs. I understand that to be the motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman is mistaken; no such motion has been made.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Speaker, the last decision of the House demonstrates that this whole proceeding is a farce, and I move to dispense with all further proceedings under the call.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is not now in order. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from New York.

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. McLANE. I move that the gentleman from Massachusetts be discharged from custody.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That question is now before the House—the original motion.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. Speaker, I move that all further proceedings under the call he dispensed with.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is not now in order.

Mr. ATKINS. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I wish to know if the previous question is not exhausted?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is in operation yet. The question is on the adoption of the motion that the gentleman from Massachusetts shall be excused.

Mr. ATHERTON. I demand a division. I demand the yeas and nays upon it. Let us have a record made as to whether this whole proceeding shall be a farce or not.

The yeas and nays were not ordered; 21 members only voting in favor thereof.

So (no further count being demanded) the motion to excuse was agreed to.

Mr. BAKER. I now move that all further proceedings under the call be dispensed with. This farce, it strikes me, has gone far enough.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair desires to state that the Sergeant-at-Arms is at the bar of the House having other members in custody.

Mr. BAKER. My motion will discharge all of them from custody. I submit that the House ought not to make itself the laughing-stock of the country any further. [Cries of "Regular order!"] If this sort of business is to go on I shall insist upon the motion being put. We ought to have some respect for ourselves, at all events.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair decides that the motion is not debatable.

Mr. BAKER. I insist upon the motion. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

On the motion to dispense with further proceedings under the call the House divided; and there were—ayes 65, noes 73.

So the motion was not agreed to.

Mr. HAZELTON. The Sergeant-at-Arms is here with other gentlemen in his custody. Let him make his report.

Mr. SHELLEY. I request the atttention of the House for a moment. I ask that my colleague, Mr. HERNDON, be excused from further attendance at this night's session. He is in very feeble health, and staying here is endangering his life.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Objection was made.

Mr. SHELLEY. I make the same request for the gentleman from Louisiana, Mr. ELAM, on account of ill health.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. SHELLEY,] that the gentleman from Louisiana, Mr. ELAM, be excused from the further attendance on account of ill health.

The question being put, the Speaker pro tempore stated that in the opinion of the Chair the "noes" had it.

Mr. SHELLEY. I insist on the the motion being put in a way in which it can be understood. I have made my request on behalf of a colleague whose death may be caused by his being compelled to remain here.

Mr. BAKER. I rise to a point of order. I insist that no member can be excused, a single member of the House objecting, and that no motion for that purpose can be put. That was the decision made by the Speaker to-day.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is obliged to sustain the point of order.

Mr. SHELLEY. I ask that the question be again submitted that it may be seen if anybody objects.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Sergeant-at-Arms is in the act of making a report and nothing is in order till that report is made.

Mr. ATHERTON. I desire to inquire of the Chair if it would not be in order to move to excuse all these gentlemen?

The SPEAKER. Not till the Sergeant-at-Arms has made his report to the House. The House is not in possession of the case till that report is made.

The Sergeant-at-Arms appeared at the bar and reported that, in obedience to the order of the House, he had in custody at the bar of the House Mr. CONVERSE of Ohio, Mr. NEWBERRY of Michigan, Mr. WISE of Pennsylvania, Mr. RICHARDSON of New York, Mr. DWIGHT of New York, Mr. O'NEILL of Pennsylvania, Mr. POUND of Wisconsin, and Mr. DE LA MATYR of Indiana.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Mr. CONVERSE, you have been absent from the sittings of the House without its leave. What excuse have you to offer?

Mr. CONVERSE. I was in this House for ten hours to-day, attending to public business, without food. Late in the evening I went down stairs to get something to eat. I found nothing very suitable to eat. I then went to my hotel to get my dinner, and after resting a short time, supposing the session would last all night, I came back. I had no idea of being arrested until I reached the door of the Hall and undertook to come in.

Mr. WARNER. I move that my colleague be discharged.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Mr. NEWBERRY, you have been absent from the sittings of the House without its leave. What excuse have you to offer?

Mr. NEWBERRY. I had been in attendance on this House till very late. I have been under the care of a physician for the last ten or twelve days, during two of which I have been confined to my room entirely. I have prescriptions which I am obliged to take every night, which I do not carry around in my pocket. They are in my room. I went there to take the prescriptions that I have to take. I staid there a short time and have returned. I have not been arrested. I was stopped at the door when I was coming in, as I had a perfect right to do in my judgment. I have violated no parol and gave none. I have not been absent from the House during the transaction of any business to-day.

Mr. ATKINS. I move that the gentleman from Michigan be discharged.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Mr. WISE, you have been absent from the sittings of the House without its leave. What excuse have you to offer?

Mr. HAZELTON. I rise to make a motion. I move that these gentlemen be all discharged, without being called on to make excuses. It is too silly to ask excuses under such circumstances. It is too silly, and is a disgrace to the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WISE] will proceed.

Mr. WISE. It affords me and always has afforded me great pleasure to show the utmost respect to the Speaker and to my fellow-members on this floor. I remained here until nearly seven o'clock this evening. I had not taken any nourishment, and I felt as though I ought to have some. I went home; dinner was over; and I remembered the President had sent for me, and I went to the Executive Mansion and got my dinner; and I returned here immediately. That is my excuse.

Mr. SPRINGER. I move that the gentleman from Pennsylvania be discharged from custody on payment of the costs.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is not aware there have been any costs attending the gentleman's arrest.

Mr. SPRINGER. Then there will be none to pay.

Mr. KLOTZ. I would like, through the Chair, to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania a question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will proceed to ask the question.

Mr. KLOTZ. I ask the gentleman whether he was not here when an order was made for a call of the House; whether he was not here when the roll was called, and whether he did not go away and stated with an oath he would go away, let the consequences be what they would.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania answer those questions?

Mr. WISE. I have no recollection of stating any such thing, nor did I state such a thing. If the gentleman has a witness I would like to see him.

Mr. KLOTZ. I desire to present my witness. I make no assertion unless I can prove it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair rules this is not a case in which testimony can be taken.

Mr. KLOTZ. Then you might as well excuse them all and let everybody go home.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is for the House to determine.

Mr. CLYMER. I think it is hardly fair when my colleague from the Carbon district is challenged to produce his witness that he should not be permitted to do so.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair rules that this is not a case in which testimony can be offered or received. But the Chair will state——

Mr. KLOTZ. I have a right to produce my witness. I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KLOTZ] will allow the Chair to proceed, he will say that——

Mr. COVERT. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will finish his statement.

Mr. COVERT. My inquiry is in relation to that statement.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair cannot be interrupted while making a statement. After the Chair has got through the gentleman from New York [Mr. COVERT] will be recognized. The Chair was about to state when interrupted that while this was not a case in which evidence could be taken or received, if there is any gentleman here who desires to speak in confirmation of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. KLOTZ,] the Chair will take pleasure in hearing him.

Mr. MANNING. It is not with any pleasure that I contribute testimony in this case. I heard the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WISE] remark to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. WARNER,] some time during the evening, the early part of the evening, seven o'clock or perhaps a little after—I heard him remark somewhat passionately that he intended to leave the House. It was an emphatic statement; I cannot recollect his exact language. I did not hear him say that he intended to go without regard to consequences.

Mr. HAZELTON. Did he swear? [Laughter.]

Mr. MANNING. I cannot say that he did. I happened to be within a few feet of him at the time he made the remark, and at the instant I understood him to address himself to Mr. WARNER, of Ohio, who heard him perhaps better than I did.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will now recognize the gentleman from New York, [Mr. COVERT.]

Mr. COVERT. I was about to make a parliamentary inquiry, whether or not the statement of a member might not be received. The Chair has anticipated my inquiry.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. BREWER. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BREWER. Admitting the fact as stated, that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WISE] said what has been stated by the gentleman from Mississippi, [Mr. MANNING,] I wish to know if it was not a "WISE" expression? [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks so.

Mr. WARNER. As my name has been mentioned in connection with the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. WISE,] I desire simply to say that a remark was made by that gentleman in my hearing—I did not understand it as being addressed to me, however,—substantially as has been stated by the gentleman from Mississippi, [Mr. MANNING.] I paid little regard to it, little attention to it, considering it merely a private remark, and nothing that I thought should be made public use of in the House.

Mr. HAYES. I think it is decidedly out of place for members to give any testimony of that kind on the floor.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is not called upon to rule about that.

Mr. WISE, (at the bar.) Have I a right to speak in my own case?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In a moment. The Chair has just been informed that there is a member of the House here to-night who is suffering from extreme sickness.

Mr. HAZELTON. And I am that gentleman. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. He is the gentleman from Alabama, Mr. HERNDON, and his colleague [Mr. SHELLEY] has requested the Chair to ask that he be excused, on account of severe illness, from further attendance to-night. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the gentleman is excused.

Mr. CONGER. I ask that Major HAWK, of Illinois, who cannot without great difficulty get home after the street cars stop running, may be excused from further attendance to-night.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to excusing Mr. HAWK, of Illinois? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none and the gentleman is excused.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania at the bar [Mr. WISE] desires to be heard. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none and the gentleman will proceed.

Mr. WISE. I have not missed a regular session of this House I believe since the 6th day of last December. When a man remains here from the beginning of a day's session until seven o'clock, and then expresses a desire to go out and eat a lunch, and any member undertakes to criticise him for expressing a desire of that kind, I think it is—too thin. [Laughter.] I wish to say that there is no member of this House who has extended a fuller and more respectful courtesy to the officers and members of this House than I have tried to do; and when any gentleman on this floor undertakes to say that I meant to do a single act disrespectful toward the House or its officers, I know he is mistaken.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to state in reference to my motion that I made it without any disrespect whatever to the gentleman. It simply implies that he has done what he states he did do; he left the House and has just now returned. He ought not to be excused as those have been excused who have given good reasons for going. My motion is that the gentleman be discharged upon the payment of the costs of his arrest, whatever they may be. There may be no costs.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WISE] be discharged upon the payment of costs.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Mr. RICHARDSON, you have been absent from the sitting of the House without its leave. What excuse have you to offer?

Mr. RICHARDSON, of New York. Mr. Speaker, I was here at the opening of the House this morning and remained till near eight o'clock. I went to my room for my dinner. I have two children who have been under the doctor's care for two weeks. They are convalescing it was supposed. I found that one of them was seriously ill. I went to the White House with my family, and as soon as I could return I came back to this House. If I had not had the highest respect for the House I should not have felt it my duty to return this evening, as one of my children is seriously ill.

Mr. EINSTEIN. I move that my colleague be excused for his absence, and also from further attendance at this evening's session.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair cannot put two motions at once. The question is on the motion that the gentleman be excused.

Mr. SPRINGER. There is so much confusion I cannot hear the gentleman's excuse.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York states that he absented himself from the session of the House because he had two children under the care of a doctor.

The question being taken, Mr. RICHARDSON, of New York, was excused.

Mr. EINSTEIN. Now, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that my colleague be excused from further attendance.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That request is not in order now.

Mr. DWIGHT, you have been absent from the sitting of the House without its leave. What excuse have you to offer?

Mr. DWIGHT. Mr. Speaker, I staid here during the day up to about six o'clock, if I recollect aright. I then had occasion to leave for an hour and a half, but as I did not wish to violate any rule of the House I made an arrangement with my friend from Mississippi, Colonel MULDROW, to pair with him on all questions except the question of a quorum. I was detained longer than I expected; but I got through my business as soon as I could after getting my dinner, and started to come back here when your order reached me. That is my excuse.

Mr. RYON, of Pennsylvania. I move that the gentleman be discharged on the payment of costs.

Mr. ELAM. I move to amend by striking out "on the payment of costs." This supposed payment of costs is all a farce; nobody pays any costs unless he wants to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there are no costs to be paid, the gentleman will not have to pay any.

The motion of Mr. RYON, of Pennsylvania, was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Mr. O'NEILL, you have been absent from the sitting of the House without its leave. What excuse have you to offer?

Mr. O'NEILL. Mr. Speaker, I did not expect to be called up in this way. [Laughter.] It is something quite unusual with me. [Cries of "Louder!"] I do not want to raise my voice as if I were making a speech. I am only making an excuse.

Mr. Speaker, I had been here most of the evening and had voted very often. I had occasion to go down the street with the intention of coming back. I had no idea of staying away from the sessions of the House. I wanted to come and participate in the proceedings to-night. That was my intention, and I came back of my own accord.

Mr. BINGHAM. I move that my colleague be excused.

Mr. SPARKS. Nobody sitting back in this part of the Hall could hear what the gentleman said.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is not responsible for that.

Mr. SPARKS. And we are not responsible for sitting back here. We have drawn our seats by lot and are compelled to take such as we drew.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If members will preserve order, there will be no difficulty in hearing.

Mr. SPARKS. And we who are preserving order are not responsible for the disorder of those members who will not preserve it. That duty devolves upon the Chair.

Mr. RYON, of Pennsylvania. Opportunity has been given to my colleague [Mr. O'NEILL] to state his excuse, but we have not been able to hear. We want to know what reason he had for being absent.

Mr. O'NEILL. I gave my reason, and I supposed that the House had heard it. I said I had been here and voted. I had occasion to leave, supposing that after about two roll-calls I would be back. I had no intention of staying away at all. The fact is I rather like these late sessions. [Laughter.]

Mr. RYON, of Pennsylvania. I would like to inquire through the Chair when the gentleman left the House, and how long he was absent?

Mr. O'NEILL. I left the House, I think, about nine o'clock or a little after. I give this information to my colleague with great pleasure. I have said I came back voluntarily.

Mr. RYON, of Pennsylvania. Inasmuch as my colleague has stated the fact that he was absent, but has given no reason for his absence, I move that he be discharged upon the payment of costs.

Mr. ANDERSON. I move to amend by striking out "upon the payment of costs."

Mr. O'NEILL. The costs were all on myself, for I hired a carriage and came up here.

The amendment of Mr. ANDERSON was not agreed to.

The question recurring on the motion of Mr. RYON, of Pennsylvania, it was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Mr. POUND, you have been absent from the sitting of the House without its leave. What excuse have you to offer?

Mr. POUND. Mr. Speaker, I am obliged to confess that about half past seven o'clock this evening I became exceedingly hungry. I had been informed that the stock of provisions in the basement had about given out, and remembering an engagement that I had made to lunch with a friend at the other end of the Avenue, and thinking I might repair there and return before I should be required here to vote or take part in the proceedings, I went home and in company with my wife went to fulfill that engagement. Unfortunately my carriage was placed in the rear of about five hundred others, and after about an hour's delay we were enabled to get there.

Mr. PAGE. I move he have leave to print the balance of his remarks. [Laughter.]

Mr. HAZELTON. I move he be excused.

Mr. POUND. I will abbreviate my statement, which I intended to make in detail, explaining why I was delayed. I will say officers of the House came to me before I succeeded in getting to the lunch table, which I regret. In obedience to their request, I agreed to return here, and have done so.

Mr. BRAGG. It seems to me there should be, if possible, a slight difference in punishment between those who frankly tell where they have been and those who attempt to conceal it; and for that reason I hope that discrimination will be made on behalf of my colleague, who has had the manliness to state where he has been. I move, therefore, he be discharged without payment of costs.

Mr. HAZELTON. He has for once told the plain, bold truth. [Laughter.]

Mr. SPRINGER. I move he be discharged from custody on payment of costs. It is well-known to all of us here there are other members of the House who were invited to the same entertainment, but deprived themselves of that privilege by remaining here. I insist on my motion that the gentleman be discharged on the payment of costs.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The amendment comes too late, as the House is dividing.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 50, noes 64.

So the motion was not agreed to.

Mr. SPRINGER. I move now the gentleman be discharged on the payment of costs.

Mr. FORD. I desire to inquire for myself, in reference to this question of costs, if there are costs, how much are they?

Mr. ATHERTON. I demand the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair cannot answer the question.

Mr. FORD. The House ought to know. If there are no costs, do not let us continue the farce any longer.

Mr. SMITH, of Pennsylvania. There are costs, as the Committee on Accounts well know.

Mr. SPRINGER's motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Mr. DE LA MATYR, you have been absent from the sitting of the House without its leave. What excuse have you to offer?

Mr. DE LA MATYR. I have no valid excuse for being away. I was not hungry, neither had I sickness in my family. Some time after the first roll-call I obeyed the summons of a friend from a distance and went into the gallery. I sat with him conversing for a time. When I came down from the gallery I was locked out and could not get in. I went home and staid there until nine o'clock. About nine o'clock I kept an engagement with the ladies of my family and went to the levee of the President.

Mr. SIMONTON. Did you try hard to get in?

Mr. DE LA MATYR. I returned at the first summons. These are the facts.

Mr. THOMAS TURNER. I move he be excused for telling the truth.

Mr. SIMONTON. I want to make an amendment that he be discharged on payment of costs.

The amendment was agreed to; and the motion, as amended, was adopted.

The Sergeant-at-Arms appeared at the bar of the House having in custody Mr. MILLER, Mr. WHITE, and Mr. O'REILLY.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Mr. MILLER, you have been absent from the sittings of the House without its leave. What excuse have you to offer?

Mr. MILLER. About six o'clock this evening, after having voted during the entire day, and following the example of a large number of the older members of the House who sat near me, I went out to get my dinner. It took me longer than I had expected it would, and when I arrived at my hotel I found a large number of ladies—wives of members about me—who were looking for their husbands to escort them to the White House. Gallantly I performed that duty for a large number of members of this House, [laughter,] and escorted their ladies to the White House. After having gone through that ceremony I returned to the hotel and prepared myself to come here with the Sergeant-at-Arms.

Mr. COX. I move the gentleman be excused.

Mr. KLOTZ. I move that he be fined $10 for the privilege. [Laughter.]

Mr. COX. I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. COX. To fine a man $10 is not the way to put the question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair ruled on that on the argument of the gentleman from New York. The motion of the gentleman is that he be discharged on the payment of $10.

Mr. COX. No, that he be fined $10. I wish to correct the record. The motion of the gentleman was that he be fined $10.

Mr. KLOTZ. Yes, that he be fined $10 for the high privilege which was accorded to him. [Laughter.]

Mr. TALBOTT. I move to strike out $10.

Mr. SIMONTON. Mr. Speaker, before that amendment was put I rose with the intention of making a motion that the gentleman be discharged by the payment of costs.

Mr. WILBUR. Well, a great many of us have intentions, but we do not get a chance to present them here.

Mr. KLOTZ. I accept the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania as modified.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I move to strike out costs.

The motion was not agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question now recurs on the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, that the gentleman be discharged upon the payment of costs.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Mr. WHITE, you have been absent from the sitting of the House without its leave. What excuse have you to offer therefor?

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Speaker, it is a mistake; I was not absent without leave. I was very industrious, or at least I thought I was, in the performance of my duty up to a very late hour to-day. [Cries of "Louder!"]

Mr. VALENTINE. We know the gentleman from Pennsylvania can speak louder than that, for we hear him every day.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will proceed without interruption.

Mr. WHITE. I say, Mr. Speaker, and I repeat it, that I was not absent from the House without leave, as I understand the meaning of the term, for this reason: that it is customary to leave upon the occasion of a call of the House when you are required to leave on a little business. So I was informed this afternoon. [Laughter.] Now, acting on that information, I left this afternoon after informing the Doorkeeper of the House that I was obliged to go off on some little business, to attend to some little correspondence, or something of the kind.

Mr. HAZELTON. Is all that true?

Mr. WHITE. I never told a falsehood in all my life. [Laughter.] And while out, sir, I was engaged longer than I had intended to be engaged when I left, (after informing the Doorkeeper of my intention to leave,) by circumstances over which I had no control; and when out—for I am not going into details; you do not want to know all the details of a gentleman's private business, [cries of "Yes!" "Yes!"] When I went out, I met some of the families of members, some of the ladies of their families, and I was requested to show them some little courtesy. I did so, like a little man. [Laughter.] I will prove it if it be necessary by the wives of the members themselves, who will inform their husbands of the fact. Now, that is the cause of my absence. I attended them to the levee and reception. It detained me a little longer than I had expected, and when I was about coming back I met the Sergeant-at-Arms. I was satisfied that my name was put on maliciously, for I do not think it was there until the very last thing.

Mr. ATHERTON. I move that the gentleman be discharged on payment of costs, and presented with a little hatchet.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion to discharge the gentleman from Pennsylvania on payment of costs.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Mr. O'REILLY, you have been absent from the sitting of the House without its leave. What excuse have you to offer therefor?

Mr. O'REILLY. Mr. Speaker, I staid in the House until half past eight o'clock this evening and voted on every roll-call. I had no lunch, nor had I any dinner, and when the pangs of hunger prompted me to retire to the basement, I found that everything there had been consumed. When I found there was nothing to be had down stairs, I went to the house where I board to find something to appease the inner man, and was disappointed again. There was nothing there. I then remembered that a few weeks ago I had an invitation from a gentleman at the other end of the Avenue, who I knew kept an excellent table—a table that I knew would be loaded with all the luxuries of the season—and finding that I could not get anything anywhere else I thought it better to accept that invitation and dine at the other end of the Avenue. Besides, I took into consideration the fact that in nine or ten days the gentleman himself would be retiring from the White House about the same time that I hope to be retiring from this Congress. [Laughter.] And, so taking all these things into consideration, I thought it would be impolite and unjust to refuse to comply with his request. Before my appetite was fully satisfied, I am sorry to say, the Sergeant-at-Arms put in an appearance, stepped up to me and said my services were required here. I very reluctantly consented to come. I must say he did not wait for me, but he took my word of honor that I would return to the House, and consequently I am here. That is my excuse.

Mr. COVERT. I move that my colleague be excused.

Mr. SIMONTON. I move to amend, by adding "on payment of costs."

The motion as amended was agreed to.

The SERGEANT-AT-ARMS. Mr. Speaker, I desire now to make a final report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will hear the report of the Sergeant-at-Arms.

The SERGEANT-AT-ARMS. I wish to say that of all the gentlemen included in the last order of the House I have found, and they have reported here, all except Mr. YOCUM and Mr. THOMAS L. YOUNG, who cannot be found. In the first order I found Mr. HOUK, or my deputy found him, sick in bed. Mr. MILES is reported to have left the city this morning. Mr. GILLETTE cannot be found. I sent several times to his house, where he boards, in this city without success.

Mr. MONEY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say that Governor YOUNG was called to New York by a telegram to-day to attend to some important business. He staid here until nearly ten o'clock, and is paired with Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to make a motion to reconsider the vote in each case by which gentlemen have been excused for non-attendance; I mean those brought to the bar under arrest. I do so for the purpose of voting down, if the reconsideration should be carried, the motions to excuse and discharge upon the payment of costs. My object is to treat all gentlemen alike in this respect. I think that no excuses have been made by gentlemen brought to the bar that were sufficient.

Mr. KEIFER. I make the point of order that the motion of the gentleman from Illinois is not in order. The order of the House has been executed. The men have been discharged without any fines, without any penalties, and without terms, and we cannot go back upon our action.

Mr. SPRINGER. I withdraw the motion.

Mr. KEIFER. Now I desire, upon the report of the Sergeant-at-Arms, to ask that the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HOUK] be excused.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. SIMONTON. I suggest it might be better, perhaps, that this should be asked when the gentleman comes here himself and when the House can properly attend to the request.

Mr. STONE. I know the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HOUK] left the House quite sick.

Mr. KEIFER. I think the gentleman should be excused on the report of the Sergeant-at-Arms.

Mr. SIMONTON. I do not object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HOUK] be excused from attendance at the sittings of the House to-night on account of sickness. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. COX. I move that all further proceedings under the call be dispensed with, in order that we may go on and vote on the pending bill.

Mr. KEIFER. That is right. You ought to have done that six or eight hours ago.

The motion was agreed to, and all further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

Mr. CONGER. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. CONGER. The question pending when the call of the House was ordered was on a motion that when the House adjourns it be to meet on Saturday, on which question no quorum voted. I call for a vote on that question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. As has been stated by the gentleman from Michigan, when the call of the House was entered upon the pending motion was that when the House adjourns it adjourn to meet on Saturday, on which vote no quorum appeared. Thereupon a call of the House took place. The proceedings under that call having been dispensed with, the motion to adjourn over till Saturday is now before the House.

The question being taken, no member rose to vote in the affirmative. The negative vote having been called for,

The SPEAKER pro tempore said: A large number of gentlemen have arisen. Is further count insisted on?

Mr. CONGER. It is insisted on. I wish the opportunity to make the point whenever it comes.

The negative vote was again called for, and was counted.

Mr. CONGER. I ask that the Chair announce the vote.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair asked if a further count was insisted on?

Mr. CONGER. And I said yes; and I advised the Chair that when I made a point it continued.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In the midst of the disorder the Chair cannot hear every statement that is made.

Mr. CONGER. I could not rise to make my point, or I should have been counted.

Mr. ATHERTON. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry. Was there any vote in favor of the motion?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There was no vote in favor of it.

Mr. ATHERTON. Then I insist as a matter of order there is no need of a vote against it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will announce the vote. No gentleman voted in the affirmative and 67 voted in the negative.

Mr. CONGER. No quorum.

Mr. ATHERTON. I insist on the point of order that there being no vote in favor of this proposition no vote is necessary against it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair overrules the point of order. A quorum not having voted, and the point being made, the Chair will appoint tellers.

Mr. COBB and Mr. DUNN called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question being taken, there were—yeas 3, nays 133, not voting 154; as follows:

At the conclusion of the second call of the roll,

Mr. KING moved that the reading of the names be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection.

The following pair was announced:

Mr. LORING with Mr. YOUNG of Tennessee, on all votes, except to make a quorum.

Mr. CONGER. I demand the reading of the names.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The reading of the names has been dispensed with.

Mr. CONGER. I wish the Chair would state propositions so that they can be heard, and not be passed without giving members an opportunity to object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair stated it distinctly.

Mr. CONGER. I stood here watching every word that was said, and I assert on my honor that I did not hear any word or intimation of such motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair accepts the statement of the gentleman, and the names will be read.

The Clerk read the names of those voting.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. On the motion of the gentleman from Michigan, that when the House adjourns to-day it be to meet on Saturday, the yeas are 3 and the nays 133.

Mr. CONGER. No quorum has voted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan makes the point that no quorum has voted.

Mr. COX. I move a call of the House.

Mr. CONVERSE. I raise a question of order on that motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. What is the question of order?

Mr. CONVERSE. The point of order is this: we are now acting under the previous question, and the rule expressly provides that there shall be no call of the House except the Speaker upon actual count by himself decides that there is no quorum in the House. Now, I claim that the Speaker himself must perform that duty; that he has no right to take the roll-call when gentlemen are present and decline to answer. I claim that the rule is made for this particular case and is imperative. The Speaker must perform his duty by making the count himself. I ask to have read clause 2 of Rule XVII.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The rule will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

A call of the House shall not be in order after the previous question is ordered, unless it shall appear upon an actual count by the Speaker that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair overrules the point of order raised by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. CONVERSE.] The best information in the possession of the Chair is the actual roll-call. The Chair finds that upon the actual roll-call only 136 members answer to their names.

Mr. CONVERSE. I desire, then, to take an appeal from the decision of the Chair, for the purpose of having the question settled. It is a question which will trouble not only this House but future Houses. I claim that the object of having a previous question at all is to bring the House to a vote. The purpose of a previous question is not to prevent a vote, but to bring the House to a vote. Now, I ask that the House itself shall determine whether when the rule requires the Speaker to make the count it means that it shall be by a roll-call; and that when gentlemen are present, and the Speaker knows they are present, he shall ignore that fact and hold that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CONVERSE] appeals from the decision of the Chair. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the House?

Mr. COX. I ask to have read the note on page 21 of the Digest; the comment on the rule that has just been read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The practice of counting the House by the Speaker of late years has frequently been resorted to, to ascertain the presence of a quorum, and is a more expeditious method than calling the roll.

Mr. SPRINGER. Do I understand that the Chair has decided that a motion for a call of the House is not now in order, after the previous question has been seconded?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question before the House is upon the appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. SPRINGER. The main question has been ordered, as I understand, and the Chair has decided that it is not now in order to move a call of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has decided that there is no quorum present. That can be followed by a motion for a call of the House. But the question now before the House is the appeal taken by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CONVERSE] from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. HOOKER. On the appeal I desire to say a single word. My friend from Ohio [Mr. CONVERSE] contends that, under the rule, the Speaker has the power to count the members present and determine whether there is a quorum or not. There is another rule which will show that such an interpretation could have no practical effect; for the reason that if the Speaker should undertake (departing from the ordinary practice prevailing heretofore) to determine for himself that there is a quorum present, the result would be that after he had ascertained that there was a quorum present you could not compel that quorum to vote. Hence the ruling heretofore has been that whether there is a quorum present or not must be by calling the roll and in that way ascertaining whether a sufficient number of members answer to their names to make a quorum. After the Speaker has once performed this function the House will be in the same condition in which it was before. The Speaker and the House itself, with all its power, would be powerless to compel the votes of those who might sit by unwilling to vote.

Mr. SPRINGER. That would be the case were it not for the fact that the main question has been ordered by the House.

Mr. CONGER. The main question has not been ordered.

Mr. SPRINGER. I understand it has been.

Mr. CONGER. As often as that is asserted I deny it.

Mr. SPRINGER. The Chair has so decided; and that settles it.

Mr. CONGER. We will settle that question when we come to it.

Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman from Michigan denies it; but it happens that the gentleman does not occupy the chair, and his decision does not amount to anything. In this case the Chair has decided that the main question has been ordered.

Mr. CONGER. When that question arises we will meet it.

Mr. SPRINGER. It has arisen, and has been decided by the Chair.

Mr. CONGER. The statement is repeated over and over again, but that does not make it any stronger.

Mr. SPRINGER. The main question having been ordered, I think the position of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CONVERSE] is correct, and that the Chair is evidently in error on this point. I hope that the Chair without submitting the question will reconsider his decision.

Mr. BAYNE. I think the Chair is perfectly correct in his interpretation of the rule. That branch of the rule is not intended to ascertain the fact whether a quorum is present or not to vote, but whether or not a call of the House shall be made; and if the Speaker upon counting the members present decides that a quorum is present, it simply obviates the necessity of a call of the House. I think the gentleman from Ohio is altogether mistaken in his construction of the rule. It has no application to the vote that has just been had; but it has application to this simple inquiry—is there a quorum present? If the Speaker ascertains by a count that there is a quorum present, then it would be out of order to make a motion for a call of the House to ascertain that fact.

Mr. NEW. Let me suggest also the question, how could the Speaker count members if they chose to go into the cloak-room?

Mr. PAGE. Or to sit in their seats. How can members be counted unless they rise?

Mr. BAYNE. I move that the appeal be laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks that under the practice of the House the Speaker has counted members present to ascertain whether there was a quorum; but that has been in the absence of a recent roll-call. Where the last thing occurring in the proceedings of the House is a roll-call, the Chair is bound to recognize that as determining whether a quorum is present or not. From this ruling of the Chair the gentleman from Ohio has appealed.

Mr. BAYNE. And I move to lay that appeal on the table.

Mr. CONVERSE. I withdraw the appeal.

Mr. SAMFORD. I wish to inquire whether the main question has been ordered or not.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Journal will be read on that subject for the information of the House.

Mr. SAMFORD. I want the question settled.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The present occupant of the chair was not in the chair at the time that question arose.

Mr. COX. Is my motion pending for a call of the House?

Mr. CONGER. What is the question pending?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the Journal to see whether the main question has been ordered.

Mr. CONGER. I object to that. When it is ascertained that there is no quorum, no business is in order except a call of the House or a motion to adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair begs leave to inform the gentleman from Michigan that he has directed the Journal to be read in answer to a parliamentary inquiry by the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. CONGER. Then I move that the House adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order of proceedings, the Chair thinks, is to answer the parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. CONGER. Pending that, I move to adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will entertain that motion when he has finished answering the parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. CONGER. I do not propose to wait for that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair proposes to answer the inquiry of the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. CONGER. Pending that, I move to adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. As soon as the parliamentary inquiry of the gentleman from Alabama is answered, the gentleman from Michigan shall be recognized.

Mr. CONGER. Mr. Speaker, I demand that my motion shall be put now.

Mr. ERRETT. The Chair has no right to allow any other business to intervene.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan will understand that the Chair will put his motion at the earliest practicable moment; but the Chair is occupying the floor for the present in answering a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. CONGER. That is a proposition contrary to the rules of this House. No quorum having appeared on the last vote, no business is in order but a call of the House or a motion to adjourn. I make a motion which is in order—that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) The complete answer and the record made up can be found by reading the Journal.

Mr. ERRETT. I object to the reading of the Journal while the motion to adjourn is pending, and I call the gentleman from Pennsylvania to order. The motion to adjourn is pending, and the reading of the Journal is not in order.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) I ask to make a proposition to the House.

Mr. PAGE. I take an appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) I do not propose to continue the debate.

Mr. ERRETT. We do not wish to have that intervene while the motion to adjourn is pending.

Mr. PAGE. The Chair made a decision, and I appeal from it.

Mr. ERRETT. No business can intervene when a motion to adjourn is pending.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the House?

Mr. SAMFORD. I made a parliamentary inquiry and the Chair was about to answer it.

Mr. PAGE. The gentleman is out of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. As soon as the appeal is determined, the gentleman from Alabama will be heard.

Mr. COX. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. COX. What is the appeal?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania was proceeding to state something in regard to the parliamentary inquiry of the gentleman from Alabama when the question was raised whether it was in order for him to proceed, as the gentleman from Michigan had made a motion to adjourn. The Chair overruled the point of order, and from that ruling the gentleman from California has taken an appeal.

Mr. PAGE. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the House?

Mr. MONEY. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MONEY. Did the Chair recognize the gentleman from Michigan to make the motion to adjourn?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair did not recognize the motion of the gentleman from Michigan because he was at that time answering the parliamentary inquiry of the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. MONEY. Then what is the appeal from?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The appeal is from the recognition by the Chair of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) I do not desire to make any more remarks, if the House is not willing to hear them.

Mr. SAMFORD. But the House is willing to hear them.

Mr. PAGE. The point I made, and from which appeal was taken, is this: the Chair decided the gentleman from Pennsylvania had a right to the reading of the Journal, and from that decision of the Chair I appeal.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair never ruled the gentleman from Pennsylvania had a right to the reading of the Journal.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) I never asked for the reading of the Journal except for the information of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In answering that parliamentary inquiry the Chair ordered the Journal to be read.

Mr. ERRETT. The gentleman from Michigan made a motion to adjourn.

Mr. PAGE. Then the Chair decided that was not in order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. While answering the parliamentary inquiry of the gentleman from Alabama, the gentleman from Michigan moved the House do now adjourn. The Chair did not recognize that motion, as he was at the time answering a parliamentary inquiry. He said so with the distinct declaration that as soon as that parliamentary inquiry was answered the gentleman from Michigan would be recognized.

Mr. CONGER. And the gentleman from Michigan insisted that his motion was in order, and the Chair overruled it, and from that decision the appeal was taken.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair did not understand the gentleman from Michigan as appealing from the Chair.

Mr. CONGER. But the gentleman from California did.

Mr. RYON, of Pennsylvania. And the Chair did not recognize the gentleman from Michigan to make the motion.

Mr. ERRETT. When the gentleman from Pennsylvania was on the floor I made the point there was a motion to adjourn pending; that point of order the Chair overruled, and the gentleman from California appealed from that decision.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There was no motion pending before the House for an adjournment.

Mr. ERRETT. That is not my point of order.

Mr. PAGE. Then what became of it?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair did not recognize the gentleman from Michigan to make the motion to adjourn.

Mr. ERRETT. That is not the point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair was proceeding to answer the parliamentary inquiry of the gentleman from Alabama. The Chair did not recognize the motion to adjourn.

Mr. SAMFORD. I have the floor.

Mr. ERRETT. The point I made was there was a motion pending.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. While the Chair was answering the parliamentary inquiry, he ruled no gentleman had the right to make a motion for any purpose.

Mr. PAGE. If the Speaker will allow me, I will say the gentleman from Pennsylvania made the point there was pending a motion to adjourn. The Chair overruled that, and from that I took an appeal.

Mr. REAGAN. I desire to say a word on the point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair did not rule there was a motion pending, but he did rule the gentleman from Michigan could not stop the Chair in answering the parliamentary inquiry for the purpose of making a motion.

Mr. ERRETT. The Chair did not state anything but that my point of order was overruled.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Alabama made a parliamentary inquiry——

Mr. SAMFORD. And still retained the floor.

Mr. REAGAN. And was standing upon the floor for a response to that inquiry. The Speaker was proceeding to answer the question, and the gentleman from Michigan interposed to make his motion while the gentleman from Alabama was still on the floor asking his question, and which the Speaker was proceeding to answer. Now, what I wish to ask is this: Is it possible that the Speaker is to surrender his rights and deprive the gentleman from Alabama of his rights to the floor to allow any other member to interpose a motion, whether on a point of order or otherwise, which bears no relevancy to the question pending, but recognizes him to make a motion to adjourn while he has not possession of the floor to make it?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the decision of the House?

Mr. SAMFORD. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is nothing to be appealed from, and I make this point of order with a desire to get a ruling from the Chair. I claim that I have not yielded the floor for any motion to adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair holds that the point of order was made and overruled, and having been made and overruled any other member in the House has a right to appeal from that decision.

Mr. REAGAN. But the Chair does not touch the point of order that I raised at all. My point is that the gentleman from Alabama had the floor, and the gentleman from Michigan was not entitled to the floor to make his motion.

Mr. MONEY. What is the point of order?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That the Chair had no right to have the Journal read in answer to the inquiry of the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. KEIFER. It is contended that that is not the point of order at all.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the House?

Mr. McMILLIN. I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. McMILLIN. The question raised by the gentleman from California was that the gentleman from Pennsylvania had no right to make a statement concerning the Journal; and upon that the Speaker ruled and not upon the motion to adjourn.

Mr. ERRETT. The gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. McMILLIN. And the Journal will so show, and thereupon, Mr. Speaker, I desire to state further, that the gentleman from Pennsylvania desisted from his attempt, submitted at once, and hence there is nothing before the House. There was nothing else after he had desisted. That was the only point and there was nothing else to rule on.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair rules that there is an appeal from the decision of the Chair before the House.

Mr. CLYMER. I move to lay the appeal upon the table.

Mr. SAMFORD. I have not yielded the floor.

Mr. PAGE. I make the point of order that the gentleman from Alabama is out of order.

Mr. SAMFORD. I wish to the Chair to rule whether the gentleman can take me off the floor to make any motion while I am still entitled to retain the floor and have never yielded it?

Mr. KEIFER. There is a pending motion to adjourn.

Mr. SAMFORD. No, sir; there is no pending motion; the gentleman had no right to make it. I had the floor to ask a parliamentary question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understands it, and while replying to the question the gentleman from Michigan interposed and made a motion to adjourn which was recognized.

Mr. SAMFORD. I had not yielded the floor.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair supposed that the gentleman from Alabama had risen to make a parliamentary inquiry and that he made his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. SAMFORD. I never surrendered the floor.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Let the Chair state it. The gentleman made his parliamentary inquiry. That is what he rose to do. The Chair was answering the parliamentary inquiry, and the gentleman from Michigan interposed to make a motion that the House adjourn. The Chair declined to recognize him while answering the parliamentary inquiry, he having the floor. Subsequently the Chair did recognize the gentleman from Michigan to make a motion to adjourn; an appeal was taken, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania moves to lay the appeal on the table. That is the question before the House, and it is not debatable. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. MONEY. I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MONEY. I desire to know how the Speaker could rule on the point of order when there is no point of order that he could recognize as such?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has decided the question more than once. The point of order was raised, and the Chair has ruled upon it. An appeal was taken from that ruling. Now the question is on laying that appeal upon the table.

Mr. MONEY. But, Mr. Speaker, that is not my parliamentary inquiry. I make a parliamentary inquiry which I wish to have answered.

Mr. HAYES. I wish to ask if the gentleman from Pennsylvania was recognized by the Speaker of this House when he rose to make some statement?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman was recognized, and attempted to say something about the Journal, as the Chair presumes.

Mr. HAYES. Was he not recognized?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. He was recognized.

Mr. HAYES. Did not that take the gentleman from Alabama off the floor? [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the laying on the table the appeal. The question is not debatable.

Mr. MONEY. I wish to have an answer to the parliamentary inquiry which I have made. I desire to know if the Speaker recognized the gentleman from Pennsylvania to make a point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan, you mean?

Mr. MONEY. No, sir; the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair recognized the point of order as having been made in regard to the reading of the Journal. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CLYMER] to lay on the table the appeal from the decision of the Chair by the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. CONGER.]

The question having been put, on a viva voce vote the Speaker pro tempore stated that, in the opinion of the Chair, the "ayes" had it.

Mr. CONGER. I call for a division.

The House divided; and on a rising vote there were—ayes 75, noes none.

Mr. CONGER. No quorum has voted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. A quorum not having voted, the Chair will order tellers, and appoints the gentleman from Kansas, Mr. ANDERSON, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. CLYMER.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 64, noes 3.

Mr. CONGER. No quorum.

Mr. CARLISLE. Then we can go on with the call of the House.

Mr. COX. I move that there be a call of the House.

Mr. BAYNE. I raise the point of order against that motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state the point of order.

Mr. BAYNE. That under the rule which was read a few moments ago, a call of the House is not in order when the Speaker can by counting the number present ascertain the fact whether there is a quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. COX.]

The question being taken on a viva voce vote the Speaker pro tempore stated that the "ayes" appeared to have it.

Mr. CONGER. I call for a division.

The House divided; and on a rising vote, more than fifteen members voted in the affirmative.

So the call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk proceeded to call the roll, when the following members failed to answer:

Ballou,	Gibson,	Mason,	Ryan, Thomas
Barlow,	Gillette,	McGowan,	Singleton, O. R.
Belford,	Hall,	Miles,	Smith, A. Herr
Bland,	Harmer,	Mills,	Steele,
Brewer,	Haskell,	Monroe,	Stephens,
Browne,	Hawk,	Morton,	Townsend, Amos
Buckner,	Henderson,	Murch,	Turner, Thomas
Butterworth,	Henry,	Nicholls,	Updegraff, J. T.
Chittenden,	Herndon,	O'Brien,	Updegraff, Thomas
Daggett,	Houk,	O'Connor,	Wait,
Davis, Joseph J.	Hubbell,	Orth,	Whitthorne,
Deering,	James	Pacheco,	Williams, C. G.
Elam,	Joyce,	Phelps,	Wood,

Felton,	Lindsey,	Price,	Yocum,
Ferdon,	Loring,	Robertson,	Young, Thomas L.
Fisher,	Lowe,	Russell, Daniel L.
Frye,	Martin, Edward L.	Russell, W. A.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There is a quorum present; two hundred and twenty members have answered.

Mr. MANNING. I desire to ask unanimous consent that General SCALES, of North Carolina, be excused from further attendance upon the session of the House to-night. He is in very bad health. He has not for several weeks been able to remain more than an hour or two at a time in this Hall. He has remained thus far during this day's sitting. While he has been suffering almost continuously, he has been in attendance all the while. It is very important he should retire and go home, and I hope he will be excused.

Mr. CONGER. I suggest we have not yet arrived at the point for excuses. There is a second call provided for that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The second call has been gone through with. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SCALES] be excused from further attendance at the session of the House to-night on account of severe indisposition. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the gentleman from North Carolina is excused.

Mr. SMITH, of New Jersey. I wish to make the same request for myself. My health is very poor. I have a violent cold, and incur great risk by remaining here.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GODSHALK. I move to recommit the pending bill and amendments to the Committee on the Census, with instructions to report a bill making the number of Representatives of this House three hundred and nineteen; and on that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. WARNER. Is that motion in order?

Mr. GODSHALK. I ask that the rule in relation to the previous question be read.

Mr. COX. I rise to a question of order. How does the gentleman from Pennsylvania get the floor for that motion? I understood I had the floor.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. For what purpose did the gentleman from New York rise?

Mr. COX. I rose to move that the doors be closed and that absentees be sent for. I send to the desk the ordinary resolution which follows the call of the roll.

Mr. CONGER. Pending that I move that all further proceedings under the call be dispensed with.

Mr. GODSHALK. Has my motion been overruled?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] offers the resolution which he has sent to the desk. Pending that the gentleman from Michigan moves that all further proceedings under the call be dispensed with. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Michigan.

The question being taken on a viva voce vote, the Speaker pro tempore stated that in the opinion of the Chair the "ayes" had it.

Mr. CONGER. I call for a division. I should like that the Chair would not announce the result too soon. Let him give me an opportunity to call for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 46, noes 89.

Before the result of the vote was announced,

Mr. CONGER called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. COX. I hope the Chair will again state the question, and a little more loudly, that members may understand it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Those in favor of the proposition of the gentleman from Michigan, that all further proceedings under the call of the House be dispensed with, will, when their names are called, answer "ay" and those opposed will answer "no." The Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 75, nays 111, not voting 104; as follows:

So the motion of Mr. CONGER was not agreed to.

During the call of the roll,

Mr. BRAGG said: I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BRAGG. Rule XIV, sub-division 7, provides that no member shall remain by the Clerk's desk during the call of the roll.

The SPEAKER. The point is well taken.

At the conclusion of the roll-call,

Mr. TUCKER said: I move that the reading of the names be dispensed with.

Mr. CONGER. I object to that.

The Clerk read the names of those voting.

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

Mr. COX. I call for a vote on the resolution which I have sent to the Clerk's desk.

Mr. CONGER, (at two o'clock and fifty minutes a. m., Friday.) Pending that, I move that the House adjourn.

The question was taken; and upon a division there were—ayes 46, noes 68.

Before the result of the vote was announced,

Mr. CONGER called for tellers.

Mr. ELLIS. I call for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The call for the yeas and nays takes precedence of the call for tellers.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 62, nays 111, not voting 117; as follows:

So the motion to adjourn was not agreed to.

The following additional pairs were announced:

Mr. WHITTHORNE with Mr. BREWER, for the remainder of this legislative day.

Mr. HUTCHINS with Mr. PAGE, on the present vote.

Mr. HAZELTON with Mr. THOMAS TURNER, until eleven o'clock Friday, February 25; but either may vote to make a quorum.

Mr. CONGER. Mr. Speaker, is this the proper time to offer excuses?

The SPEAKER. The list of absentees will now be read for excuses.

The list of members who failed to answer on the call of the roll, as already recorded, was read.

The SPEAKER. The doors will now be closed.

Mr. CONGER. I ask that my colleague, Mr. BREWER, be excused. He has been obliged to leave the House on account of extreme illness. He said he staid as long as the condition of his health would permit. When he went home he requested me to present this excuse at the proper time.

Mr. DIBRELL. My colleague, Mr. WHITTHORNE, left the Hall quite unwell. He is suffering from a cold, and is really too unwell to attend night sessions. He is paired with the gentleman from Michigan, Mr. BREWER.

Mr. PAGE. I hope that both gentlemen will be excused.

Mr. DIBRELL. I move that they both be excused.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not entertain it as a motion.

Mr. DIBRELL. I hope there will be no objection to excusing my colleague.

Mr. COX. What is the pending proposition?

The SPEAKER. The hearing of excuses. After that the question will be on a proposition which, as the Chair is advised, the gentleman from New York has presented—a resolution, in the usual form, directing the Sergeant-at-Arms to bring in absentees.

Mr. NEW. I wish to present an excuse for my colleague, Judge BICKNELL. His age is well known to members; and he assured me when he left that he was feeling very ill. I know he was very sincere in what he said.

Mr. KEIFER. We are quite willing to excuse the sick, but we want it to be done on both sides. We must object to these requests in regard to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. WHITTHORNE] and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BICKNELL] if Mr. BREWER is not excused on the same ground.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that gentlemen who are really sick ought to be excused.

Mr. KEIFER. There is no objection to excusing all members who in good faith are stated to be sick.

Mr. NEW. Is Mr. BREWER sick?

Mr. CONGER. He is sick; and he left the House because he felt unable to stay up any longer.

Mr. DIBRELL. My colleague, Mr. WHITTHORNE, is also sick.

Mr. BRIGGS. I think we had better convert this House into a hospital and keep them all here.

Mr. HUMPHREY. If they are all sick they can all be excused.

Mr. HAYES. I think there ought to be no objection to excusing anybody who comes before this body and declares on his honor that he is sick.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio. I understand, Mr. Speaker, I am reported as an absentee. I have been here all the evening.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will have the roll corrected.

Mr. BAILEY. I am in the same situation.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will not have gentlemen sent for who are here.

Mr. HAYES. Will the Chair submit the proposition to excuse these three gentlemen?

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. KLOTZ. I do object sincerely to excusing anybody.

Mr. SAPP. I move that Mr. DEERING be excused. He is in feeble health, and I believe it is really dangerous for him to remain here.

The SPEAKER. "In the absence of a quorum, fifteen members, including the Speaker, if there is one, shall be authorized to compel the attendance of absent members, and in all calls of the House the names of the members shall be called by the Clerk, and the absentees noted; the doors shall then be closed, and those for whom no sufficient excuse is made may, by order of a majority of those present, be sent for and arrested, wherever they may be found." Heretofore the Chair has declined, after order has been made for the arrest of absentees, to hear excuses except by consent; but the Chair thinks, under the rule cited, that the sufficiency of the excuse at this particular stage is a matter which should be submitted to the House.

Mr. SAPP. I move my colleague, Mr. DEERING, be excused.

The SPEAKER. Before the adoption of the resolution directing the Sergeant-at-Arms to arrest absentees wherever found, this seems to be the common sense and equitable mode. The Chair therefore admits the motion.

Mr. ANDERSON. That same course was pursued before the other call this evening.

The SPEAKER. The same as the Chair now suggests. Motions were refused for excuses after the warrant had been made out.

Mr. SIMONTON. That was raised in reference to members present in the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it is competent to make a motion at this time before the order for the arrest of absentees has been directed by a vote of the House. The gentleman from Iowa asks that Mr. DEERING be excused.

Mr. HAZELTON. I object. He is not sick any more than others present are sick.

Mr. SAPP. I know of my own personal knowledge my colleague is sick and unable to attend the sitting of the House.

Mr. HAZELTON. Then I am sick.

Mr. HAYES. I move, then, the gentleman from Wisconsin be excused, as he says he is sick.

Mr. HAZELTON. I am as sick as he is.

The SPEAKER. It is subject to motion but is not debatable.

Mr. BRAGG. If these gentlemen are so anxious to save their friends, then let them vote, and they will save them.

Mr. ATHERTON. I think that is a good suggestion.

Mr. ROBINSON. If the House will hear me a moment I will make an excuse for Mr. DEERING, which he stated to me before he left the Hall. He staid here long after midnight, and said then he was unable to remain longer, and that he had become sick from staying here at a preceding night session.

Mr. BRAGG. We are sitting here for the purpose of trying to procure a quorum, in order to obtain a vote; and if we allow members as fast as they are brought in to go home to their beds and recuperate and then allow them to come back fresh to-morrow, we might as well give up now as at any other time.

Mr. HAYES. Let us have a vote.

Mr. HAZELTON. I withdraw my objection on the statement of the gentleman that his colleague has had hemorrhages.

Mr. BRAGG. If you think more of your caucus than your members' lives, then stick to your caucus.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. DEERING should be excused, as he has had hemorrhages.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to excuse the gentleman from Iowa, Mr. DEERING.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 55, noes 40.

Mr. KLOTZ. No quorum has voted.

Mr. BRAGG. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and decided in the affirmative—yeas 107, nays 69, not voting 114; as follows:

YEAS—107.

So the motion was agreed to.

Mr. NEW. I move that Judge BICKNELL be excused.

The SPEAKER. Has he not been excused already?

Mr. NEW. I do not know that he has been.

Mr. HAYES. I asked the Speaker whether he would not excuse Judge BICKNELL and a couple of other gentlemen, when the Speaker said he heard no objection to it.

The SPEAKER. That was the time when the warrant was out; but he thinks that covers the excuse, and that it is not necessary to renew the motion.

Mr. NEW. That will do.

The SPEAKER. The journal clerk says Judge BICKNELL has been excused.

Mr. HENKLE. I move that Mr. CALKINS be excused from further attendance on this night session. He is laboring under a severe inflammation of the eyes, which might become erysipelas. I move that he be excused.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. COX. What is the next proposition before the House?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is ordering the list of absentees to be made out and will then recognize the motion of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. BAILEY. Would it be in order now to make an excuse for my colleague?

The SPEAKER. The time has passed when excuses may be made.

Mr. COX. If in order, I ask that the resolution which I have presented be now considered.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Sergeant-at-Arms take into custody and bring to the bar of the House such of its members as are now absent without the leave of the House.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 68, noes 20.

So the motion was agreed to.

Mr. PAGE. Would it be in order to ask for the reading of the names of those members who have been sent for?

The SPEAKER. The names are attached to the warrant.

Mr. PAGE. I presume they have a duplicate at the desk.

The SPEAKER. The Chair supposes there is a duplicate; there is one undoubtedly at the desk.

Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia. What motion is pending before the House?

The SPEAKER. There is no motion pending. The order of the House is now being executed by the Sergeant-at-Arms.

Mr. WEAVER, (at four o'clock and fifty-five minutes a. m., on Friday.) Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the House take a recess until nine o'clock.

The SPEAKER. Pending the call of the House no motion is in order except a motion to adjourn or dispense with further proceedings under the call of the House.

Mr. WEAVER. This is not a motion; it is a request for a recess by unanimous consent.

Several members demanded the regular order.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

Mr. FROST. I object.

Mr. HAZELTON, (at five o'clock and twenty-five minutes a. m., Friday.) What is now pending before the House?

The SPEAKER. The question pending is the execution of the order of the House by the Sergeant-at-Arms.

Mr. WHITE. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. OSCAR TURNER in the chair.) The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WHITE. How long will it probably take to execute the order of the House?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is unable to answer the inquiry of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. CLYMER. I desire to ask my colleague whether he has discharged his dues to the Sergeant-at-Arms yet, and, if not, whether he is not still in contempt of the House and has no right to address it?

Mr. WHITE. I will answer my colleague by saying that it is not customary for gentlemen to inquire into the private affairs of their neighbors.

Mr. CLYMER. This is a public record against my colleague.

Mr. WHITE. Well, I will produce receipts.

Mr. MARTIN, of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that this is Friday and private bill day, and that no other business can be transacted except private business without consent of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman is out of order.

Mr. ATKINS. Mr. Speaker, there were ninety amendments by the Senate to the legislative appropriation bill, and I think it is essential, sir, if I go on with that bill, that the House shall excuse me so that I may have a little rest. I feel very badly, and will certainly be unable to proceed with that work unless I can get some sleep.

Mr. WHITE. I move that the gentleman from Tennessee be excused.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It can be done by unanimous consent. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

Mr. EINSTEIN. I am tired and sleepy, and I would like to be excused, if there is no objection. [Laughter.]

Several members objected.

The Sergeant-at-Arms appeared, having in his custody Mr. RUSSELL, of Massachusetts.

The SPEAKER. Mr. RUSSELL, you have been absent from the sittings of the House without its leave. What excuse have you to offer?

Mr. RUSSELL, of Massachusetts. I did not feel well, and went home to get some rest.

Mr. RICE. I move that my colleague be excused.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PAGE, (at 5.30 a. m.) I move that further proceedings under the call be dispensed with.

The question being put, on a viva voce vote the Speaker stated that in the opinion of the Chair the "noes" had it.

Mr. PAGE. I call for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 48, noes 61.

So the motion was not agreed to.

Mr. CONGER. I ask unanimous consent that we may take up the sundry civil appropriation bill, and proceed with it, interrupted only by the reports of the Sergeant-at-Arms.

Mr. COX. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

Mr. CONGER. Who objects?

Mr. COX. I objected; because I want this most important bill, of all other bills before the House the most important, which only comes once in ten years, to have full consideration and action upon it.

Now, I tender to the gentleman from Michigan, on behalf of gentlemen around me, a vote on every proposition he can name from 319 down to 293 if he pleases, on the condition that he will not make any more dilatory motions.

Mr. CONGER. I like to hear the gentleman's tender. The gentleman is a perfect little miniature mass of tenders.

Mr. COX, (to Mr. CONGER, who had crossed the House, and stood in front of him.) Do not approach so near. I do not wish to ask the Sergeant-at-Arms to remove the gentleman. [Laughter.]

I am making a proposition to the gentleman from Michigan, whom I have now immediately before me, and I think it is very likely it may meet his acceptance. I make it directly to him as the representative of that side of the House, in all good temper, a quality which the gentleman sometimes exhibits but rarely. It is this: I know, speaking in all seriousness, members on this side of the House have been greatly pained at hearing the sad news of the death of one of the Senators of the United States. We are in this predicament, we are in this fight for apportionment.

Mr. CONGER. I rise to a question of order.

Mr. COX. I hope the gentleman will allow me to make my statement. We have been pained that this thing should have delayed the announcement of the death of Senator CARPENTER. I propose now to members on the other side that we take a vote on the figures from 319 down to 293, or from 293 up.

Mr. VALENTINE. That is the same proposition we had a week ago.

Mr. COX. I am willing to commence at 322 and vote down, or to vote on any numbers from 293 up, so that you all can have a choice; that is, if you cease these dilatory motions. Will you accept the proposition?

Mr. BURROWS. It has been made a hundred times.

Mr. COX. Will you accept that?

Mr. VALENTINE. Will the gentleman withdraw the previous question?

Mr. COX. I again ask gentlemen on the other side will they consent to what I have proposed?

Mr. CONGER. Will the gentleman withdraw the previous question?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has not the power to do that.

Mr. BURROWS. But he has the power to move to reconsider the vote ordering the main question.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Was a motion to reconsider made and laid on the table?

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will examine and ascertain the fact as to that.

Mr. CONVERSE. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CONVERSE. I wish to inquire of the Chair whether, in the present condition of the bill, a motion might not be made to commit with instructions to amend?

The SPEAKER. That motion could not be made under the rule. The Chair will cause the rule to be read, that question having been previously asked.

Mr. BURROWS. Was a motion to reconsider ever made?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has caused the Journal to be examined, and will know in a moment.

Mr. VALENTINE. I know the exact facts as to that, because I was watching it.

The SPEAKER. On the point suggested as to a motion to commit the rule reads as follows:

It shall be in order pending the motion for or after the previous question shall have been ordered on its passage—

The passage of a bill or resolution—for the Speaker to entertain and submit a motion to commit, with or without instructions, to a standing or select committee.

The Chair therefore states that under the rule a motion to commit with instructions, even if the proceedings under the call of the House were dispensed with, would not be in order in this condition of the bill. On the other point, the Chair is advised the gentleman from New York moved to reconsider the vote by which the main question was ordered and then withdrew that motion.

Mr. BURROWS. That leaves him at liberty to move to reconsider the vote ordering the main question, and thus to get the previous question out of the way.

Mr. COX. I do not desire to withdraw the previous question; neither have I the power to do it. I will put my proposition in this way: If we have a vote on 319 and that fails, will gentlemen on the other side allow us then to have votes on other numbers? I appeal to the good sense of gentlemen on the other side.

Mr. BRIGGS. The good sense should have commenced earlier.

The SPEAKER. That proposition was made several hours ago.

Mr. COX. Now, before I conclude allow me to say that if gentlemen on the other side will only cease to obstruct the legislation——

Mr. CONGER. I object to any remarks casting reflections on gentlemen on this side of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York must not reflect on members.

Mr. COX. I say "obstruction." Everybody knows it is obstruction, and you cannot get over it.

Mr. CONGER. I object to the gentleman going on with his remarks because he is reflecting upon us on this side.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will confine himself to remarks strictly in order.

Mr. COX. All the reflection that I may make will not hurt anybody.

Mr. CONGER. I am not afraid of that.

Mr. COX. If gentlemen want to vote on the number 319, or any other number, we are content, if we can have votes on numbers further along.

Mr. HAZELTON. With 311 left out?

Mr. COX. With 311 left out.

Mr. CONGER. I ask unanimous consent that the order for the previous question be withdrawn.

Mr. COX. I have no power to do that.

Mr. CONGER. Unanimous consent can withdraw it.

Mr. LAPHAM. And we have no power to accept your proposition.

Mr. COX. It can be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. BURROWS. Cannot the gentleman move to reconsider the vote for the previous question?

Mr. COX. It has been reconsidered and laid on the table.

Mr. BURROWS. That is a mistake; it has not been.

Mr. COX. I do not propose to open this matter again to debate. My friend from Michigan told me to-night that the object on that side was not to vote but to debate. The gentleman is a frank man.

Mr. HUBBELL. He is.

Mr. CONGER. To whom does the gentleman refer?

Mr. COX. Not to my distinguished friend, the Senator, [laughter.] I refer to the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. BURROWS.]

Mr. BURROWS. That is not the point. The gentleman is in a position to move to reconsider the previous question if he desires.

Mr. COX. If the House will give unanimous consent for you to have a vote on these propositions, why delay? I say again, after an anxious study of this question for two years, that an extra session may be called in consequence of our failure to pass this important bill, or the Legislatures of twenty States may be called together at an enormous expense to the people. Now, I ask gentlemen if they will not, by simply giving us a chance to vote on certain numbers, end this imbroglio?

Mr. ANDERSON. Will the gentleman answer a question?

Mr. COX. Certainly.

Mr. ANDERSON. With the previous question pending on the bill and amendments, can you act on the proposition you submit?

Mr. COX. By unanimous consent it can be done.

Mr. ANDERSON. If that can be done by unanimous consent, why not have the previous question removed by unanimous consent, and then go ahead?

Mr. COX. That would open the matter up to illimitable debate, and I do not propose to do that.

Mr. ANDERSON. It need not be illimitable.

Mr. COX. I am satisfied that if gentlemen really desire to have an extra session of Congress, if they want to defeat what we conceive to be a very prominent financial public bill, if they want extra sessions of the Legislatures, then they are pursuing a course intended exactly to reach that point.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Iowa. How do you know the State Legislatures want to act upon this matter at this time?

Mr. COX. I know they do.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Iowa. Many of them will expire by limitation before this bill can be passed.

Mr. ROBESON. Do I understand the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] to say that unless we pass this apportionment bill according to the views of that side of the House, the appropriation bills for the proper carrying on of this Government and for its maintenance will not be passed at this session?

Mr. COX. Nobody said anything of the kind.

Mr. ROBESON. That is what I understood the gentleman to say.

Mr. COX. When did the gentleman come in here?

Mr. ROBESON. I have not been away to-night.

Mr. COX. I suppose you were asleep.

Mr. ROBESON. Oh, no; I have been on watch here all the time.

Mr. COX. I compliment the gentleman on his appearance after so much watchfulness.

Mr. ROBESON. We want to understand the attitude of the other side. We want to know whether you mean to stand up here and say that you will pass the apportionment bill at this session, and at a time when there is no particular pressure for it, or you will not pass the appropriation bills?

Mr. ATKINS. You cannot get us on the starving dodge now; you got us on that once.

Mr. COX. We do not propose anything of the kind. We propose to give you a chance to vote on your own proposition.

Mr. ANDERSON. That cannot be done if any one objects.

Mr. COX. I say by unanimous consent.

Mr. ANDERSON. Very well, if you can do that by unanimous consent why not take off the previous question by unanimous consent?

Mr. COX. If no one objects on this side who will object on that side.

Mr. BRIGGS. I object.

The Sergeant-at-Arms appeared at the bar, having in custody, in pursuance of the order of the House, Mr. CHITTENDEN.

The SPEAKER. Mr. CHITTENDEN, you have been absent from the sitting of the House without its leave. What excuse have you to offer?

Mr. CHITTENDEN. Mr. Speaker, I am going to tell the truth. The night before last I took supper with Brother HISCOCK, and after many courses and speeches under the five-minute rule, I did not get home till morning. Last night I went home to supper and came back in good faith according to my parol. I did not go off to the White House with the invalids—to stay. I went there. I returned here and staid till twelve o'clock. I appealed to Brother ROBESON and to several other brethren to get me excused because I was tired, but nobody succeeded.

Mr. SHELLEY. I move the gentleman be excused.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ACKLEN. I desire to ask leave of absence for two hours. I have answered to every roll-call; I have attended the session all night, and I ask leave of the House to absent myself for two hours.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Louisiana asks leave to be absent from the House for two hours.

Mr. HAYES. We all want to go home.

Mr. KLOTZ. The gentleman from Louisiana is one of the youngest members of the House, and I think he has hardly been here all night. I do not think we should excuse him.

Mr. ACKLEN. I will say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania I have been here in the House all night.

Mr. VALENTINE. I heard the gentleman vote against excusing the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. DEERING.]

Mr. ACKLEN. I ask to be excused for the length of time I have stated. I would like to go to my residence for about two hours.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Several members objected.

The Sergeant-at-Arms appeared, having Mr. MONROE in his custody.

The SPEAKER. Mr. MONROE, you have been absent from the sessions of the House without its leave. What excuse have you to offer?

Mr. MONROE. I can only state the facts. Between one and two o'clock I was so weary I felt really ill, and went home for a short rest. As soon as the Sergeant-at-Arms notified me to return I came back. I fear that may not be as good an excuse as the House may require, but these are the facts of the case.

Mr. KING. I move that the gentleman be excused.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CONVERSE. I desire to make a proposition; the proposition I was about to make when interrupted some time ago.

I propose, Mr. Speaker, that by unanimous consent we take one vote on 319, and if that figure shall receive 147 votes we shall call it adopted; and if not, let us, by common consent, go back to the deadlock we are in now.

Several MEMBERS. All right.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky, and Mr. TALBOTT objected.

Mr. KEIFER. There is no objection on this side.

Mr. ROBESON. I repeat what the gentleman from Ohio has just said, that there is no objection on this side.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. TALBOTT] objects.

Mr. TALBOTT. I wish to say that if 150 votes are cast on that proposition and the majority are in favor of it, this House and the Speaker have no right nor power to counteract that vote.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

Mr. CONVERSE. I will modify my proposition. I propose we now take a vote on 319 and say nothing about what is to come afterward.

Mr. BLACKBURN and others objected.

Mr. KEIFER. Let the vote be on 322, and then on 319.

Mr. BLACKBURN. If the gentleman from Ohio will modify his proposition to this extent, I think it can be agreed to, at least by this side of the House: that the gentlemen on that side may select what number they please and vote on that one number; provided if they fail to carry that number, this side shall then suggest a number on which another vote shall be had.

Mr. EINSTEIN. We have refused that already.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Very well; if that be again refused, there are members here who will agree to nothing.

Mr. ROBESON. My friend from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] will understand exactly the situation. We are maintaining the right of the minority against the majority. If we yield to the majority a position in which they can beat us, they will beat us; that is all.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Will the gentleman from New Jersey allow me to make one suggestion?

Mr. ROBESON. Certainly.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I think, on the contrary, the gentleman from New Jersey and his side are trying to assert the right of the minority to dictate terms to the majority of this House.

Several MEMBERS. Regular order!

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question being put, the Speaker on a viva voce vote stated that the "noes" appeared to have it.

Mr. ROBESON. I call for a division.

Mr. SPARKS. Pending that, allow me to make this suggestion: If the gentlemen on the other side want to do anything, I think this side is disposed to present anything fair for them. I cannot speak for anybody but myself, but I believe gentlemen on this side would be willing to agree to what I now suggest. As some gentlemen want to vote on 322, let there be a vote on 322; failing in which, let there be a vote on 319; failing in which, come down to 307 and vote on that. Let us vote on all these propositions. The figure 311, I believe, is not desired. Let the vote be on 322, on 319, and then on 307.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. If you want the previous question to operate on 322 say so.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I will say let it operate on all. And let us alternate on the number first suggested by the other side and then a number suggested on this side; and let us alternate as long as you please.

The SPEAKER. A division was called for on the motion that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. ROBESON. I withdraw the call for a division.

The SPEAKER. The "noes" have it, and the House refuses to adjourn.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. The previous question as now operating would cut out the vote on 322 altogether. The previous question which has been ordered does not operate on that.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. We propose to give a vote on 322.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. You cannot call the previous question on that, as it is now operating.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I have no doubt our side of the House will agree to that.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I understand the previous question is operating on the bill and pending amendments; but a proposition in favor of 322 is not now pending as an amendment, and is therefore not under the operation of the previous question.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I will make that proposition, and I do not think any one will object. It is that we begin voting on 322 and then on down.

Mr. KEIFER. Vote on down until we conclude to stop.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. And at the suggestion of gentlemen around me, I will couple with that proposition that we now take a recess until eleven o'clock, with the understanding that at eleven o'clock we will commence voting on 322 and then on down.

The SPEAKER. A recess is not now in order, pending a call of the House.

Mr. CAMP. I move to dispense with all further proceedings under the call, with a view of taking a recess.

Mr. CHALMERS. Before that motion is put, I desire to say that I am authorized by the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] to state that he is willing to accept the proposition of the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. CANNON,] that the number 322 shall be considered as pending under the previous question.

Mr. CONGER. Let me tell the gentleman why we cannot accept that proposition.

Mr. CHALMERS. It comes from your side.

Mr. CONGER. I can tell the gentleman in a moment, I think. There is only one of the amendments pending to all of these bills which we desire, and that is an amendment to the substitute, on the proposition of 319. Some gentlemen may want to try other numbers, 322, 321, or whatever the numbers may be. The proposition is not that we may try the number 319 on each of the bills as they come up. It is that we shall have an independent vote on that proposition, pending the previous question. If that shall be voted down, it will leave us in a condition to have it decided by the Chair that as the proposition has been voted down, under the rules we cannot have another chance to vote on it.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky. Suppose we agree to consider the bill as in Committee of the Whole, and allow amendments to be offered and voted on without debate. Will that be acceptable?

Mr. CONGER. I presume that on this side we would be willing to consider this bill as in Committee of the Whole, with the previous question withdrawn, and the right to offer amendments.

Mr. BLACKBURN. We have no objection to that.

Mr. CONGER. Under the five-minute rule.

Mr. BLACKBURN. No, not under the five-minute rule.

Mr. CONGER. Under the five-minute rule, on what the Chair will say are substantial amendments.

Mr. BLACKBURN. No.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. CAMP] to dispense with all further proceedings under the call, the gentleman stating that he makes the motion with a view of taking a recess.

The motion of Mr. CAMP was not agreed to.

Mr. WHITE. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WHITE. Can an informal vote be taken by unanimous consent upon any proposition, and should that proposition be voted down, can it again be offered at a subsequent stage to the pending bill? I ask the question in good faith.

The SPEAKER. If the House vote down a proposition, it would not be in order immediately to offer the same proposition again.

Mr. WHITE. I think the Chair does not apprehend my question. If, for instance, by unanimous consent an informal vote be taken on 319, and that number be voted down, then at a subsequent stage of the proceedings, throwing out of view the previous question, can that proposition be again offered and voted upon?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will decide that question when it arises.

Mr. WHITE. I am very much obliged to the Chair. I thought I knew that much before I asked the question. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair never makes decisions on supposed cases.

Mr. WHITE. Oh, yes; by way of argument.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not argue.

Mr. WHITE. Then I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The SPEAKER. That motion has been voted down, and no other motion has intervened. The gentleman can move that the House adjourn.

Mr. WHITE. Well, I make that motion.

The motion to adjourn was not agreed to.

Mr. WHITE. I now move to dispense with all further proceedings under the call.

Mr. REED. That is the only way we can get a recess.

The motion of Mr. WHITE was not agreed to.

The Sergeant-at-Arms then appeared having in custody Mr. BUCKNER, of Missouri.

The SPEAKER. Mr. BUCKNER, you have been absent from the sitting of the House without its leave. What excuse have you to offer for such absence?

Mr. BUCKNER. I have no excuse other than that I have made it a rule during this session not to be out in the night air, as I regarded that as dangerous to my health. I therefore concluded to go home last night about eleven o'clock.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I move that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BUCKNER] be discharged from custody.

Mr. WHITE. On the payment of costs.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. No, without costs. The gentleman has been sick all winter.

Mr. WHITE. Others of us here have had to pay costs. I insist on fair play.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WHITE] to move to amend the motion of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HARRIS] by adding "on payment of costs."

Mr. WHITE. Yes, I move that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to; and then the motion, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. MONEY. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. If the House, by any agreement, should begin to vote now, on what would be the first vote?

The SPEAKER. The Chair could not answer that question without knowing the terms of the agreement.

Mr. MONEY. But, if the House should now begin to vote without any agreement, upon what proposition would the vote be first taken under the rules?

The SPEAKER. On the amendment to the amendment to the original text.

Mr. MONEY. What is the number fixed by that amendment?

The SPEAKER. That amendment, if the Chair recollects correctly, is the one offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. RYON,] and does not relate to the number of Representatives.

Mr. MONEY. What would be the next?

The SPEAKER. The next would be 307.

Mr. WHITE. What would be the next?

The SPEAKER. The next question would be on the amendment to the substitute—319.

Mr. WHITE. Are there only three amendments pending?

The SPEAKER. There are two amendments to the original text, besides a substitute and an amendment to the substitute. No more amendments are now admissible under the rules.

Mr. WHITE. Does the substitute propose 319?

The SPEAKER. The amendment to the substitute proposes 319, the substitute 311.

Mr. MONEY. Did I understand the Chair to say that after the vote on 307 the next vote would be on 319?

The SPEAKER. The first vote would be on the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. RYON,] which relates to the formation of districts by counties, &c. The next vote would be on 307; the next on the amendment to the substitute.

Mr. COX. Three hundred and nineteen?

The SPEAKER. Three hundred and nineteen. If that should be adopted, the vote would then be on the substitute as amended, in lieu of the original text.

Mr. CONGER. So that by that process, if the last proposition prior to 319 were adopted, we would have no vote at all upon that.

The SPEAKER. The question would then recur on the amendment to the original text.

Mr. CONGER. But no amendment could be offered to any amendment pending now.

Mr. WHITE. Can we not by unanimous consent take an informal vote on 319?

Mr. THOMPSON, of Iowa. There is no consent to 319.

Mr. WHITE. I say, if there is——

Mr. THOMPSON, of Iowa. There is not.

Mr. WHITE. I for one will consent.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Iowa. I would like to say a single word, if it be in order. There seems to be a wrong impression that there has been an agreement to support 319. There is no commitment as concerns myself or anybody else, so far as I know, to 319, although that seems to be talked of all over the House. There is a wrong impression as to that matter. There is no commitment at all. I will have something more to say upon this at the right time.

Mr. WHITE. Nobody said there was any commitment. I did not say that the gentleman from Iowa was committed to 319. I said that for one I was willing to take an informal vote upon it.

Mr. HAWLEY. I beg leave to make a suggestion. It is that we should—informally, of course, for it would not appear as part of the record—have it understood between the two parties here that each should select five gentlemen, and that these ten should meet for a conference with the hope that they may agree upon some plan; and that in the mean time the House take a recess until half past ten o'clock, so that we may at once take up this business when we reassemble, and go on without being interrupted by the morning hour. I suggest this to gentlemen on both sides as affording some chance of a solution. We are not so far apart by any means as we were when the night began; and I think that if there be a conference of ten gentlemen, five from each side, they could probably suggest a plan under which we could proceed to vote.

Mr. BLACKBURN. That is all right. I hope the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] will agree to it.

Mr. COX. After a very hurried conference with my friends around me, I will say that if the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] has the consent of his side of the House to make that proposition, I think there will be no objection here.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will submit it.

Mr. SPRINGER. What is the proposition?

The SPEAKER. The proposition, as made by the gentleman from Connecticut, is that ten members be selected, five from each side of the House.

Mr. HAWLEY. Selected by the members themselves.

The SPEAKER. Certainly; the Chair would not wish to interfere in such a matter; and that these ten gentlemen meet in conference with the view of making some suggestion to the House that may be acceptable to the two sides in securing a disposition of the bill. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. ROTHWELL. I would like to inquire how these gentlemen are to be selected?

The SPEAKER. The gentlemen on the floor on the respective sides will make the selection.

Mr. HAWLEY. We can do that informally immediately after the recess.

The SPEAKER. The Chair of course could have nothing to do with the matter, as it would be purely informal.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I suggest the chairman of the Committee on Census be allowed to select four conferees from this side, and the first-named gentleman, whom I do not now recollect, on the republican side on that committee, I believe the gentleman from Connecticut——

Mr. HAWLEY. I am not on that committee.

The SPEAKER. Mr. SHERWIN is the gentleman who submitted the amendment.

Mr. CONGER. We prefer to select our own men.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has nothing to do with the selections on either side. It had better be left to the two sides of the House to arrange it, each for itself.

Mr. HAWLEY. My object was to escape this kind of argument. Let the republicans agree on their conferees and the democrats on theirs.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I withdraw my suggestion.

Mr. KEIFER. Has there been unanimous consent?

The SPEAKER. There has been.

Mr. HAWLEY. If there be no objection, we can now take a recess.

The SPEAKER. The names might be arranged upon the floor, and not as a part of the proceedings of the body.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I do not see how we can name these men without a caucus.

Mr. HAWLEY. We can do it in five minutes.

Mr. BLACKBURN. As everything seems to be going on harmoniously by unanimous consent, let me ask whether that side of the House will not agree to let five gentlemen be named by the gentleman from Connecticut who has submitted this proposition?

Mr. KEIFER. Had not you better name them?

Mr. BLACKBURN. Will the gentleman from Ohio agree to let some one from his side name them?

Mr. KEIFER. Not a man who has been voting with that side.

Mr. HAWLEY. Do not make any reflection on me. It has nothing to do with me. I suggest Mr. CONGER make it for the republicans. I am perfectly willing he should do it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks each side should be left to its own volition.

Mr. CONGER. The proposition was, each side should select its own conferees and not have them dictated to either side.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I have withdrawn my proposition.

Mr. HUNTON. The proposition is, as I understand it, to take a recess. I ask the gentleman will agree to an adjournment so the death of Senator CARPENTER may be announced by taking up the resolutions coming from the Senate and then we can adjourn.

Mr. COX. I move to dispense with all further proceedings under the call; and then in order to make it satisfactory I shall then propose to take a recess for five minutes so that the names of conferees can be announced.

Mr. ROBESON. We are ready to name our conferees.

Mr. COX. Very well; name them.

Mr. ROBESON. We name Mr. CONGER, Mr. SHERWIN, Mr. ANDERSON, Mr. LAPHAM, and Mr. SHALLENBERGER.

Mr. SPRINGER. The gentlemen with whom I have conferred have agreed on the following names: Mr. COX, Mr. THOMPSON of Kentucky, Mr. HUNTON, Mr. HOUSE, and Mr. MORRISON.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Without authority, I desire to announce for acceptance on this side of the House a revision of the list by reason of the disinclination of one gentleman to serve. It is as follows: Mr. COX, Mr. THOMPSON of Kentucky, Mr. REAGAN, Mr. HOUSE, and Mr. MORRISON.

Mr. SPRINGER. That is satisfactory all round.

Mr. COX. I move to dispense with all further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MANNING. I ask by unanimous consent that there be stricken out of the RECORD everything of a personal character which occurred this morning in reference to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. CHITTENDEN.]

Mr. HAWLEY. I am glad of that.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Chair also asks to take from the RECORD the bill and amendment which were read.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

MEETING OF CONFERENCE COMMITTEE.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to announce that the conference committee of the respective sides touching the apportionment bill will meet at ten o'clock a. m., in the room of the Committee on Ways and Means.

DEATH OF SENATOR CARPENTER.

The SPEAKER. As notice has been given that the Senate resolution in relation to the death of Senator CARPENTER will be called up to-day, the Chair requests that the House be in order, so that proper respect may be shown to the memory of the dead.

Mr. HAZELTON. Mr. Speaker, it was arranged that my colleague, Mr. WILLIAMS, should call up these resolutions, and also submit a resolution for the House, with some remarks on his part in reference to the death of Senator CARPENTER. The Chair will remember that Mr. WILLIAMS was excused last night on account of twenty-four hours' attendance upon Mr. CARPENTER during his sickness. He is prepared to submit that resolution, and I think had some desire to do so; and it was in deference to his desire that his colleagues in the House agreed not to call up the resolutions until he was present. Unless it is considered as absolutely important, I would very much prefer that some arrangement should be made to give him that opportunity.

The SPEAKER. The only object the Chair had was that it would be more respectful, the Chair thinks, to adjourn on the day on which the resolutions of this character come to us from the Senate.

Mr. HAWLEY. But, Mr. Speaker, that announcement having been made by the Chair and also the announcement of the purpose of withholding the resolutions on the part of the gentleman from Wisconsin, because of the desire of his colleague to present them, would perhaps justify us in allowing the matter to lay over until eleven o'clock, so that Mr. WILLIAMS might be present and call them up himself.

Mr. REAGAN. If the House will take a recess until half past ten o'clock, then there will be an opportunity for presenting the resolutions at the close of this legislative day.

Mr. CASWELL. I suggest that the House take a recess until a quarter past eleven o'clock so that Mr. WILLIAMS may be present and introduce these resolutions.

Mr. REAGAN. That will take us until the end of this legislative day.

Mr. HUNTON. I suggest that the gentleman fix ten and a half o'clock and then the announcement may be made and the adjournment take place.

Mr. HAZELTON. I will then make a motion that the House take a recess until half past ten o'clock for the purpose indicated.

The SPEAKER. The question now recurs on the motion that the House take a recess.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at six o'clock and fifty-five minutes a. m., on Friday) the House took a recess until half past ten o'clock.

MORNING SESSION.

The recess having expired, the House reassembled at ten o'clock and thirty minutes a. m., (Friday, February 25.)

Mr. PRICE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House take a further recess of ten minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

The recess having expired, the House reassembled at ten o'clock and forty minutes a. m.

DEATH OF SENATOR CARPENTER.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, it becomes my painful duty to call up the Senate message announcing the death of Senator MATTHEW H. CARPENTER, and ask that it be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. MATTHEW H. CARPENTER, late a Senator from the State of Wisconsin.

Resolved, That a committee of five Senators be appointed by the Vice-President to take order for superintending the funeral of Mr. CARPENTER; and that as a mark of respect entertained by the Senate for his memory, his remains be removed from Washington to Milwaukee, Wisconsin, in charge of the Sergeant-at-Arms and attended by said committee, who shall have full power to carry this resolution into effect.

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate communicate the foregoing resolutions to the House of Representatives.

Resolved, That, as an additional mark of respect to the memory of Mr. CARPENTER, the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, Wisconsin has lost her most gifted son. She will weep at his open grave, for he was the idol of our people. The nation knew his greatness and will mourn with us his loss.

At some future time, to be appointed by the House, befitting words will pay tribute to his memory and his worth.

I ask the adoption of the following resolutions.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the House has received with the deepest sorrow the message announcing the death of Hon. MATTHEW H. CARPENTER, late a Senator of the United States from the State of Wisconsin.

Resolved, That, in addition to the Wisconsin delegation, a committee of five members of this House be appointed who shall accompany the body of the deceased Senator to its place of burial in that State.

Resolved, That, as a mark of respect for the memory of the deceased, the House do now adjourn.

Mr. HAZELTON. Mr. Speaker, I rise to second the resolutions just submitted to the House by my colleague. It is a sorrowful office which I perform in supporting the resolutions which announce to this House and the world the death of the most distinguished citizen of my State, and a leading Senator of the Republic, Hon. MATTHEW H. CARPENTER.

Over his death-bed Wisconsin bows her head in mourning; but a greater mourner is the nation which he loved and served so well.

Born amid humble conditions of life, upon his own merits by the force of his own will and ability, he pushed his way on up until he became an honored member of that forum where the sovereignty of fifty millions of people finds its highest and most illustrious representation. And then he died. At this high point of assured fame, of power, influence, and opportunity, he died.

Eulogy upon his life and character is reserved for another time and another occasion. It is becoming in us and to his memory that the resolutions be adopted.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolutions submitted by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The resolutions were unanimously agreed to; and in obedience thereto the House (at ten o'clock and forty-five minutes a. m. on Friday) adjourned.

Enrolled joint resolution No. 1, (house of representatives.)—A joint resolution in regard to the reconstruction by the Government of the Wabash and Erie Canal.

Whereas upon petition of citizens of the States of Ohio and Indiana, the Government of the United States, through Congress, has considered the connection, by a canal, of Lake Erie and the Atlantic Ocean with the Wabash River, and by that river the Ohio, Mississippi, and the Gulf of Mexico, practicable; and

Whereas the Government, in order, if possible, to connect the navigable waters of the East with the navigable waters of the West by a canal, has, through Congress, appropriated $15,000 to pay the expenses of survey and report, and ordered said survey to be made from Lake Erie, at Toledo, Ohio, down the bed of the old Wabash and Erie Canal, to a point at or near La Fayette, Indiana, on the Wabash River; and

Whereas the Government Corps of Engineers have completed the said survey and are about ready to report the result to Congress, which report is said to be favorable to said construction and of great national necessity; and

Whereas the construction of an enlarged canal, as contemplated, will be of great benefit to Indiana and the country, by creating a cheaper mode of transportation, and be thereby a check and competition to the excessive demands of railroads: Therefore,

Be it resolved by the General Assembly of the State of Indiana, That our Senators in Congress be instructed and our Representatives be requested to use all honorable endeavors to secure the passage of an act constructing said canal and securing the necessary appropriation to construct this great work.

WILLIAM M. RIDPATH,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.
THOMAS HANNA,
President of the Senate.

STATE OF INDIANA,
Office of the secretary of State, ss:

I, E. R. Hawn, secretary of State of the State of Indiana, do hereby certify that the foregoing is a full, true, and complete copy of house joint resolution No. 1, passed by the General Assembly of the State of Indiana, at the fifty-second session thereof, as the same appears from the original enrolled joint resolution now remaining on file in the office of the secretary of State of the State of Indiana.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the seal of the State of Indiana, at the city of Indianapolis, this 19th day of February, A. D. 1881.

[SEAL.]
E. R. HAWN,
Secretary of State.

Mr. PADDOCK presented the memorial of William G. Hildreth and 39 others, citizens of Exeter, Nebraska, ex-Union soldiers remonstrating against the passage of the bill (S. No. 496) providing for the examination and adjudication of pension claims; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented the petition of S. B. Harris and 15 others, citizens of Rising City, Nebraska, ex-Union soldiers, praying for the passage of the amendment reported by the Committee on Pensions to the bill (S. Mr. MORRILL presented the memorial of Michael L. Fay and others, citizens of the State of Vermont, pensioners, remonstrating against the passage of the bill (S. No. 496) providing for the examination and adjudication of pension claims; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. THURMAN. I present a memorial of citizens of Ohio, remonstrating against the passage of the bill (S. No. 496) providing for the examination and adjudication of pension claims, commonly called the sixty-surgeons bill. It is proper that I should state that about one-half of the names on this memorial appear to have been written by the same person, but the other half appear to have been written by different individuals. Under these circumstances I present the memorial, although I think it is a very bad thing for petitions to be manufactured in that way. I move that the memorial lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

No. 7099) making appropriations for the Agricultural Department of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, and for other purposes, to report it with sundry amendments. I am instructed by the committee to ask the Senate to take up the bill for action as soon as the regular routine morning business is completed.

Mr. FARLEY, from the Committee on Mines and Mining, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1946) to establish an assay office at Deadwood, in the Territory of Dakota, reported it with an amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 2149) to establish an assay office in the city of Omaha, in the State of Nebraska, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 2140) to establish an assay office in the Territory of Arizona, reported it with amendments.

Mr. COKE. I am directed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 7103) to constitute Atlanta, Georgia, a port of delivery, to report it without amendment. I ask unanimous consent to consider the bill at this time.

Mr. TELLER. I object. Let it go over until we reach it on the Calendar.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I hope the Senator will not object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. COCKRELL in the chair.) The Senator from Colorado objects, and the bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. COKE. I am directed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 7033) making the city of Chattanooga, in the State of Tennessee, a port of delivery, to report it favorably and without amendment.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to proceed at this time to the consideration of that bill. It cannot take two minutes. It is very important to certain importers there. The bill is recommended by the Secretary of the Treasury; has passed the House; and is recommended by the Committee on Commerce of the Senate.

Mr. WITHERS. I am also interested in bills that I should like to see passed, and I think we had better act upon them as they are reached in their regular order on the Calendar.

Mr. HARRIS. The bill simply makes Chattanooga a port of delivery, and it is very important as a question of time to certain importers there that it should be passed at once.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to proceed to the consideration of the bill. Is there objection?

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I desire to make a report from a committee.

Mr. HARRIS. The matter I suggest will not take two minutes. As soon as the Senate understands what it is it will be passed.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. Will not the Senator allow the regular morning business to be presented?

Mr. HARRIS. Certainly; I yield to the Senator for regular morning business or any other thing the Senator wants me to yield for.

Mr. KIRKWOOD, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1102) granting a pension to John S. Corlett, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3309) for the relief of John T. Neale, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. PLATT, from the Committee on Patents, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 994) for the relief of George J. Wardwell, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1668) suplementary to "an act for the relief of Nelson Lyon and Jeremiah S. James," approved April 1, 1880, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. GROOME, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the bill (S. No. 2172) regulating the pension of William Blaisdell, and the bill (H. R. No. 7030) regulating the pension of William Blaisdell, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bills were postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1469) granting a pension to Mary Ann McCarrol, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. VOORHEES. I am instructed by the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3520) to establish a port of delivery at Indianapolis, in the State of Indiana, to report it with an amendment in the nature of a substitute, which I will ask to have read, and then I shall ask for the present consideration of the bill. I presume there will not be a particle of objection to it, and it will not take three minutes to pass it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Indiana asks unanimous consent to proceed to the consideration of the bill reported by him.

Mr. WITHERS. I rise to morning business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Virginia objects.

Mr. WITHERS. I wish to present morning business; let us get through with that first.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Reports of committees are still in order.

Mr. WITHERS, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2549) granting a pension to Edward H. Mitchell, reported it without amendment and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. BROWN, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 205) granting a pension to Jacob Gelwicks, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. CALL, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of S. A. Childers, of West Virginia, praying for a pension, submitted a report thereon, accompanied by a bill (S. No. 2216) granting a pension to S. A. Childers.

The bill was read twice by its title, and the report ordered to be printed.

Mr. CALL, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of Frank N. Gray, praying to be allowed a pension, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the committee were discharged from the further consideration of the petition.

Mr. SAULSBURY, from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 2190) for the relief of John H. Templeton, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. RANSOM, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 2095) authorizing the construction of a bridge over the Missouri River at or near Arrow Rock, Missouri, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. PLUMB, from the Committee on Mines and Mining, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1280) to amend section 2326 of the Revised Statutes, relating to suits at law affecting the title to mining claims, reported it without amendment.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. BECK. On the 21st of December last I introduced a bill (S. No. 1944) to authorize the issue of legal-tender notes of the United States upon the deposit of gold; which was referred to the Finance Committee. I subsequently submitted the bill to the Secretary of the Treasury to make a careful examination of it, and, after receiving a report from him, I now ask leave to introduce a bill as a substitute for the bill No. 1944, and ask its reference to the Committee on Finance.

By unanimous consent, leave was granted to introduce a bill (S. No. 2217) to authorize the issue of notes of the United States circulating as money upon the deposit of gold, &c.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. PENDLETON asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 2218) granting a pension to Mrs. Hannah S. Commager; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. GROOME, it was Ordered, That John G. Taylor have leave to withdraw his papers from the files of the Senate.

On motion of Mr. GARLAND, it was Ordered, That Augustin Gachot, of Arkansas, have leave to withdraw his papers from the files of the Senate by leaving copies of the same; there having been an adverse report in the case.

CHATTANOOGA A PORT OF DELIVERY.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask the Senate to proceed now to the consideration of the bill that was reported this morning from the Committee on Commerce to make the city of Chattanooga a port of delivery. I only desire to say that it is a matter of very great importance to certain importers there that the bill be passed at once. It is recommended by the Secretary of the Treasury; the bill has passed the House, and is recommended by the Committee on Commerce. I hope the Senate will consider it at this time.

Mr. TELLER. I understand there are two or three bills of exactly the same character. I made objection to the consideration of one of them. If they can be passed without any discussion I am willing to withdraw my objection and let them go.

Mr. HARRIS. I hope they will all be passed, for I think they are all meritorious.

Mr. TELLER. I understand there are three of the same character. Let them be passed at once, so that we may be done with the business.

Mr. WINDOM. I gave notice day before yesterday that at the conclusion of the routine business of the morning hour I would insist on going to the Calendar for the purpose of completing the consideration of the patent bill. Therefore, I think I shall have to insist on the Calendar.

Mr. VOORHEES. Let me appeal to the Senator from Minnesota. These three bills will not take five minutes. Just as fast as they can be read they will be passed. One bill is for Chattanooga, one for Atlanta, and one for Indianapolis.

Mr. WINDOM. If no one else objects, I shall not object, for five minutes.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 7033) making the city of Chattanooga, in the State of Tennessee, a port of delivery.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INDIANAPOLIS A PORT OF DELIVERY.

Mr. VOORHEES. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 3520) to establish a port of delivery at Indianapolis, in the State of Indiana.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Finance with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That Indianapolis, in the State of Indiana, be, and the same is hereby, constituted a port of delivery; and that the privileges of immediate transportation of dutiable merchandise conferred by the act of June 10, 1880, entitled "An act to amend the statutes in relation to immediate transportation of dutiable goods, and for other purposes," be, and the same are hereby, extended to said port; and there shall be appointed a surveyor of customs to reside at said port, who shall receive a salary, to be determined by the Secretary of the Treasury, not exceeding $1,000 per annum.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

ATLANTA A PORT OF DELIVERY.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill to constitute Atlanta a port of delivery.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 7103) to constitute Atlanta, Georgia, a port of delivery.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WHYTE. I ask the Senate to grant me unanimous consent to take up the bill (H. R. No. 2844) for the relief of James E. Montell. It will not take more than a moment. It is a unanimous report from the Committee on Finance.

Mr. WINDOM. The five minutes that I yielded will be up very soon.

Mr. WHYTE. It will not take over a moment. The Finance Committee reported the bill unanimously.

Mr. WITHERS. I gave notice that I should call up the agricultural appropriation bill at the expiration of the morning business. If I do not object to this bill, a dozen others will be pressed for the consideration of the Senate, and the statement made in each case that it will take but a minute. I am willing to go on with the Calendar, but not to take up bills out of their order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Virginia objects.

Mr. WHYTE. Will the Senator allow me to say one word?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. By unanimous consent the Senator from Maryland may proceed with his remarks.

Mr. WALLACE. I wish to make a report from a committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania.

ALLEGED ELECTION FRAUDS.

Mr. WALLACE. From the Select Committee to inquire into Alleged Frauds in the late Elections, I submit a report on supervisors and deputy marshals.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be printed.

Mr. BLAIR. In behalf of the minority of the same committee, I wish to say that I have just this moment had placed in my hands proof-sheets of the report of the majority. I have not as yet been able to examine it any further than to see that it will be necessary for the minority to present their views, and I request that a suitable opportunity be afforded to prepare them for that purpose. The report is quite voluminous, and I ask permission of the Senate for the necessary time to prepare and present the views of the minority.

Mr. WALLACE. Certainly; that is the understanding.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the request of the Senator from New Hampshire will be granted.

Mr. BLAIR. A member of the committee desires me to inquire whether these views have been presented to the committee.

Mr. WALLACE. What I have presented is the report of the majority of the committee.

Mr. HOAR. But has the committee ever authorized that report?

Mr. WALLACE. The committee have, as a committee.

Mr. HOAR. When?

Mr. WALLACE. They had a session and directed a report to be made. The Senator was present immediately after the order, and it was then understood that the minority, if they dissented from the views of the majority, should have an opportunity to make a minority report. That was so understood.

Mr. BLAIR. All I wish to say is simply this, which is the strict fact, that there was a meeting of the committee a few days ago, the first meeting of the committee that has been called since we completed the taking of our testimony last July. When we separated it was the understanding and the form of adjournment that we were to meet at the city of Washington to consider a report, and it was my understanding that we were to meet in the course of a few weeks. From that time until within two or three weeks past the matter has not been mentioned by the chairman or any member of the committee that I am aware of. A meeting of the committee was holden a few days since, last Saturday, at which meeting the chairman informed us that he had made some progress with his report; and it was the understanding I think that the report would be in readiness by Monday or Tuesday of this week, and as I supposed would be then submitted to the committee for consideration. The chairman, perhaps understanding it differently, as of course he did, has simply prepared his report, has had it printed, and presents it now to the Senate without its ever having been considered by the committee as such at all. I have never read it through; but the first half a dozen lines satisfy me that it is a very bad report, and we of the minority shall have to reply to it, and it will require a considerable time for the consideration of it.

Mr. WALLACE. I desire to say in reply to what has been said by the Senator from New Hampshire that the course pursued is that which has been pursued in regard to all the reports of this committee. If the Senator desires me to withdraw the report and call the committee together again, I will do so; but I understood that all that was desired was that the minority should have an opportunity to see the report when it was ready in order that they might obtain leave to make a minority report.

Mr. BLAIR. I desire to say that so far as I am personally concerned, I have no such desire. I wish that my colleague could understand that nothing has transpired on my part, excepting what they have all been cognizant of in the committee itself. That is all that I wish to be understood to say. So far as concerns the consideration of the report of the majority of the committee in full committee, I have nothing to say. This has been presented in precisely the same way as a former report of the same committee was presented. All that I care for personally is that we have a suitable opportunity to examine it, and to prepare and present our views; but whatever other members of the committee desire in the matter they can state to the Senate.

Mr. TELLER. I desire to correct the chairman of this committee, when he says that all reports of the committee have been submitted in this way. The first report of the committee, which I had the honor to make, I submitted to the full committee, and the minority took leave then to file a minority report, which has not been done in this case. I do not myself care, as a member of the committee, particularly about seeing the report. Judging from the course pursued by the committee, judging from the character of the testimony taken, and the sentiments entertained by the majority of the committee, I suppose we know pretty nearly what the committee have reported upon those subjects. When I look over it, if I do not like it, I am willing to join with the minority and so dissent from it.

Mr. HOAR. I am not aware of any authority which has been given by the committee to the chairman to present this report as the report of the committee. I believe it is true, as the Senator says, that there have been previous reports of this committee, since it changed its political character, submitted in the same way; and that seems to be a most objectionable proceeding; one that ought not to be encouraged, and ought not to pass without a protest. I do not understand that we assemble here in the Senate or on committees as if we were two hostile camps, the democrats inhabiting one and the republicans inhabiting the other, the only function of each being to draw up their troops in battle array and fire shots at each other. I understand that we are here for mutual consultation and discussion. Who knows that on a fuller consideration of this voluminous evidence the honorable chairman may not altogether change his views and modify the statements of this report, which we have not seen, in conformity with suggestions which should be made to him by his associates who are in the political minority on the committee? Is my honorable friend so wedded to an opinion that he forms on a matter of conflicting and voluminous evidence that it is not barely possible he might change his mind if he had consulted with his associates on the committee?

I wish to say that unless in my absence the committee took some action which binds me in this matter—I got to the meeting of the committee late, having another engagement that morning. If any such action was taken, I certainly shall acquiesce; but I think it is proper to call attention to the very objectionable character of this proceeding. As the report has been made, I will not now insist on its withdrawal and will let it pass; but I do not think I ought to let it pass without saying that the previous precedent, to which the chairman alludes, was, in my opinion, an extremely objectionable one.

Mr. WALLACE. I desire to say that so far from having taken any advantage of any member of the committee on this subject, the whole committee were called together, they were consulted on the subject, and it was distinctly understood that the report was to be prepared and a majority of the committee directed it to be reported—a majority of the whole committee.

Mr. HOAR. Without being submitted to the committee?

Mr. WALLACE. It was so understood at the meeting when the full committee was present, and I understood that the minority should have the opportunity to see the report before it was submitted and that then they might have the opportunity to make their minority report. That opportunity has been granted. There was no objection on the part of the majority to any such proceeding on their part, and I have pursued the exact policy adopted in the past on that subject.

Mr. HOAR. Why, sir——

Mr. WALLACE. The Senator may make technical objections.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator from Pennsylvania will permit me to say in regard to what he has stated that we do not impute to the honorable Senator either the taking advantage of or the attempting to take advantage of anybody. Let him be sure that that is the furthest from my thought; and if he had such an understanding—and he assures us he did so understand it—that settles the matter, no further objection ought to be made, and no comment such as I am making ought to have been made. I do not understand that the Senator from Colorado and the Senator from New Hampshire understood it so.

But what I wish to say is this, not imputing any purpose to take advantage to the honorable Senator, but being quite sure of his entire courtesy to his associates, that I think on reflection he will agree with me that the precedent which was set in the past by this committee since he became chairman of it is a vicious precedent, and that is the precedent of allowing the members of one party on a committee to get together and send in their views without consultation with and without the consent of the members of the other party, leaving to them only to give their views as a minority report. Certainly we have not yet reached the pass that it is not possible for members of two different parties to consult together in regard to the public good; certainly we have not reached the pass when such consultation may not be expected to be productive of modification of views and of some good; and for that reason I wish to say that I think this is a vicious precedent. I do not understand the Senator from New Hampshire or the Senator from Colorado to agree that there has been such an understanding as has been stated; but if the Senator from Pennsylvania so understood it (and I am quite sure that he did when he says so) let it pass. That is all.

Mr. WALLACE. Mr. President, there can be no question about it. The committee was called for the purpose. I must correct the Senator from New Hampshire. Early in the session, in December, this committee was about to be made extinct; but it was requested to be continued in order that reports might be made, and the Senator from New Hampshire arose in his place and asked the question whether it was to be continued. In January I called his attention to the question of reports, and asked him if he could be ready to make reports; and he said, "Give us until the 15th of February." I did not call the committee together, in accordance with this request, until some time about the 15th of February. Then the committee was called together to consider his report.

Mr. BLAIR. Does the Senator mean that there has been any meeting except that of last Saturday?

Mr. WALLACE. Certainly not. The committee was then called together and the subject-matter of the report was considered. It was then understood, informally perhaps, that the report should be prepared by myself and submitted, and that the minority should have an opportunity to examine it and make their report in answer.

Mr. BLAIR. I wish to tell all that I know about this matter. We closed the taking of the testimony about the middle of last July. The investigation following the last session took place with the distinct understanding that it was to be completed in order that reports might be made and published as of the last session. The majority of the committee did not see fit to call us together in New York to complete the taking of testimony until after the time when I understood it was to have been completed and reports to have been made. I find no fault with them, for the reason that I suppose it was difficult perhaps to accomplish the end. But we did close the testimony in the month of July, when the committee was adjourned by order of the chairman to the city of Washington to consider the reports. I certainly supposed that we should be called together in season to complete the reports by the 1st of August, at all events prior to the opening of the presidential campaign; but nothing of the kind was done; the matter was prolonged and protracted, and I never heard of it again until as the Senator says in the month of January, and it was some time toward the close of the month of January, when he came to me in my seat and spoke of it. I think what he states in regard to his having called the matter up early in the session for the purpose of keeping the committee alive may be true. I recollect a confused transaction in the Senate, which I did not understand at the time very well, in relation to it. But that may pass on what the Senator says, that the committee was to be kept alive for the purpose of making reports at some time.

But toward the close of the month of January the Senator from Pennsylvania came to me, as I was saying, in my seat, and said he was going to make a report. I recollect a little banter, as though I supposed the matter was abandoned and had disappeared. He said he was certainly going to make a report, and he thought he would get his report ready by the 15th of February. I told him I had not seen the testimony in print. I had been ill until about the 1st of January, so that I was barely able to get on with my ordinary duties, if present in the Senate at all. I told him that the matter had passed from my mind largely, and that I doubted whether I could be ready with any views of my own by that time. He said he thought he would be ready with his report, and would call a meeting at that time. A meeting was not called at that time, but was called for last Saturday. Last Saturday the committee met as a whole. Even then the chairman had no report in readiness for submission to the committee, but said he thought he would be ready by the first of this week, and I recollect the discussion. I said to him that I had been informed by some of the older members of the Senate in regard to its previous practice about presenting reports here in the Senate without the minority having had any opportunity whatever of considering them at all, or the committee having had an opportunity of considering them as a committee; that I had been told by older Senators that it was an act that they had never known before. I said this to the honorable Senator in reference to the previous practice of the Senate and of all other committees, as I was told. One honorable Senator had said to me that it was usual to have the report of the majority, where a minority report was anticipated, printed and placed in the hands of the minority for their consideration before action by the committee upon the subject.

Now, in regard to his understanding that he was to present this report without calling another meeting of the committee, and without its being considered by the committee, I cannot say but that of course his word is conclusive upon that matter that he did so understand it, and I have not the slightest doubt that he presented the report this morning under the impression that he was doing exactly what it was understood at the meeting he should do. But I did not so understand it. I supposed we probably should have a view of the report and another meeting of the committee, and it seems that my colleagues of the minority understood it the same way; but, as I said before, as the previous reports by the same chairman have been presented without consideration by the committee, or by the minority, I am perfectly willing that the matter should go as it is. Of course, however, under the circumstances we shall need some considerable time to examine the report in order to prepare and present the views of the minority. That is all I wish to say in regard to it.

Mr. WITHERS. Mr. President, I ask what is the question before the Senate?

ADDITIONAL DISTRICT POLICE.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. With the permission of the Senate, the Chair will lay before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives on the bill (S. No. 2184) to authorize the commissioners of the District of Columbia to appoint additional policemen for temporary service in the District, and for other purposes.

The amendments were read, being in lines 5 and 6, to strike out the words "twenty days from the 20th of February, 1881," and insert "ten days from the passage of this act," and at the end of line 10 to insert:

Provided, The expense of said police shall be paid one-half out of the revenues of the District and the other half out of the revenues of the United States: And provided further, That twenty of said police shall be detailed and placed under the control of the Architect of the Capitol, Sergeant-at-Arms of the House, and Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate.

Mr. HARRIS. I have examined the amendments of the House to the bill just read, and I move that the Senate concur in them. I may say that I have consulted with Major Morgan, one of the commissioners, and, while the amendments are not satisfactory, he thinks it is best to concur with them. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments.

Mr. HOAR. Let us finish the matter that is up. I have no objection——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The matter that was up has been finished.

Mr. HOAR. I do not so understand it.

Mr. TELLER. I thought not.

Mr. GARLAND. What is the question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is no question before the Senate except what is now pending. The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALLACE] made a report. The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR] asked certain leave, and that was granted just as asked. No other motion has been made, and the discussion has been proceeding, but the Chair does not feel at liberty to announce that any question is pending in regard to it.

Mr. HOAR. I rise to a question of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts will state his question of order.

Mr. HOAR. I understand that the Senator from Pennsylvania presenting a report the question was raised as to his authority to present that report, which I raised myself.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It was not raised by motion or anything of that kind, only by a conference between members of the committee, which the Chair indulged them in hearing.

Mr. HOAR. It did not require a motion as I understand it; but I suppose the Senate will make no objection to my friend from Colorado proceeding to say what he has to say about it.

Mr. WALLACE. I have no objection to anything whatever. I only desire to say that I made the report as the action of the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. When the business laid before the Senate by the Chair is disposed of, the Senator from Colorado will be heard.

Mr. HARRIS. I have no objection to the Senator from Colorado proceeding, but I ask him to yield long enough to allow these amendments of the House to be concurred in.

Mr. TELLER. Certainly, I have no objection to that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to concurrence in the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. No. 2184) to authorize the commissioners of the District of Columbia to appoint additional policemen for temporary service in the District, and for other purposes? The Chair hears none, and the amendments are concurred in.

FORTIFICATION APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WITHERS. Now I rise to ask what is before the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will lay before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives non-concurring in certain amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 6529) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense and for the armament thereof, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, and for other purposes.

On motion of Mr. ALLISON, it was

Resolved, That the Senate insist upon its amendments to the said bill disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and ask a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

By unanimous consent, it was Ordered, That the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the Presiding Officer.

The PRESIDING OFFICER appointed Mr. ALLISON, Mr. BECK, and Mr. BOOTH as the conferees.

ALLEGED ELECTION FRAUDS.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I only want to say a word or two. So far as I am concerned, I understood that the committee was to be brought together for the purpose of agreeing or disagreeing on a report. I supposed, however, that it would be a mere matter of formality, coming together, because I supposed the majority would agree upon a report in accordance with what was the understanding heretofore, as the majority had a theory with reference to the Federal election laws. I find that the report concludes with a recommendation that "all United States laws standing upon the statute-book are useless in preserving peace and good order," and asks for their repeal. I supposed we should come together simply for the purpose of looking over the report, and some of us taking the privilege of making a minority report if we dissented. From what I have seen of the report—it only came into my hands a few moments ago—we shall want of course to make a minority report.

I think there has been some irregularity in reference to this committee since the present chairman has presided over it, which perhaps it is not well to have considered a precedent in this body. I recollect that affidavits were brought here, and published and sent out to the country as worthy of credence and belief, that afterward were found out to be forgeries, the whole of them, and they were not submitted to the committee, they never came to the Senate with the permission of the committee; or if they did, it was by the majority, and made without the minority being present. I think that is a bad practice, and I think, as suggested by the Senator from New Hampshire, the system is a bad one. I think the chairman probably understood, from the general free-and-easy conversation we had about it, just what he has stated, and I am not disposed to make any technical objection, but to let it go.

Mr. WALLACE. One moment, Mr. President. So far as the affidavits to which the Senator refers were concerned, they came into the custody of the committee when the committee changed hands at the beginning of the present Congress, and by an order of the Senate, not of the committee, all papers laid before the committee were directed to be printed for the use of the committee. They were not sent broadcast through the country; they were printed for the use of the committee in order that the committee might see what they contained. The statement of the Senator that many of these papers were found not to be correct is certainly true, and the reports that dealt with them followed the suggestion of the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. BLAIR. Allow me to ask a question. That being the case, I would ask the chairman why these same affidavits came to be incorporated in the published volumes of testimony which have been so recently issued? If his statement is correct, as of course it is, should not those affidavits be stricken from the permanent volume?

Mr. WALLACE. No orders have been given by myself relating to the printing of those documents.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator from Pennsylvania will pardon me——

Mr. TELLER. I believe I have the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Colorado is entitled to the floor. He yielded to the Senator from Pennsylvania, who has resumed his seat.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to say to the Senator from Pennsylvania, with the permission of the Senator from Colorado——

Mr. TELLER. Proceed.

Mr. HOAR. That these papers were never laid before the committee; they were sent in a bundle to one member of the committee and transferred to another, but they never were ordered to be printed by the committee. It is true the Senate gave authority to the committee to have printed papers laid before the committee. These papers never were laid before the committee; the committee never ordered them printed; but they were printed and put on our tables and made the subject of debate here, although in fact they were gross and base forgeries.

Mr. WALLACE. But this fact remains, that they came into the custody of myself, as chairman of the committee, having been found in the custody of the chairman preceding me.

Mr. HOAR. They never were laid before the committee.

Mr. WALLACE. They were in the custody of the committee and came to me as such.

Mr. President, this is all beside the real question here. The only question is whether this report is to be printed now or not, and whether the minority is to file a minority report.

Mr. TELLER. If the affidavits, the publication of which is complained of, ever came to any member of the committee, they were never seen by any member of the minority of the committee that I am aware of, and it is the custom, as I understand, in all Senate committees for papers to be laid before the committee and the committee to sift out and determine what is to be published. We cannot expect to publish everything that comes from irresponsible parties to a committee; and for the purpose of preventing that, it is a custom that has grown up here, that has the force and sanction almost of a law, that the committee must say what shall go on the files of the committee; but that never was done in this case. These affidavits came here to the Senate; they were printed; they went out with the sanction of the committee and the sanction of the Senate, and we indorsed the truth of these false statements as they went out all over the country, and they were used everywhere during the last campaign. It was no answer to say, when a man stuck one of those in your face, that it was false. The allegation at once was, "Here, the Senate ordered them printed; you knew what they were when you ordered them printed." That is what I complain of; and I complain of some other irregularities of that kind. I only said I did not want that these things should grow into a precedent, so that somebody might come next year——

Mr. WALLACE. Mr. President——

Mr. BUTLER. May I inquire, Mr. President, what the business is before the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks there is nothing pending before the Senate.

Mr. BUTLER. Then I ask for the regular order.

Mr. WALLACE. I must dissent from the statement of the Senator from Colorado in regard to any irregularities. I have pursued the order of the Senate throughout.

Mr. WINDOM. The regular order is the Calendar, is it not?

Several SENATORS. Regular order!

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The regular order is called for.

Mr. WINDOM. I believe that is the Calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is the Calendar, which will be laid before the Senate.

Mr. BLAIR. It seems to me that this is a more important matter than Senators who know nothing about it appear to imagine.

Several SENATORS. Regular order!

Mr. BLAIR. I am about to make a motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. After the regular order is laid before the Senate, the Chair will entertain a motion. Nothing is before the Senate now, but the regular order will be laid before the Senate.

Mr. BLAIR. I insist that this is the regular order. I raise that point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state his point of order.

Mr. BLAIR. It is that the pending business before the Senate is in regard to the report which is being discussed, as to the right of the Senator from Pennsylvania to make this report at the present time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. BLAIR. The Chair will hear it, I suppose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair supposed the Senator was through with his statement of the point of order.

Mr. BLAIR. Not at all.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will hear the Senator, certainly.

Mr. WITHERS. Is the point of order debatable?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is being stated. The Chair will decide it when it is stated.

Mr. BLAIR. The Senator from Massachusetts raised the subject-matter of discussion in connection with the presentation of this report. Other matter was interjected, but that remains really before the Senate, and final action upon the presentation of this report has not as yet been taken.

Now, it has come out in the discussion that the Senator from Pennsylvania asked for leave to present his report and have it printed. Along with the formal report is the accompanying evidence, and he asks for leave that that be printed also, for it is part of his report. Now, I make this motion: to strike from that accompanying evidence, the volume of which I have seen, these forged papers and matter which have been alluded to in the discussion—to strike from the record the forged affidavits which never were before the Senate, never properly before the committee, and which should not be included in the report of the committee at all.

Mr. McDONALD. That is no point of order.

Mr. BLAIR. That is the motion which I wish to make.

Mr. McDONALD. That raises no point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is the Senator from New Hampshire through with stating his point of order?

Mr. BLAIR. Yes; and I have also stated the motion I wish to make.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator cannot present two things at once.

Mr. BLAIR. But I state the motion I wish to make.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania submitted a report, which was received and ordered to be printed. The Senator from New Hampshire asked to have the minority views printed when received, to be submitted at a future time. That leave was granted. No other motion has been made pending that matter; there has been simply a discussion between members of the committee in regard to what had occurred in the committee, and no formal motion of any kind has been made. The matter is disposed of. The motion to strike anything from that report cannot be entertained unless the proceedings are reconsidered and brought back before the Senate.

Mr. BLAIR. Then I make the motion to reconsider.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The regular order is called for.

Mr. MORRILL. But surely unanimous consent will be given for striking out from that report matter that is utterly wrong.

Mr. WALLACE. Mr. President, there is no part of that testimony considered in any way in this report. There is no such matter to accompany it.

Mr. BLAIR. It is printed in the volume that accompanies the report.

Mr. WALLACE. That matter can be settled without any action of the Senate if the committee meets, or between the Senator and myself.

Mr. BLAIR. With that understanding, it is all right.

Mr. WINDOM. I insist on the regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has stated repeatedly that the regular order was before the Senate, but Senators have been making suggestions which he recognized. The Chair always hears these suggestions.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask that the regular order be proceeded with if it is before the Senate.

The bill (H. R. No. 4412) to regulate practice in suits brought to recover damages for infringement of patent was announced as the first bill in order on the Calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state to the Senator from New Hampshire in regard to the motion he sought to make that the Chair cannot entertain that motion unless these proceedings are reconsidered. As this report, as stated by the Senator from Pennsylvania, does not contain the evidence at all, a motion to strike from the printed evidence certain portions would not now be in order in regard to this report. It will require a separate motion entirely independent of this report, as that evidence is not embodied in the report, as the Chair understands the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. BLAIR. I understand that the motion is that the report and accompanying evidence be printed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair did not hear any motion in regard to the evidence.

Mr. BLAIR. It certainly is so.

Mr. WITHERS. I hope we shall proceed with the regular order.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I rise to a privileged motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. HOAR. I move to reconsider the vote by which the Senate accepted the report and ordered it to be printed, or whatever the motion was on that subject.

Mr. WITHERS. Did the Senator vote in the affirmative?

Mr. HOAR. I say to the Senator from Pennsylvania that I will withdraw that motion when this matter which he and the Senator from New Hampshire were about to arrange is arranged.

Mr. WALLACE. Mr. President, I beg to say——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts moves to reconsider the action of the Senate by which the report of the Senator from Pennsylvania was received and ordered to be printed.

Mr. HARRIS. I demand the regular order.

Mr. WITHERS. I move to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

Several SENATORS. Regular order!

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Virginia moves to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

Mr. HOAR. I rise to a question of order again; and it is that the motion of the Senator from Virginia is out of order. I have a right at any time within two days to make a motion to reconsider.

Mr. WITHERS. To enter a motion to reconsider.

Mr. HOAR. To enter a motion to reconsider, and the motion to reconsider can only be laid upon the table when it comes up for consideration; and that can only be done by laying aside the regular order, which has not been done.

Mr. CONKLING. More than that, Mr. President, I object to the consideration of the motion to reconsider to-day, and it must go over one day under the rule.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It goes over under the rule.

Mr. WALLACE. But pending that I trust Senators will permit me to say that so far as the motion is concerned, there is no necessity for it. As I said, anything that is objectionable in the papers laid before the committee that were printed, or anything of them except the tables obtained from the Treasury Department, can be stricken out. We will make that order.

Mr. HOAR. It will not be necessary to detain the Senate further with that, then. That can be done by an arrangement in five minutes between me and my friends from Pennsylvania and New Hampshire, and then I will withdraw my motion.

Mr. WALLACE. Certainly.

Mr. THURMAN. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from New York to give me his attention.

Mr. HOAR. Regular order, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will be in order before the Senator from Ohio proceeds.

Mr. HOAR. Regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The regular order is before the Senate, and on it the Senator from Ohio has the floor.

Mr. THURMAN. I protest against this doctrine that a motion to reconsider goes over under the rule. You might as well say that a motion to indefinitely postpone goes over under the rule. The Senator from New York will not forget how we were beaten on the Geneva award bill by a motion to reconsider being laid on the table within ten minutes after it was made. It has been done again and again; and this is the first time in my life I have ever heard that a motion to reconsider was a motion that went over under the rule.

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. President, if I have discovered anything good that the Senator from Ohio never heard of before, it fills me full of satisfaction. The motion to lay on the table a motion to reconsider the Geneva award bill never was made, and, therefore, it never prevailed in the Senate; but I will have a little private class-meeting with my friend, if he will allow me without detaining the Senate, and compare gifts with him alone over this one of the Senate rules.

Mr. THURMAN. That will be to the advantage of both of us.

Mr. CONKLING. It will be to my advantage.

Mr. WINDOM. Regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The regular order is before the Senate and has been for some time.

Mr. WINDOM. Then I ask that the bill be put on its passage.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio has been speaking to the regular order.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. F. KING, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 6478) for the relief of Levi Price; and

A bill (H. R. No. 7160) for the relief of John H. Templeton.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills:

A bill (S. No. 76) for the relief of M. F. Clark;

A bill (S. No. 326) for the relief of Henry F. Lines;

A bill (S. No. 367) granting an increase of pension to Isabel L. Evans;

A bill (S. No. 753) to provide for the sale of the remainder of the reservation of the confederated Otoe and Missouria Tribes of Indians in the States of Nebraska and Kansas, and for other purposes;

A bill (S. No. 1181) for the relief of Dodd, Brown & Co., of Saint Louis, Missouri;

A bill (S. No. 1905) changing the name of the First National Bank of West Meriden, in the County of New Haven, and State of Connecticut; and

No. 79) directing the Secretary of War to investigate the claim of the State of Florida against the United States for expenditures made in suppressing Indian hostilities in said State between the years 1855 and 1860, and to report the result of such investigation to Congress.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 7101) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, and for other purposes; asked a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. J. D. C. ATKINS of Tennessee, Mr. HIESTER CLYMER of Pennsylvania, and Mr. J. H. BAKER of Indiana, managers at the conference on its part.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on the 23d instant approved and signed the following acts:

An act (S. No. 1004) for the relief of the sureties of Henry L. Norvell;

An act (S. No. 1292) to provide for the removal of the terms of the United States circuit and district courts now held at Exeter for and within the district of New Hampshire, to the city of Concord;

An act (S. No. 1349) for enlarging the City Hall for the accommodation of the courts and records of the District of Columbia; and

An act (S. No. 1728) granting a pension to Mrs. Lelia E. McCauley.

SUITS FOR PATENT INFRINGEMENTS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill (H. R. No. 4412) to regulate practice in suits brought to recover damages for infringement of patent is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, and certain amendments of the Committee on Patents have been agreed to. There are other amendments which will be stated for the action of the Senate.

The CHIEF CLERK. The next amendment of the Committee on Patents is to strike out in lines 14 and 15 the words "the court shall adjudge him to pay all his own costs," and insert "he shall recover no costs against the defendant," so as to read:

If the plaintiff shall not recover the sum of $20 or over, he shall recover no costs against the defendant unless it shall also appear that the defendant at the time of such purchase or practical application had knowledge or actual notice of the existence of such patent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment which has just been read.

Mr. CONKLING. I had the floor on this bill when it was last up. I have not claimed it; I do not rise to claim it now for the purpose of occupying any length of time. I venture, however, to state as I understand it the effect of this amendment, subject to correction by any Senator who better understands it. And in order to illustrate my meaning I will take the case of the telephone.

Here is a protracted and expensive contest in the courts over one of the features, and one of the leading features of the telephone. Somebody is the defendant in that suit, and he is unquestionably an individual who uses a certain telephone made up of a certain combination. The effect of this section is that when the plaintiff in that case, if he ever does, establishes in the court of dernier ressort, after expending thousands in litigation, his right to the invention which he claims, he gets no costs if, as in the case I am talking about, the damages are nominal, I believe in one of the chief cases they are only $1. Although the party recovering has been encountered all the way through by a combination on the other side litigating in the name of an individual, using one man as the nomme de guerre in which they fought, and although he has expended thousands in coping with this combination, when he finishes he recovers no costs whatever. Mr. President, is that right?

Mr. HOAR. I have no doubt the Senator from New York correctly understands the whole of this bill; but it follows from that that I do not precisely understand his argument, which I should be glad to do, for I have no doubt I shall receive good light on the bill from it. I desire to ask him if he has considered the amendment proposed by the committee in the nineteenth and twentieth lines?

Mr. CONKLING. I have not the bill before me, and I have considered nothing except what the reading of the Clerk conveyed to my ear, and that reading teaches me that we propose by this amendment to strike out a provision which makes a five-dollar recovery the boundary and imposes the costs on the plaintiff, and in lieu of it to insert a provision that the plaintiff shall recover no costs whatever in any case unless he recovers more than $20 damages. Am I wrong about that?

Mr. HOAR. In regard to the words "in any case," if the Senator will look at the nineteenth and twentieth lines, part of the same amendment, they are left in the bill.

Mr. CONKLING. "Or unless the defendant puts in issue the plaintiff's right to recover anything in action." That is a separate amendment. Am I right in that?

Mr. HOAR. It is in a parliamentary sense, but the two were intended by the committee to go together.

Mr. CONKLING. But we are not to vote on that now in this vote?

Mr. HOAR. No.

Mr. CONKLING. It is quite true I had not noticed this subsequent amendment upon which a separate remark no doubt should be made; but the amendment on which we are about to vote is independent of this, and it is as I have endeavored to state it, and it seems to me it is going much too far. I have no objection to any modification of existing statutes which is necessary to cover such a case as my friend from Minnesota [Mr. WINDOM] I judge is at this moment lurking privily in regard thereto; he has in his face an impression which I remember once before when he was speaking about a supposed pump that may be driven somewhere in the ground in his State and I notice now the same warlike aspect and "wrinkled front of war" which my honorable friend had when he took out that pump and set it going in the presence of the Senate. I am with him on the pump. I am ready to vote for anything which will do with that pump and those connected with it whatever he thinks should be done. But I do not assent to the idea that railway companies, telephone companies, all manner of companies if they are cunning enough to litigate in the name of an individual who may be sued—which they will all be cunning enough to do—are to be permitted to drag every inventor up on the outside and down on the inside of all the courts of the country and when they get through be visited with no costs whatever, allowing them to litigate with perfect impunity as to costs. Looking to some grievous individual case we make a statute designed to carve out an equity for individuals, and so general that its application spreads all over to everybody. To that I object.

Now a word about the amendment to which the Senator from Massachusetts has called my attention. Reading the two amendments now it is proposed to say:

He shall recover no costs against the defendant unless it shall also appear that the defendant at the time of such purchase or practical application had knowledge or actual notice "of the existence of such patent," or unless the defendant puts in issue the plaintiff's right to recover anything in the action.

I should like to begin by inquiring of some patent lawyer what in any supposed case is to be put in issue if the defendant does not deny that the plaintiff has a right to recover?

Mr. WINDOM. The amount of damages.

Mr. CONKLING. Nothing but damages is to be litigated, whether the plaintiff has a right to recover more or less, and going to issue on that question alone, it is proposed to say that unless he recovers $20 he shall not recover any costs. Well, Mr. President, I do not think that is as bad as the bill would be without it; but I do not think it is by any means as good as it ought to be.

Mr. BLAIR. That makes it worse.

Mr. CONKLING. My honorable friend from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR] at whose feet I always sit on a question of law, and especially a question of patent law, says to me that he thinks it is worse, and I shall in a moment yield the floor to him in the hope that he will tell us why it is worse. I think it is bad enough. I think when the Constitution holds out, and as time has shown fruitfully, to all the inventive genius of the country a pledge that an invention being achieved it shall belong to the author of it, that he shall have the right to use it and to grant to others that right, it would be enormous—I use that word not in an offensive but in the legal sense—to say by a statute that you will fritter away the remedy until it is fatal to the right. I know the distinction, of course, legally between striking at a right and striking at the remedy by which it is to be enforced. There are broad distinctions, but whenever you carry a blow at the remedy so far that it is no longer useful and efficient, you have prostrated the right, and this section looks very much in that direction.

I shall make only one other remark and then leave the matter; and I ask the attention of Senators who are supposed, and no doubt truly, to have special and full knowledge on this subject. Here is a provision:

Unless it shall also appear that the defendant at the time of such purchase or practical application had knowledge or actual notice of the existence of such patent.

I was in act to comment on that the other day when the morning hour lapsed. I will not resume that comment at this moment; but I commend to Senators this view of those words. I venture to commend it to the honorable Senator from Illinois, [Mr. DAVIS,] who I see is giving most pointed attention to this bill:

Unless it shall also appear that the defendant at the time of such purchase or practical application had knowledge or actual notice of the existence of such patent.

I humbly petition the honorable Senator from Illinois to tell me what that means? What is "knowledge or actual notice" of a patent? In the first place the recording patent acts as I understand impute to everybody a certain kind not only of knowledge but of notice. What kind of notice is it? I understand there are three kinds of notice which satisfy the law.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois, (in his seat.) I suppose this means personal notice.

Mr. CONKLING. The Senator from Illinois is giving me some information here which all the rest of the Senate is without. All I can do just now is to be sorry for the other Senators, but they will hear it in due time. First, however, I want to make a suggestion as well to the honorable Senator from Illinois as to other Senators.

Notice is of three kinds, and either of the three is effectual. There is express notice; we all know what that means; next, constructive notice, and third, presumptive notice. Presumptive notice commonly cuts very little figure in the enumeration of things of this sort. If I understand what it is, it may play a pretty large part in the litigations got up under this bill if it becomes a law. "Unless he has actual notice." Is a publication in a newspaper where the man lives, is the publication of a loud-sounding, staring advertisement on the first side of a newspaper actual notice? Certainly it is notice, not constructive notice, because that I believe has a technical meaning; but it is presumptive notice. It is not express notice within the definition of the cases, but is it "actual notice?"

Mr. SAULSBURY. Will the Senator from New York allow me to make a suggestion?

Mr. CONKLING. Certainly.

Mr. SAULSBURY. The meaning there is that the notice must have been brought home to the party himself.

Mr. CONKLING. How does the Senator arrive at that?

Mr. SAULSBURY. "Actual notice" I understand to be notice which has been carried home to the party to whom notice has been given, not the publication in a newspaper which he may or may not have seen, but the notice must be brought home to him.

Mr. CONKLING. May I ask the Senator a question? I suppose the Senator often frequents the court-house where he lives. Suppose a notice were specially put up on the door of the court-house where the Senator enters and re-enters, would that be actual notice to him?

Mr. SAULSBURY. In my opinion the provision of the law requiring actual notice to be proved, it would not be sufficient to prove that notice had been published by putting it up against the court-house unless the statute provided that that should be actual notice. In order to establish "actual notice" you must carry the fact of notice home to the party. That is my understanding of "actual notice."

Mr. CONKLING. Applying that to this case, then I understand the Senator from Delaware would read the statute, if it becomes one, in this way: If in the city of Wilmington a patentee should have in every newspaper published in that city every day a conspicuous notice of his patent; if he should have somewhere in Wilmington a conspicuous sign upon his manufactory, and if he should have placarded all over it that he was the original patentee of that invention,—that under this bill would charge nobody unless he could call a witness to prove that he saw the defendant stand there and read all over this placard. Is that what the Senator understands it to mean?

Mr. SAULSBURY. Whatever notice may be given by the patentee, however conspicuous may be his sign, however wide his advertisement of his patent, the statute requires, in order to sustain a claim for damages for an infringement, that the party should have had "actual notice;" and it would be incumbent upon the plaintiff to show that the notice had been carried home to the party against whom he brought suit.

Mr. CONKLING. What does the Senator mean by "carried home?"

Mr. SAULSBURY. I mean he must establish the fact to the satisfaction of the jury that the individual sued had read the advertisement, had seen the sign, or had such other knowledge of the fact that he was brought within the term "actual notice." That is what I mean.

Mr. CONKLING. Well, Mr. President——

Mr. McMILLAN. Will the Senator from New York allow me to say that it seems to me this term "actual notice" signifies just what the Senator has termed "express notice," and that it would be a question of fact for the jury in every instance to determine whether the defendant had express notice of the patent—personal notice.

Mr. CONKLING. Will the Senator tell me why it is "actual" rather than "express," "express" being a well-defined term, if that is what it means?

Mr. McMILLAN. I think the term "actual" would be quite as accurate in its use as the term "express."

Mr. CONKLING. Now I venture to ask the attention of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. McMILLAN] to this suggestion: The Senator is aware of a good many instances in which without a statute notice is necessary, knowledge is necessary. The Senator in his professional and judicial experience is also familiar with the many cases in England and in this country in which the courts have said that whatever would put a prudent man upon inquiry was enough to impute notice or knowledge to him, to charge him with notice and knowledge. Under these words, is that to be the law, or as the Senator from Delaware thinks is it to be necessary to call a witness who can prove that the man stopped in the street or wherever it might be, and read all over the notice in question? What would become of the Senator's idea of "express notice" in that case?

Mr. McMILLAN. I think the notice there would not be the notice implied by the word "actual." That would be presumptive notice; the notice described by the Senator from New York.

Mr. CONKLING. So that the honorable Senator thinks under this statute, although it should appear that the infringer of a patent knew enough about it to set any human being upon inquiry, although it should be perfectly clear to a jury that he never went into it at all without having at least his suspicions aroused, yet unless it could be proved that he had express notice formally, he would not be liable.

Mr. McMILLAN. I think that would require proof of the "actual notice" mentioned here. It would be a question of fact for the jury to determine whether he had "actual notice" or not.

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. President, that is enough to insure my vote against this provision. I would rather vote for a provision that would protect an open pirate, a man who boldly rises and says "I defy this patent; come on; I will lock horns with you and see what the result will be," than to vote for a provision which will protect the skulker, the indirect cowardly infringer who will put forward some individual, some irresponsible man as the man who is the user and fortify him and contribute to his case and use him as a catspaw all the way through the contest, or the other coward who, knowing all about it but in respect of whom you cannot prove formal technical notice, (if that is what "actual notice" means,) will crawl out on that and say "where is the proof of the scienter; where is the witness who can prove that I ever had read aloud to me this notice or that I ever stopped myself and read it all over." I will not vote for a provision to protect such people, as distinguished from the bolder and as I think less blamable people who go boldly forward and contest the priority or the monopoly of right.

Mr. McMILLAN. Will the Senator from New York permit me to call his attention to the class of people who are to have this knowledge?

Mr. CONKLING. Oh, yes.

Mr. McMILLAN. It is only the defendant in an action who has purchased the article "in good faith for his own personal use from the manufacturer thereof, or from a person or firm engaged in the open sale or practical application thereof, and applied the same for and to his own use and not for sale."

Mr. CONKLING. Such men are those I am speaking of.

Mr. McMILLAN. Those are the persons who are to have this character of knowledge.

Mr. CONKLING. Exactly.

Mr. McMILLAN. That description of persons excludes entirely the character of persons to whom the Senator from New York has referred.

Mr. CONKLING. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. McMILLAN. And therefore they would not be included in this bill, and would not be protected by it.

Mr. CONKLING. This character of persons is, I will not say cunningly but wisely, chosen for all such cases as I have been speaking of. The very plea here is that a man wants to break down a patent; suppose it is a patent that is used for a coffee-mill. He takes pains to introduce that coffee-mill into half a dozen houses round about and have somebody give out that it is openly used. My honorable friend knows what will in a short time follow from that, in its effect upon the patentee. A suit is brought against one of the users of this utensil. Is not that the case described in this bill?

Mr. McMILLAN. Not unless the defendant puts in issue the plaintiff's right to recover.

Mr. CONKLING. Of course, that is what we are talking about.

Mr. McMILLAN. To recover anything.

Mr. CONKLING. Precisely; that is what we are talking about.

Mr. McMILLAN. Then that puts in issue the right of the patentee; not alone the question of damages, but his right of action entirely.

Mr. CONKLING. Certainly.

Mr. McMILLAN. And certainly the patentee cannot suffer in such a case as that if he has an honest patent, because if he has a right to recover anything the defendant would not be entitled to avail himself of this provision for notice because that is an amendment embodied in the bill by the Senate Committee on Patents. The Senator will observe, "unless it shall also appear that the defendant at the time of such purchase or practical application had knowledge or actual notice of the existence of such patent, or unless the defendant puts in issue the plaintiff's right to recover anything in the action."

Mr. CONKLING. Does the Senator understand now that both things must occur?

Mr. McMILLAN. They are in the alternative.

Mr. CONKLING. I know the expression is in the alternative, and it is to that I direct attention. Does the Senator now understand that the case must be one in which it shall appear that the defendant at the time of such purchase had knowledge and also one——

Mr. McMILLAN. No, sir.

Mr. CONKLING. Very well.

Mr. McMILLAN. My answer to the argument of the Senator from New York is that it does not include both, though as to this class of persons, honest purchasers, innocent purchasers of an article for their own use who do not deny the right of the patentee to recover by reason of his ownership of the patent or by reason of his want of ownership, they must have this actual express notice or must have knowledge of the patent. It seems to me that this guards against all the evils that the Senator from New York has alluded to, and it protects only an honest purchaser of a patented article who has not actual notice of the patent, and who does not assume to deny the patentee's right to recover by virtue of that ownership of the patent. If he puts that question in issue, then the provision for notice does not apply.

Mr. CONKLING. I misunderstood the Senator a moment ago. He does understand then from this language that if it appears either that the right to recover is not contested or that the notice did not exist, that determines the result of the action.

Mr. McMILLAN. No, sir. The only question here is as to the recovery of costs against the defendant.

Mr. CONKLING. I understand that.

Mr. McMILLAN. Now, if a party has purchased a patented article in the manner described in this act, the plaintiff cannot recover costs in an action against him unless it shall appear that the defendant had this character of notice or unless the defendant has put in issue the right to recover.

Mr. WINDOM. Or unless the plaintiff recovers more than twenty dollars.

Mr. McMILLAN. Yes. In either of those cases the plaintiff has the right to his costs. If the defendant has the notice and does not put in issue the right of the patentee, and is a purchaser of this character, the plaintiff cannot recover costs; but if he has the notice and is a purchaser of this character and puts in issue the right of the plaintiff to recover, then costs may be recovered.

Mr. CONKLING. And if he does not dispute the patent, if he is entirely satisfied that the patent is honest, he may continue to raid upon it till doomsday, provided he does not put it in issue, unless it can be shown that he had actual technical notice.

Mr. McMILLAN. No, sir; unless he has purchased the article "in good faith for his own personal use from the manufacturer thereof or from a person or firm engaged in the open sale or practical application thereof, and applied the same for and to his own use and not for sale."

Mr. CONKLING. That restriction, in my estimation, does not amount to anything in the case I am putting, because it must always be so in the case I am putting.

Mr. McMILLAN. No.

Mr. CONKLING. It must always be so in such a case. I understand the Senator to mean that where a patent is established, when nobody challenges or dares to challenge it, all people may go on and buy the article, and whoever chooses to raid upon it may go on perpetually and sell articles manufactured under that patent; and all those people who buy in the terms of the bill, provided they do not deny the patent, and provided they are not able to show actual notice served upon them, may raid upon it till doomsday with impunity, so far as costs are concerned.

Mr. McMILLAN. They cannot raid upon it at all. That is the answer to the Senator's argument. A purchase or a series of purchases which would indicate a raid, as the Senator terms it, upon the patent——

Mr. CONKLING. Does the Senator mean a series of purchases by one and the same person?

Mr. McMILLAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. CONKLING. Of course that would; but the Senator does not understand me. I beg him to pardon me a moment. Here a man sets up a manufactory of articles, by which he does infringe the patent of somebody else. As the Senator has explained this provision, he may go on till doomsday and sell to all the people he can get to buy, and when those people are sued, unless it can be shown that they had technical notice the original patentee can never recover costs against them unless they are foolish enough to deny the patent.

Mr. McMILLAN. But the manufacturer will be liable.

Mr. CONKLING. I am not talking about manufacturers. It is as much as I can do to understand one thing at a time. I am first talking about the people provided for in the bill, and my friend confuses me when he talks about somebody not provided for. As to the purchasers provided for in the bill, what is the Senator's answer to my suggestion?

Mr. McMILLAN. That each purchaser must be one of the class described in this bill; that is, he must be a purchaser in good faith.

Mr. CONKLING. Certainly.

Mr. McMILLAN. And for his own personal use. The article must have been purchased "for his own personal use from the manufacturer thereof, or from a person or firm engaged in the open sale or practical application thereof," and not for sale by the purchaser.

Mr. BLAIR. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. McMILLAN. Certainly.

Mr. BLAIR. I should like to know how an honest, innocent purchaser can buy——

Mr. BECK. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kentucky rises to a parliamentary inquiry. Will he state it?

Mr. BECK. I am not aware who has the floor. Three gentlemen are now on the floor. I was out for a few minutes, and I do not know who is entitled to it.

Mr. CONKLING. Does the Senator count himself as one of those three?

Mr. BECK. No; I refer to three on the other side.

Mr. CONKLING. I only wanted to get the arithmetic right.

Mr. BECK. What I rise to inquire about is, is there not a five-minute rule in regard to debate upon bills on the Calendar?

Mr. CONKLING. It seems to me the Senator has occupied his five minutes now. [Laughter.]

Mr. BECK. I think I have occupied only one minute.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read the order.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That at the conclusion of the morning business for each day, unless, upon motion, the Senate shall at any time otherwise order, the Senate will proceed to the consideration of the Calendar, and continue such consideration until half past one o'clock; and bills that are not objected to shall be taken up in their order, and each Senator shall be entitled to speak once and for five minutes only upon any question; and the objection may be interposed at any stage of the proceedings; and this order shall commence immediately after the call for "concurrent and other resolutions," and shall take precedence of the unfinished business and other special orders.

Mr. CONKLING. The honorable Senator from Kentucky having spoken once under that rule, should he rise again it will be my painful duty to call him to order. The rule says he shall speak but once, and he has exhausted himself in this debate. [Laughter.] Who has the floor, Mr. President?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York has the floor.

Mr. BECK. And has occupied it for twenty minutes.

Mr. CONKLING. That is out of order. That is the second time the Senator from Kentucky has been heard under this rule. [Laughter.]

Mr. BECK. I do not propose——

Mr. CONKLING. Three times.

Mr. BECK. I do not propose to engage in a question of smartness with anybody. I want this bill to pass in some form and I do not want it talked to death by anybody.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that the general understanding has been that we were proceeding under the five-minute rule, but the Chair has not felt at liberty to enforce the rule unless it was called for by the Senate.

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. President, I never speak against the rules of the Senate, knowing it. I never have done so; I never will; and if this debate proceeds under the five-minute rule, it will proceed no further at my hands. This bill, as I understood, at the end of the morning hour was unfinished business. I supposed it came up as unfinished business now. It never occurred to me that it came up under the five-minute rule, and I beg pardon not only of the Senator from Kentucky first of all, but of the Chair and of the Senate, for having overstepped the rule of the Senate, which I mean never to do.

Mr. WINDOM. Mr. President——

Mr. PLATT. Will the Senator from Minnesota yield to me for a moment to enable me to make a suggestion as to this five-minute rule?

Mr. WINDOM. If it does not come out of my time.

Mr. PLATT. Not at all. I understand that there was really consent of the Senate that this bill should be taken up and debated at length. That was my understanding of it. One objection carries this bill over, and if anybody feels that the five-minute rule was too rigorous and does not give a full opportunity for debate while it is being considered, under the Anthony rule a single objection will carry it over. Then I suppose the Senator in charge of it would move to set aside all other orders, and we should go on not under the Anthony rule but we should have the opportunity of debating the measure.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state to the Senate that this was not unfinished business. It was being considered yesterday when the morning hour on Calendar business closed. It retained its place on the Calendar; when the regular order was called for to-day it was the first case on the Calendar and came up under that rule.

Mr. WINDOM. Mr. President, I will not occupy more than the five minutes allotted to me under the rule, and probably not so much.

I am very anxious that this bill shall pass. I prefer it in the form sent to us from the House of Representatives, but believing that it cannot become a law in that form, I am willing to take the best we can get. I think that the bill as reported from the Committee on Patents will accomplish a great deal of good and do no harm, and, therefore, I hope to see the amendments agreed to, although I would prefer the original bill. Different localities entertain very different sentiments on this subject. There must be an effort to harmonize views. I believe the Committee on Patents have honestly endeavored to give us a bill which will do away with the evils existing under the present system, without injury to the patentee; and that is precisely what I want to accomplish.

Mr. HOAR. If my friend will permit me to say one word, I desire to say that the Committee on Patents went as far as they believed they could constitutionally go in that direction.

Mr. WINDOM. We have heard a good deal said here to-day and the day before yesterday by the Senator from New York [Mr. CONKLING] and others, about pirating upon patents; and the innocent purchasers described in this bill, who purchase patented articles, have been roundly denounced as pirates and robbers. Mr. President, I do not choose to retaliate upon that subject. If I did, I should simply express the honest truth in saying that the present patent laws are an organized system of blackmail and robbery. I want to amend them. I believe in encouraging inventions in every proper way; but I do not believe in turning loose upon the people a lot of shystering lawyers, who go into the Patent Office, buy up old and worthless patents, and then raid upon the people, as has been done for years past under the encouragement and protection of the patent laws. That is precisely what we complain of. It is not the honest patentee who does this thing, but it is the men who buy up patent rights, knowing the advantages they have under the existing system, and then use them to harass, blackmail, and rob. I want to stop it.

The Senator from New York referred jocosely to my earnest efforts with reference to the infamous drive-well proceedings in my own and other States. I accept as a compliment all he said upon that subject; and if the honorable Senator had ever been suspected of sitting on the fence on any conceivable question I should strongly suspect from his nervous anxiety on this subject that my honorable friend had located himself on the barbed-wire fence.

Mr. President, I believe I can go into the Patent Office in this city and with a very small sum of money buy a hundred patents, and armed with the power of your patent laws organize a horde of briefless, hungry lawyers to rob and plunder at pleasure. So can the Senator from New York; and in defending honest patentees, of whom he speaks so eloquently, he is in fact giving aid and comfort to these men.

Mr. President, I believe my time has about expired, and I will only say in conclusion that if jurisdiction in these cases involving small damages could be conferred upon the local courts, such as those of justices of the peace or county courts, so that there could be a fair trial between the parties in the vicinity of the defendant's residence, as is afforded in every case, except where the sacred right of a patentee is involved, the great mischief of which all complain would be cured. I think it cannot be done. The trouble arises from the fact that the patentee may go into your United States courts and drag the honest innocent user of an article patented five hundred miles from his home in order to recover $5 or $20. In my own State, as I have had occasion to say heretofore, this thing has been done in hundreds of cases; it is being done all over the West, and it is for this that we seek a remedy. Parties will make up a bill of costs of $15, $20, or $25, and send out two or three hundred miles to the man who is using a patented article which he bought innocently, without notice, and tell him, "unless you pay us five or ten dollars you shall travel two hundred or three hundred miles to the court and pay $100 or $200 costs." It is against outrages such as this that we protest.

Mr. CONKLING. May I ask, why does not the Senator move to confer jurisdiction on justices of the peace?

Mr. WINDOM. Because I doubt whether it can be done.

Mr. CONKLING. Why?

Mr. WINDOM. I think the Senator from New York would raise the question that we could not confer jurisdiction.

Mr. CONKLING. There is no objection in the way, except the Constitution; and the bill, I think, violates that; and if we are going to violate it, why not repeat ourselves?

Mr. WINDOM. The difference between the Senator from New York and myself is that I think this bill does not violate the Constition, and I suspect such a provision would.

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President, I am entirely unable to comprehend this bill. I realize the evil that is complained of, an evil which does not result from the existing law, but from an abuse of the existing law, and an evil which cannot be eradicated in the way undertaken here, except by inflicting a counter evil upon the citizen who has his vested rights of property to protect which all free institutions are established. But to consider the bill itself, it commences by saying that in no suit hereafter brought by a patentee against the user of a patented article "where it shall appear that the defendant purchased the same in good faith for his personal use from the manufacturer thereof," &c., he shall not be liable to costs; and then it goes on to inflict a penalty provided that he had not at that time actual knowledge of the existence of the patent. I do not know how a man can purchase a patented article in good faith when he has actual knowledge of the existence of the patent which he is infringing, and yet the whole bill is an absolute jumble of self-contradictions, unless a man who purchases in good faith may at the same time have actual, express knowledge of the existence of that right which he is defrauding. Anybody who examines the two parts of the bill will see that that is just what it comes to.

Mr. CONKLING. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. BLAIR. There is no question about that.

Now, I want to ask any one how this bill is of the slightest consequence in the world unless there be a defense? And I ask further how the defendant can put in issue the plaintiff's right to recover anything, either damages or the legality of title to an assumed patent, unless he puts in issue one of these two things, the right to damages or the title to the patent in question?

Mr. WINDOM. If the Senator is seeking information, would he like me to give my answer?

Mr. BLAIR. I should like an answer to it, but as I have only five minutes I want to go to another point which I think is more important to be considered than this question of law which the courts, if this bill ever gets through, will dispose of in a way to kill it if we do not. In my belief the evil the Senator from Minnesota speaks of exists. This bill notifies everybody, the patentee, the blackmailer the Senator speaks of, the innocent purchaser, and the purchaser who is not innocent, that if the user of the article will pay $20 under the threat of suit or under suit brought he will be excused. The evil he speaks of is not an evil which grows out of the assertion of any legal right at all; three-fourths of the patents of the country are on little things for the use of which the damages in individual cases would not be anything like the amount of $20. The men who assert rights falsely, who bring suits or threaten them will, under the provisions of this bill, in my belief, organize bureaus all over the country; they will notify these innocent or these guilty users, as it may be, of these unimportant articles that they will be sued at distant courts where the costs would be five, ten, or twenty times the amount of the $20 which is the extent of damages that may be recovered, that they will be sued unless they forward the $20. And thus you will establish under the operations of this bill an abuse very much greater than any that now exists. Such I believe to be the case.

Mr. WINDOM. We will take our chances on that.

Mr. BLAIR. The Senator has got to take his chances under the bill on such provisions as we find here. I think this proposed amendment utterly nullifies all possible beneficial operation of the law.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the committee which has been read.

Mr. McDONALD. Let it be again read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be read.

The SECRETARY. After the word "over," in line 14, the committee propose to strike out "the court shall adjudge him to pay all his own costs" and insert "he shall recover no costs against the defendant."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment reported by the Committee on Patents was in line 19, after the word "patent," to insert "or unless the defendant puts in issue the plaintiff's right to recover anything in the action."

Mr. VOORHEES. The context shows that the purpose of the bill is to protect a defendant from costs unless the plaintiff shall recover more than $20, or unless the defendant shall defend the suit. This last amendment ought to be voted down. It is simply a provision that if a man defends himself and puts in issue the merits of the controversy between him and the plaintiff, all the costs shall go against him, although not more than a dollar may be recovered. It renders nugatory the protecting feature of the provision which precedes it. I hope the Senate will not concur in the amendment.

Mr. KERNAN. I think if my friend will reflect he will see that if the defendant denies that the plaintiff has a valid patent, that issue has to be tried before he can recover sixpence; he raises a great controversy on a matter of value, and if a man is beaten on that he ought to pay costs; or if he denies that what he has done or bought infringes the patent, that raises a great question, and sixpence damages for the plaintiff settles that great question. It involves a serious litigation, and the beaten party, whichever it is, ought to pay costs, I submit. That is all this means. If a man comes and says, "I do not deny your patent, but I say I have not damaged you," or "your invention is not worth $20," then he can litigate that, and if he is right, the plaintiff gets no costs against him; but where he denies the validity of the patent, where he denies that the plaintiff has any property, where he denies that he has infringed it, claiming that it does not come within the patent, then they litigate a matter as to which, in all courts, I think, the beaten party ought to pay costs.

Mr. HOAR. I hope the Senator from Indiana, on reflection, will not make a question upon this amendment. Of course I do not mean to question his great capacity to understand such a question, because he is a lawyer of great experience. But refusing to adopt this amendment merely renders nugatory the whole scheme of the bill so far, and I think the Senator will agree if this amendment is adopted the defendant who has in good faith, believing he is buying of a man who has a right to sell him something that he is using for himself and is not using in any manufacturing process, if a man comes around to blackmail him he says to that man in reply, "If you go to court you cannot get out of me more than $20, and you have got to pay your own costs to do that." We have removed and cut up by the roots, as far as we constitutionally could, the demands of those blackmailers, as they have been described. But, on the other hand, suppose the defendant is such a person as is described by the Senator from New York, a man put forward as a tool by a real and purposed infringer; going into court he joins issue, keeping the case in court years, involves the plaintiff in an expenditure of thousands of dollars to test his right; in such a case as that there may be only a dollar recovered. It is very often the case that there are two conflicting patents, and the man claiming under one and undertaking to break down the other is sued the moment he begins the use of the patent which infringes the true patent, and they have a lawsuit which involves thousands and thousands of dollars, taking accounts and all the expenditures in a patent cause. I think the Senator from Indiana will agree that in such a case as that the judgment as to the amount of damages is not the test of the value of the thing which has been in controversy; but where the parties have been settling the right to a controversy where perhaps property of the value of hundreds of thousands of dollars is at stake, the costs should go to the prevailing party.

Mr. VOORHEES. I do not want to consume a minute of time. I see the period allowed is nearly up. I will only say to the Senator from Massachusetts that if the plaintiff goes into court to litigate with somebody to settle whether he has a right to the patent or not, he might as well pay the costs as the other side. I regard this amendment as simply a threat to bully the defendant into conceding that a man has a patent, whether he has or not. It is just saying to him, "Now if you concede that we have this patent, you will come out lighter," and it is a threat to a man against pleading the general issue. He cannot plead the general issue without being mulct in costs. I hold that a man has as much right to appear in court as a defendant to contest the right whether a man has a legal patent, as any other question could be raised. I think it is not proper legislation. I hope it will be voted down.

Mr. McDONALD. If this amendment is adopted, a defendant under the bill will have to be an innocent purchaser, and will so have to confess that the plaintiff is entitled to recover something, anything perhaps under twenty dollars; and unless he is ready to so confess upon a trial of the cause, if the plaintiff recovers anything whatever, he is to recover costs.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator from Indiana will pardon me for one suggestion. His case is analogous to the case of a tender.

Mr. McDONALD. Whereas if the party does not recover more than he offers to confess, he recovers no costs; but I say in every case where the defendant is to be benefited by the bill, he must be able to establish two facts: first, that he is an innocent purchaser of the article without any knowledge of its character as a patent; and in the next place, he must have offered to confess, or in his defense, whatever that defense may be, admitted that the plaintiff is entitled to some recovery; that is, that the plaintiff is the owner of the patent-right, that it is a valid right, and that the article which the defendant is using is an infringement of it and gives him a right to a recovery of some amount, and unless his defense is made in that form and to that effect a recovery of any amount, of one cent, recovers full costs. That is the effect of this amendment; it will have no other.

I think it is the purpose of the bill to guard purchasers from vexatious litigation who have innocently purchased simple articles where the royalties cannot under ordinary circumstances amount to less than twenty dollars, and where the purchaser has been considered honest, and to drive such parties as claim an interest in a patent-right of that kind to sue the manufacturer or vendor if they wish to recover full costs as well as whatever damages they may be able to maintain that they have suffered. That seems to me to be the purpose of the measure, and it would be very much impaired if this amendment were adopted. I therefore cannot support the amendment, and consider it as injurious to the bill.

Mr. PLATT. I agreed to this bill, with the amendments of the committee, as one of the Committee on Patents; but I cannot agree to the bill unless this amendment is adopted; and if it be not adopted I shall desire to be heard somewhat at length upon the bill. I want to ask the attention of the Senate one moment to show what the effect of the bill would be without this amendment. It would allow any person who purchases a patented article without injury, for his own use, when sued to set up the invalidity of the patent and to take the patentee through years of litigation; and then the patentee recovering upon that question, if he does not get more than $20 damages (and he never will for the use of any one article) he shall recover no costs in the suit. I apprehend that a patentee has some rights which the Government is bound to respect.

While I am very willing to protect the people who are imposed upon by patentees, or by persons claiming to be patentees, I do not think we ought to go so far as to allow a person to use an article and then to set up when he is asked to pay damages the question of the validity of the patent, and if the plaintiff succeeds pass a provision that he shall have no costs unless he gets more than $20 damages. Here was the Blake stone-crusher patent, which was litigated in all the courts, and finally in the Supreme Court of the United States; and the damages were only nominal—$1. Pass the bill without this amendment and in a case of that sort the patentee might as well be remediless altogether. I know that the Legislature can deal with the remedy; but it must not so deal with it as to destroy the right—and it would be a practical destruction of the right of the patentee to his property to pass the bill without the amendment.

Mr. WITHERS. I ask now, in pursuance of the notice that I gave, that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the agricultural appropriation bill.

Mr. CONKLING. Has the morning hour expired?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The morning hour has expired. There is no unfinished business, and the Chair did not interrupt the Senator from Connecticut until he had finished.

Mr. McMILLAN. I think the Senate is ready to vote upon the bill that has been under discussion.

Mr. CONKLING. Oh, no.

Mr. WINDOM. I ask the Senator from Virginia to yield to me for a single moment to say that I shall persistently urge the consideration of this bill until action shall be taken upon it.

Mr. WITHERS. I am very anxious to secure action upon it myself, but in the mean time my duty to the Appropriations Committee requires me to ask the Senate to take up and act upon the agricultural appropriation bill. It is a very short bill, and after it shall have been completed, if the Senator can call up the bill which has been under consideration, the Senate will probably dispose of it very promptly.

ISTHMUS SHIP-CANALS.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I rise to state that I will ask the Senate to allow me to speak to-morrow morning, not exceeding ten minutes, upon the concurrent resolution offered by the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations [Mr. EATON] to the effect that the Government of the United States will insist that its consent is a necessary condition-precedent to the construction of a ship-canal or other means of transportation across the Isthmus. I shall not speak over ten minutes. I shall ask the Senate to hear me at the conclusion of the consideration of the Calendar, at half past one o'clock to morrow.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate proceeded to consider its amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 7101) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives.

On motion of Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia, it was

Resolved, That the Senate insist upon its amendments to the said bill disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and agree to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the Houses thereon.

By unanimous consent, it was Ordered, That the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the presiding officer.

The PRESIDING OFFICER appointed Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia, Mr. WALLACE, and Mr. ALLISON.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. GARLAND. The Committee on Territories have had under consideration the memorial of the Legislature of Montana, in reference to the penitentiary in that Territory, and have instructed me to report the same with a recommendation that the sum of $20,000 be appropriated in the sundry civil appropriation bill for the purpose of repairing and enlarging the penitentiary; and I move that this recommendation, with the memorial and accompanying papers, be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BAILEY, from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom was referred a proposed amendment to the deficiency bill concerning the readjustment of the salaries of all postmasters of the third, fourth, and fifth classes under the classification provided for in the act of July 1, 1864, &c., reported it favorably, and moved its reference to the Committee on Appropriations; which was agreed to.

Mr. KIRKWOOD, from the select committee on the subject of pleuro-pneumonia and other contagious and infectious diseases of cattle and other domestic animals, reported two amendments intended to be proposed to the bill (H. R. No. 7203) making appropriations for the sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, and for other purposes; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. INGALLS. I present an amendment intended to be proposed by me to the sundry civil appropriation bill. I state to the committee that it is accompanied by certain papers necessary to the understanding of the amendment. Let the amendment, with the papers, go to the Committee on Appropriations without printing.

Mr. PLUMB submitted amendments intended to be proposed by him to the deficiency appropriation bill; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BUTLER, Mr. COKE, Mr. McPHERSON, Mr. PADDOCK, Mr. PENDLETON, Mr. VOORHEES, and Mr. WILLIAMS submitted amendments intended to be proposed by them respectively to the bill (H. R. No. 7203) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, and for other purposes; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

Mr. RANSOM. I desire to give notice that to-morrow morning, at the expiration of the morning business—not of the morning hour, but of the regular morning business—I shall ask the Senate to take up the river and harbor bill.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. No. 6478) for the relief of Levi Price was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

The bill (H. R. No. 7160) for the relief of John H. Templeton was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

EIGHT-HOUR LAW.

Mr. BRUCE. I desire to give notice that I shall to-morrow ask the Senate to take up the joint resolution (H. R. No. 239) to provide for the enforcement of the eight-hour law.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WITHERS. I now move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 7099) making appropriation for the Agricultural Department of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, and for other purposes.

Mr. WITHERS. I ask that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, and that the amendments of the Committee on Appropriations be acted on as they are reached in the reading of the bill before other amendments are offered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be read, and the amendments reported by the Committee on Appropriations will be acted upon as they are reached in the reading, unless there is objection.

Mr. WITHERS. The appropriations in the bill now under consideration, as proposed to be amended by your Committee on Appropriations, are less than the estimates and greater than the amount appropriated by the House. The amount of the estimates from the Department was $342,720. The amount of the bill as it passed the House was $310,000. The amount added by the Senate Committee on Appropriations is $20,500, making the total of the bill as reported $330,500. The amount of the appropriations for the current year is $253,300. The bill, therefore, as reported is less than the estimates by the amount of $12,220, and exceeds the appropriations for 1881 by the amount of $77,200.

The increase made to this bill by the Senate committee is for the following purposes: Restoring salary of Commissioner, $500; examination of and report on wools, $5,000; investigation of pleuro-pneumonia, $15,000; additional clerical force, $10,300; purchase of seeds, plants, cuttings, &c., $5,000; culture and manufacture of tea, $5,000; investigating history and habits of insects injurious to agriculture, $10,000; chemicals and apparatus, $2,000; manufacture of sugar from sorghum, $17,500; manufacture of sugar from beets, $10,000; examination and report on wools, $1,000; investigation of pleuro-pneumonia among cattle, $15,000; building for agricultural implements, $10,000; and concrete walks and roads, $3,000; aggregating $88,800.

The items of reduction are for a burglar-proof safe, $1,000; experimental garden and grounds, $600; and reclaiming arid and waste lands, $10,000; aggregating $11,600; the net increase being $77,200 over the amount of the bill as it passed the House.

Now, I ask that the reading of the bill be proceeded with, and if any explanation is desired of any amendment offered by the committee, I am ready to furnish such explanation.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill. The first amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations was in line 12, to increase the appropriation "for compensation of Commissioner of Agriculture" from $3,500 to $4,000.

Mr. WITHERS. That is the amount of salary fixed by the statute.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, after the word "dollars," in line 27, to insert, "in all, $45,000;" so as to make the clause read:

OFFICE OF COMMISSIONER.

For compensation of Commissioner of Agriculture, $4,000; chief clerk in said Department, $2,000; chief of divison of accounts, disbursing clerk, and superintendent of Department building, $1,800; one assistant, who shall act as property clerk, $1,400; one stenographer, $1,800; two clerks of class 4, $3,600; two clerks of class 3, $3,200; four clerks of class 2, $5,600; four clerks of class 1, $4,800; one librarian, $1,400; one engineer, $1,200; superintendent of folding-room, $1,200; five clerks, $1,000 each, $5,000; clerks, carpenter, watchman, and laborers, $8,000; in all $45,000.

Mr. WITHERS. That only specifies the totals of the various items of appropriation.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment was, in line 34, after the word "dollars," to insert "in all, $9,000;" so as to read:

Chemical division:

For compensation of chief chemist, $2,000; one assistant chemist, $1,600; one assistant chemist, $1,400.

For the employment of additional assistants in the chemical department, $4,000; in all, $9,000.

The amendment was agreed to,

The next amendment was, after the word "dollars," in line 39, to insert, "in all, $3,000;" so as to make the clause read:

Botanical division:

For compensation of one botanist, $1,800; one assistant botanist, $1,200; in all, $3,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 43, after the word "dollars," to insert "in all, $3,200;" so as to make the clause read:

Entomological division:

For compensation of entomologist, $2,000; one assistant entomologist, $1,200; in all, $3,200.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 50, after the word "dollars," to insert "in all, $10,800;" so as to make the clause read:

Statistical division:

For compensation for one statistician, $2,000; one clerk of class 4, $1,800; two clerks of class 3, $3,200; one clerk of class 2, $1,400; two clerks of class 1, $2,400; in all, $10,800.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after the word "dollars," in line 67, to insert "in all, $2,700;" so as to make the clause read:

Seed division:

For compensation of superintendent of seed division, $1,800; one superintendent of flower-seed room, $900; in all, $2,700.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 88, after the words "proportion of," to strike out "three-fourths" and insert "one-half;" and in line 91, before the word "constituents," to strike out "agricultural;" so as to read:

Purchase and distribution of seeds, &c.:

For the purchase and propagation and distribution, as required by law, of seeds, trees, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants, and expenses of putting up the same, $80,000. An equal proportion of one-half of all seeds, plants, and cuttings shall, upon their request, be supplied to Senators, Representatives, and Delegates in Congress, for distribution among their constituents, or shall, by their direction, be sent to their constituents; and the persons receiving such seeds shall inform the Department of the results of the experiments therewith.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after the word "therewith," in line 94, to insert:

Provided, That all seeds, plants, and cuttings herein allotted to Senators, Representatives, and Delegates in Congress for distribution remaining uncalled for at the end of the fiscal year shall be distributed by the Commissioner of Agriculture.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to call the attention of the Senator who has the bill in charge to this proviso. I think the time should be a little earlier than that fixed. If the Commissioner is compelled to hold these seeds until the 30th of June, they will be practically worthless. I suggest that it be made the 1st of March.

Mr. WITHERS. What the Senator says is true with regard to some of the seeds, but with regard to many others it is not true. If the time were fixed at the 1st of March, the period indicated by the Senator, it is possible that some members of Congress might thereafter apply for their quota and find that it had been exhausted. Therefore the committee thought it most judicious to permit this distribution to be made by the Commissioner at the expiration of the year for which this provision was designed to apply.

Mr. TELLER. If we fix an earlier time the Senators and Members would call before that time, or else they would not call at all.

Mr. WITHERS. No; many would call after that time for perhaps the middle and northern part of the country.

Mr. TELLER. It seems to me nonsense to carry them over until the end of the fiscal year, because a majority of these seeds will be worthless after the first year.

Mr. WITHERS. I think the Senator is mistaken in saying a majority of them. No doubt many would remain in a condition to germinate, and all these cuttings, plants, &c., would be distributed by the Commissioner.

Mr. TELLER. The cuttings of course would be useless by the following year.

Mr. WITHERS. Leguminous plants and seeds would not.

Mr. TELLER. If in order, I move to strike out in lines 97 and 98 the words "at the end of the fiscal year" and insert "until March 15 of each year." I think that would be time enough.

Mr. WITHERS. I am opposed to the amendment.

Mr. SAULSBURY. In a very cold spring it would be an absolute loss to take some of these seeds so early as that. Some of them ought to remain until after that period in order to insure their safety.

Mr. TELLER. To meet the Senator's view, I will say the 1st of April, because if they are not sent out by that time there is no use of sending them at all.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Colorado to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. WITHERS. I hope the amendment will not be agreed to. The committee have carefully considered the matter. In the northern portion of this country there are many seeds that could not properly be planted until the very last of April and during May, and for twelve months the law gives to each member of Congress the privilege of distributing a certain amount of these seeds.

Mr. TELLER. That is one of the rights of a Senator that I do not choose to exercise myself, if I can avoid it. I am quite willing that the Commissioner of Agriculture shall distribute these seeds, and I think he is the proper person to distribute them. Whenever a constituent of mine sends a letter to me saying he wants certain seeds, I transmit his application to the Department, and I believe they have always sent the seeds. I think that is the proper course to pursue, and I suppose they would do that after the 1st of April as well as any other time. The purpose of this provision is that the Commissioner shall send to each Senator one-quarter of all the seeds, and he sends them indiscriminately everywhere to everybody just as it happens. The rule is that the seeds sent out by Senators and Members, as a general thing, are wasted. I do not want to facilitate that thing very much. I want to leave it in the hands of the Commissioner.

Mr. WITHERS. I concur in a good deal of what has been said by the Senator, but the practical effect of the existing law is, as the Commissioner of Agriculture informs me, that he receives no more authority to distribute the quota of seeds which belong to each member of Congress at any time than he would have to distribute any other article which did not belong to him and over which he had no control. The effect of the amendment offered by the committee is simply to utilize a considerable amount of seeds and cuttings which now are wasted and thrown away, and I hope it will pass as reported by the committee.

Mr. PADDOCK. I hope the amendment proposed by the Senator from Colorado will not prevail——

Mr. TELLER. If it is going to make any talk, and if the agricultural Senators here object to it, I will withdraw my amendment to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Colorado withdraws the amendment to the amendment; and the question recurs on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary resumed and continued the reading of the bill. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was in line 126, after the word "dollars," to insert "in all, $7,000;" so as to make the clause read:

Experimental garden and grounds:
For labor in experimental garden, $5,000; plant-pots, $250; continuing repairs and painting greenhouses, &c., $500; purchasing and propagating new plants and seeds of economic value, $550; tools for greenhouses, $150; repairs to heating apparatus, new pipes, &c., $450; charcoal, sand, and sod for potting plants, $100; in all, $7,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out the following proviso, from line 147 to line 154:

Provided, That to enable the Entomological Commission to complete and publish the data already obtained by them, with the investigations made, the sum of $5,000 of said sum of $15,000 is hereby appropriated, to be expended under the direction of said commission; and the report of the said commission and an itemized statement of their expenditures shall be made to the Commissioner of Agriculture.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to have the Senator who has the bill in charge give us some reason why this portion of the bill is stricken out.

Mr. GARLAND. I should like also to ask the Senator from Virginia whether the appropriations on page 3, $2,000 for compensation of entomologist and $1,200 for an assistant entomologist, form part of the $15,000 appropriated for investigating the history and habits of insects injurious to agriculture, to which this proviso was added by the House?

Mr. WITHERS. No, sir. On page 3 the item to which the Senator from Arkansas alludes is simply the compensation of the officers charged with this duty in the Agricultural Department, the entomologist and assistant entomologist.

In reply to the question of the Senator from Colorado, I will state the reasons which induced the committee to recommend striking out the proviso which has been reported. In 1877 there was an appropriation made for the study of the Rocky Mountain locust, and an entomological commission was appointed to investigate and report upon that subject, and the amount of $18,000 was appropriated that year for the work. In 1878 a report was made and an additional sum of $10,000 was asked to complete the work of that Entomological Commission in the special investigation of the grasshopper or the Rocky Mountain locust. The next year, to wit, in 1879, that commission had completed, as we are bound to assume, the investigation of the Rocky Mountain locust, inasmuch as no subsequent report has been made by them on that subject. Professor Riley, who was the entomologist at that time for the Department of Agriculture, was paid an addition to his salary and received an appropriation of $10,000 as the chairman of this Entomological Commission, $500 of which was devoted to the special purpose of investigating the habits of insects injurious to the cotton plant. That investigation was made and a partial report was submitted. In 1879 we added an appropriation of $10,000 for completing the work of this commission, as specified.

This commission, you will understand, was created not by the Department of Agriculture, nor under the control of that Department, but under the Department of the Interior. In addition to that there was a deficiency appropriation in 1879 for this investigation of $600. In 1879, for the cotton-worm investigation, $5,000 was devoted, and there was a deficiency appropriation the same year of $412. Last year, in 1880, a proposition was made and agreed to by the Senate to increase the appropriation recommended in the bill to $25,000 for the express and avowed purpose of completing the whole work of that commission. I ask the attention of the Senator from Colorado and the Senate to the phraseology of the act making that appropriation in order that I may show to the Senate that it was expressly understood at that time that no other appropriation should ever be asked for this Entomological Commission, but that all that class of work which they had performed should thereafter devolve upon the Agricultural Department, which seems to be the proper Department for continuing such investigations. The appropriation was in these words:

For the completion of the work of the United States Entomological Commission under the Department of the Interior in the special investigation of the Rocky Mountain locust or grasshopper and the cotton-worm, the sum of $25,000, to be immediately available: Provided, That after the close of the next fiscal year all work of the character herein provided for shall be exclusively under the control of the Agricultural Department, and all operations under the Interior Department shall be fully and finally closed before the 30th day of June, 1881.

The Committee on Appropriations regarding the provisions of this act of last year as requiring the whole of the work done by this Entomological Commission to be completed and closed up out of that appropriation of $25,000, did not regard it as proper that $5,000 of the $15,000 devoted to the Agricultural Department for the investigation of the whole subject of entomology as connected with agriculture should be diverted from that purpose in order that this Entomological Commission might publish the results of their investigation, and we considered that they were required to do that out of this appropriation of $25,000 and complete their work by the 30th day of June next.

Mr. TELLER. If I understand the Senator, they have not had money enough to complete the publication, and it is proposed now to stop after having gone to the expense of collecting all this information, and we are not to have it published. Is that it?

Mr. WITHERS. I will state to the Senator that no such information was before the committee at all. On the contrary, the committee assumes that it was the business of the commission, and judging from the result of their investigations they could not have expended so large an amount of money as was appropriated last year, leaving them nothing for the publication. It is clear that it was the design of the Senate and of Congress when this appropriation was made last year that the whole matter of the Entomological Commission should end with the current fiscal year.

I will say in addition that if there should be any portion of their conclusions which they are not able to publish under the provisions of that act, they may be published by the Agricultural Department hereafter under the supervision of the person who makes these reports. The Commissioner of Agriculture was before the committee. He stated that the amount of $15,000 appropriated in this bill, which is the amount of his estimates, was designed simply to cover the operations of his own Department, and that if this proviso should be added to it the effect of it would be to cripple his investigations to the amount of $5,000 in this regard, and he protested against this sum being diverted from the amount which had been estimated for as necessary for his Department.

Mr. TELLER. I do not desire to do anything that will embarrass the Commissioner of Agriculture in his publications; but it does seem to me that the committee in disposing of the subject in this way have probably left it where there never will be a publication of the matter collected. If it can be done and will be done by the Commissioner of Agriculture under his appropriations, it is all well; but it seems to me it would have been well in striking out the proviso for the committee to have provided that the Commissioner of Agriculture should have the data to proceed with the publication.

Mr. WITHERS. It seems to me that the provision of the bill of last year requires this Entomological Commission, out of the sum then appropriated, to conclude their labors, which includes also a report of their investigations, and I have no doubt that they will do it in accordance with the express provisions of the law which authorized the appropriation to be made for that purpose.

Mr. EATON. My friend from Virginia will remember that they positively agreed to do that last year.

Mr. WITHERS. There is no doubt of it.

Mr. EATON. And it was said the money that we then appropriated would be all that would be required for that purpose.

Mr. WITHERS. It was to complete the whole work, including the publication.

It seems to me that the effect of this whole proviso would simply be to perpetuate the existence of the Entomological Commission, which it was understood should expire with the present fiscal year, and all their reports should be submitted to Congress. Under the terms of the act of Congress I think that is required.

Mr. MORGAN. The Entomological Commission was organized for the purpose of helping the work of the Agricultural Department, as it was unable to determine with success, either from want of ability among the employés and officers or from want of time, the locust pest when it came out in this country. Its devastation was so terrible that the country could not defend itself without having a commission in the field for the purpose of making special investigations as to the ravages of that insect. I think that I need not advert to the successful operations of that commission in that respect for the purpose of satisfying the Senate that its labors have been extremely beneficial to the people of the United States. It is true they have not been able to suppress the ravages of the locust, but they have been able to indicate the field of its operations and the manner of exterminating it or of repressing it to such a degree of certainty as that the country is now prepared whenever it shall reappear to test its operations much more successfully than it ever has done heretofore. The Entomological Commission originated in that necessity, and its work has been wonderfully successful.

When I came to the Senate I made the first effort that I believe had been made at all to draw the attention of that commission, or of some scientific commission, to the subject of checking or of exterminating the caterpillar or cotton pest. The first appropriation that was made was extremely insignificant. I called for a very small appropriation with a view of trying to get the attention of the Senate and that of the country attracted to the subject. The work was placed in the hands of the Entomological Commission without any dissent on the part of Congress, for the reason that that commission embraced the most eminent entomologists of this country. It was an affliction; it was a terrible distress brought upon the southern part of the United States, which the people had tried in vain to suppress and check, and we found that if anything was to be accomplished at all it was to be done by engaging the attention and services of the most scientific men in this or any other country in the effort to check it. We therefore added to the duties of this Entomological Commission the investigation of the cotton-worm, as it is called, properly the caterpillar. Professor Riley took the field with a corps of assistants selected with reference to their scientific ability and their experience through the entire South and North. These gentlemen devoted their time to this work almost without compensation in consideration of the demand made upon their ability and their experience to assist in this very important matter.

Congress from time to time when this commission brought in its reports, under estimates from the Department of the Interior, took the liberty of cutting down the estimates generally to about two-thirds of the amount estimated for, and thereby cramped and confined the commission in the field of its operation to such a degree that it has never had a fair opportunity to do either itself or the country justice. We have never been able to get from Congress or from the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate an allowance of the estimates which the Department of the Interior have made and laid before the Senate in reference to this subject. I do not think that that is exactly fair treatment.

Senators on this floor perhaps are not aware of the fact that more than twenty millions of money have been saved during the last year in consequence of the instruction the people of the South had received from the Entomological Commission in the methods of checking and repressing this cotton devastation. But yesterday I met in the corridors of the Senate a planter from one section of Alabama, a gentleman whom I had not expected to see here at all. In conversing with him about the state of the cotton crop of the last year in that State, he being one of the very best planters in Alabama, one of the most successful, he said to me, "I lost my crop last year because I did not choose to follow the advice which Mr. Riley had given to the people of that section of the country in reference to repressing the cotton-worm. My neighbors all around me made excellent crops, and I have paid for my folly in the loss of almost my entire crop." That gentleman, speaking intelligently, gives a fair statement of the advantages which Mr. Riley has been able to confer upon the people of Alabama at least, and I have no doubt upon the people of the entire South, reaching from the southern border of Virginia around to Texas, in consequence of these investigations of this pest and of the best means of repressing it.

Mr. Riley went into the field during the last year with a corps of chemists and of observers, scientific men, and he has accumulated a large amount of very valuable information. Some portion of that has been already printed and circulated through the country, and the demand for Bulletin No. 3 has been so great that the Senate will remember that the other day the chairman of the Committee on Printing recommended, and there was passed through the Senate unanimously, a resolution for the printing of 30,000 additional copies of that bulletin. From whence does this demand come? It comes from the people interested in this subject. Congress will do them and itself injustice if it refuses to give the little pittance of money that is asked here for the purpose of finishing up the publication of these valuable reports.

The difficulty that we experience in the South, in respect to this very important matter, is a little personal quarrel that has sprung up between Professor Riley and Mr. Le Duc. It is an extremely embarrassing fact to the country that Mr. Le Duc cannot be reconciled to Mr. Riley and that Mr. Riley cannot be reconciled to Mr. Le Duc; but I have never got to believe that because they quarreled Mr. Le Duc was a better entomologist than Mr. Riley, or that the South should be deprived of the services of that eminent entomologist to gratify the spleen of the Commissioner of Agriculture. Mr. Le Duc has not got the force in his office, and this bill does not provide it, for the purpose of carrying on effectually this important work. He has not got the man there who has the entomological and scientific information necessary to expend this money in any proper way; and if he has got the man there even, the man has not the time to attend to it. He is an officer who must confine his labors almost exclusively to the Agricultural Department in the city of Washington. It would be an almost useless expenditure for that man to take the field and travel, as Professor Riley has done, through heat and through night and day, during all the sickly season of last year, throughout the entire South, in order to make the investigations of this cotton pest.

Why are we not entitled to have a scientific man in the field to investigate this matter? If we cannot find that scientific man in the Agricultural Department, why are we not entitled to have the benefit of his services, no matter where he may be or whether he is the friend of Mr. Le Duc or is not? How much are we to sacrifice to Mr. Le Duc's caprice and his tastes in commanding the Bureau of Agriculture? I commend him for all the valuable labors he has performed for the country, if they can be estimated. I am incapable of estimating them because I am incapable of enumerating them. I notice in this bill that quite a number of different experiments are authorized to be made by him in agriculture. The bill provides in line 99:

That $3,000 of this sum shall be expended, in the discretion of the Commissioner, in experiments for the improvement of the varieties and culture of cotton.

The idea of spending $3,000 to enable Mr. Le Duc to teach the southern planters how to raise cotton, and not then give $5,000 for publishing valuable information which will enable those planters to destroy insects that are dangerous to cotton, shows that the committee have not had this subject under that wise deliberation and consideration which I think its merits demand. They have done their duty to themselves and the country, I have no doubt, according to the best of their ability; but after they have expended $3,000, or $300,000, or $3,000,000, or $300,000,000, in enabling Mr. Le Duc to make experiments in the culture of cotton, the practical result will turn out like the experiments that were made by large numbers of gentlemen from the North who went South immediately after the conclusion of the war and expected that they would make vast fortunes by raising cotton. I have the last one to hear from who did not go back broken, because he went there to undertake a business about which he knew nothing.

After we have got all the information that Mr. Le Duc can extract out of his experiments on the subject of cotton culture, the South will be no wiser in that regard than it is to-day. There is no set of men in the world who are conducting an agricultural enterprise with more scientific ability than the people of the South in growing cotton; and the proof of it lies in the fact that while our labor has been diminished year by year since 1865, our cotton crop in that period of time has more than doubled itself; it has risen from about three million bales to about six million bales. The requirements of the cotton planter in the South are not exravagant. Indeed they have been extremely modest. Put all the dollars together that Congress has expended in its efforts to exterminate this cotton pest in the South, and you would have less than the value of the crop of a single planter in the South in a single year.

I hope that the Congress of the United States will not indulge Mr. Le Duc and Mr. Riley in their mere personal antagonisms or quarrels with each other to the sacrifice of this important interest. Riley has the material already gathered, which he desires to publish and which we desire that he shall publish. It ought to be published under his inspection, because he has gathered the information together and knows how to arrange it, and knows the value of it.

Mr. WITHERS. It was the same last year and will be the same next year.

Mr. MORGAN. Very likely it may be the same next year; I cannot say that it will not. The Senator from Virginia seems to think because we have not succeeded in checking the cotton-worm one year, that Congress has no business to authorize additional experiments.

Mr. WITHERS. The Senator is entirely mistaken. I made no such assertion.

Mr. MORGAN. Then I would be glad for the Senator to explain. I have no interest in this matter of any kind; I desire merely to have some scientific effort made to stamp out, as the honorable Senator from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIAMS] said in reference to pleuro-pneumonia, this cotton pest; and it is a most apt expression.

You vote $10,000 to Mr. Le Duc, which shall be available immediately for experiments in connection with the culture and manufacture of tea. You would devolve upon the Agricultural Department that duty which belongs to the planters and horticulturists of this country of making experiments in agricultural products, and which they would have still to make, and you expend $10,000 to enable him to get up an experiment in tea culture. You give Mr. Le Duc $10,000 for what? "For the continuation of experiments in connection with the manufacture of sugar from beets, and for the cultivation of beets for that purpose." There are not beets enough raised in the country upon which Mr. Le Duc can make his experiments, but he must have the privilege of investing $10,000 in raising beets upon which to make his experiments. The committee thus indulge him and are thus liberal in the gratification of Mr. Le Duc's experimental tastes; but when an officer of the Government, no matter how great or how scientific he may be, undertakes to ask that he shall be allowed to publish that which he has gathered of information, valuable to the country, it must be published under Le Duc's auspices and under his direction, and I dare say when it is brought before him he cannot in a month's time arrange the facts so as to present them in order as a scientific paper. He has no experimental knowledge of such science, so far as I am informed; and I cannot understand why it is that the facts which have been gathered by Riley should not be allowed to go to print under his direction.

Then you give to Mr. Le Duc $25,000, to be available immediately, for the purpose of continuing "experiments in the manufacture of sugar from sorghum and other sugar-producing plants." Nobody stands here to be in rivalry with or to compete with Mr. Le Duc in his efforts to make sugar out of corn-stalks and out of sorghum; and hence the committee find no difficulty, year after year, in appropriating to him large amounts of money for machinery much of which has gone to waste and ruin already, and to enable him to send over into Virginia, just across the line, and open sorghum patches and have them cultivated there by the free negroes about Washington. There is no trouble about that. Twenty-five thousand dollars for that little project is a very small matter; but when we ask for $5,000 to print a report containing valuable information, the honorable committee find that we cannot do it because somebody has said that it would not be required.

We have made no bargain with the Entomological Commission that I know of, we have made no bargain with anybody else. The honorable Senator points to the law and says, "there is the law providing that the sum appropriated formerly shall be sufficient to cover the whole expense." Yes, sir; and such has been the law in reference to every public building in the United States, every harbor, and every river. Estimates have been made that it would require so much money to complete them; the estimates have been put into an enactment, and positive restrictions have been enacted that the appropriation should not go beyond the estimates; and yet Congress year after year provides additional sums simply for the reason that it was not quite as wise as it ought to have been at the time it made the original appropriation. Congress has the liberty of correcting its own errors as well as other people, and it is but the correction of a fatal error in this case that requires an appropriation of only $5,000.

I do not understand that this important interest ought thus to be trampled under foot. I cannot call it anything else than trampling it out. I have submitted an amendment to this provision in which I propose to raise the sum for the Entomological Commission to $10,000 instead of $5,000, and that is a very moderate sum. There are some remaining experiments relating to the machinery necessary to be employed in throwing upon the cotton-plant poisons that will destroy the insect, which Congress ought to allow to be made. There is a single plant now grown successfully in the State of California, a species of pyrethrum, out of which a gentleman in that State is making a large amount of money, the flowers of which when pulverized and put upon any insect almost that you can describe instantly destroy it, a plant that will grow very well in the South, a plant the value of which Mr. Riley has discovered in connection with the extermination of the cotton-worm.

Mr. WITHERS. It was known before.

Mr. MORGAN. Not in its application to that insect, nor was it known in reference to all insects. There are thousands of gentlemen in this country who did not know that the plant was worth anything at all for these purposes. Mr. Riley has demonstrated, through a long series of experiments, the absolute success of the flowers of the pyrethrum, when reduced to powder, in the destruction of the cotton insect. Now he is attempting to produce its culture in the South. It is raised in Hungary, it is raised in all the northern part of Turkey, in Europe, an indigenous plant growing wild in that country having a climate very much like our own. It is now being grown successfully in California; and there is no reason why, if Congress should give some little encouragement to the enterprise, that that valuable plant may not be transplanted to the South and grown there, so that the planter will be enabled to raise upon his own farm and in adjoining rows to his cotton the plant the flowers of which when put upon the insect will destroy it absolutely.

Mr. President, we have heard a good deal here about the assistance of Congress in various directions to the farmers and cultivators of this country. I assure you that if you will place in the field scientific men who will take upon themselves with professional zeal and ardor the duty of inquiring into these insects, you will never lose a dollar of money to the Treasury of the United States by these slight expenditures. On the contrary, the revenues of commerce and the commercial power and wealth of this country were increased last year $20,000,000 by the assistance and advice given by this one man, whose only fault it appears to be is that he is not a friend of Mr. Le Duc.

I hope the time is not very far distant when the Agricultural Department will have an opportunity of inviting a gentleman of science there for the purpose of assisting in its operations, without reference to whether he is perfectly friendly to the head of that family or not, for it seems to be a family, a close corporation. It seems that no man can get in there who is not a personal pet and friend of the head of the Department, it makes no difference what his scientific abilities may be. The Government must waste its money and lose all opportunity to serve the people because it cannot flatter Mr. Le Duc with every nomination that is made to office in that bureau. I trust that the Senate of the United States will take a view of this question which at least rises above all personal quarrels of Mr. Le Duc and Mr. Riley.

Mr. WITHERS. I wish to state the facts in connection with this matter in response to the very elaborate statement of my friend from Alabama. If his assumptions are to be accepted as correct, I admit that there would be no case before the Senate at all. I know nothing of any personal quarrel between Mr. Le Duc and Mr. Riley. I do know that Professor Riley was at one time in the employment of the Agricultural Department, and at the time when he made the first of the investigations in regard to these insects. I am not disposed to detract one iota from his credit or reputation as a scientist. I know nothing to the contrary. I assume that he is all that my friend from Alabama claims for him; but I do not suppose that he monopolizes all the knowledge upon those scientific subjects. I suppose it is possible that there are other men who enjoy a modicum at least of knowledge upon this great subject as well as himself, and I do not think it a very violent assumption for me to state that in my opinion there are such gentlemen connected with the Agricultural Department. I know not whether they are special friends or pets of General Le Duc. So far as the Committee on Appropriations are concerned they have no knowledge of these things, and do not want to have any knowledge of them. They desire to serve the best interests of the agricultural people of this country, and I think it is not going out of the way to assume that the gentleman placed at the head of this great Department shall be a man who is fitted for the place, and who is sufficiently above the little petty jealousies which the Senator from Alabama assumes control him; as a man in his position ought to be, for certainly if he is the man described here in the attack made upon him by the Senator from Alabama, he is utterly unfitted for the position he occupies, and should be impeached and removed from office by the Congress of the United States.

We are told that these gentlemen come here now at the earnest demands of the great cotton interest of the South and claim that $5,000 additional shall be appropriated for the publication of the results of their investigation there. Where is the evidence of it? There was none of it before the committee.

Mr. MORGAN. I sent evidence to the committee.

Mr. WITHERS. The Senator sent to the committee two or three articles from southern papers containing the results of the investigation the publication of which it is claimed now we need this amount of money in order to give to the world. They have already been published. This bulletin No. 3 has been spread broadcast through the whole country, and that contains the gist of the whole matter. The Senator very well referred to the fact that the Senate of the United States the other day with great unanimity passed a resolution authorizing the publication of thirty thousand additional copies of that work. The work being published, where is the necessity of paying $5,000 to perpetuate not only this publication, but to perpetuate the existence of this Entomological Commission, because Professor Riley seems to be in high favor with certain gentlemen in the Senate?

The fact that these gentlemen assume to have engaged in this work with little or no compensation sounds strangely when considered in connection with the action of Congress in appropriating money for this purpose. We find in the successive years from 1877 to 1880 there had been appropriated by Congress for the work of this commission upward of $69,000, nearly $70,000, of which sum I would call the attention of the Senator from Alabama to the fact that $33,000 have been expended in salaries, three gentlemen at $3,000 a year each, for all these successive years. The effect of the passage of the proviso which is incorporated in the bill would simply be to perpetuate the existence of the commission again for an additional year. It is for that reason and in that aspect of the question that we desire to strike it out.

Mr. MORGAN. Will the Senator allow me to ask him what portion of the $69,000 has been applied to the cotton-worm investigation?

Mr. WITHERS. The cotton-worm investigation commenced in 1878. There have been $10,000, $600, $5,000, $412, and $25,000 appropriated for it.

Mr. MORGAN. For the cotton-worm?

Mr. WITHERS. Yes, sir; for the cotton-worm investigation.

Mr. MORGAN. I do not remember the $25,000 appropriation.

Mr. WITHERS. That was last year.

Mr. MORGAN. It was both for an investigation of the cotton-worm and to complete the investigation of the grasshopper plague.

Mr. WITHERS. But I beg to say here, and the publications of Professor Riley will substantiate the allegation, that not one letter, word, or syllable has been published in regard to the grasshoppers since 1878. Not a particle of information has been given to the country in regard to that insect, because the publication made in that year was regarded, as it very properly was, as exhaustive of the subject. Therefore the whole amount of appropriations which I have specified I have a right to assume have been expended in this direction; and my judgment is that that subject of investigation has also been exhausted, and that Bulletin No. 3 contains all that is likely to be of any practical value growing out of those investigations. I admit that they have been important to the South, and I do not yield to the Senator from Alabama in his devotion to the agricultural interests of the South and to the interests of persons engaged in the cultivation of cotton. When Professor Riley has for several years been investigating the subject, and has made what I believe to be an exhaustive report on the subject and all of its results are spread broadside through the county, I see no reason why that Entomological Commission should be perpetuated for an indefinite length of time.

It was objected last year when this point was raised by the Senator from Alabama to us, that it was a strange anomaly in this Government to continue two commissions in the field, one under the head of the Interior Department and one under the head of the Agricultural Department, pursuing investigations precisely of the same character. The argument was made then, as it has been made to-day, that no man except Professor Riley was competent to pursue such investigations intelligently in order that practically good results might be reached from it. I do not admit the correctness of that assumption. I believe it is possible for the Agricultural Department to command the services of scientific men just as competent as Professor Riley or any other man who has been engaged in this investigation.

The thing that the Committee on Appropriations desire to do is to put a stop to that double expenditure under different Departments of the Government, when it should be restricted to one, and that the expenditures made in connection with matters of agriculture may be under the intelligent direction and control of one bureau. That is the beginning and the end of it.

The very first investigation on this subject and the very first publication was made in regard to the history of the cotton-worm; and the results of the investigations then made are embodied in the very document to which the Senator alluded, but were made under the direction and control of the Department of Agriculture. Professor Riley had nothing to do with that whatever.

The Committee on Appropriations certainly are not conscious of being controlled by the likes or dislikes of the Commissioner of Agriculture in their action upon this matter, as seems to have been assumed by the Senator from Alabama. They know nothing about such things. They do not yield their judgment to his will. Although the Commissioner of Agriculture may have erred and the Committee on Appropriations themselves may have erred in making appropriations for this experimental investigation with regard to tea and sorghum and cotton and other things, yet we did our best and acted in such a manner as in our judgment would best promote the agricultural interests, which the Department of Agriculture is especially constituted to subserve and promote.

I see in the admission of the Senator from Alabama, in his specious plea that protection and assistance shall be afforded to this immense agricultural interest of the South, an effort to perpetuate the Entomological Commission, and it is that phase of the subject to which I wish to direct the attention of the Senate. If the Senate can be satisfied that the interests of the cotton planters in the South are to be promoted by annual appropriations of five, ten, twenty, or fifty thousand dollars, I for one shall be very glad to see those interests promoted and advanced by such appropriations as may be necessary to make them most valuable; but I see nothing in the argument to convince me of the fact. On the contrary, it seems to me that the whole provision in this bill was designed simply to perpetuate Professor Riley and the Entomological Commission, Professor Riley being the beginning and the end of said commission, because, as I am informed, the other two members, while receiving salaries do no work. One of them, I believe, is connected with Brown University, has made no investigation, has made no publication, has done nothing to deserve his salary, and so with the other member of the commission as I am informed.

I can see no imaginable reason why, if these subsequent investigations are necessary, they cannot be made under the supervision of the Agricultural Department. If the Agricultural Department is incapable of making such an investigation on this subject, then I say that Department had better be abolished, because this is certainly one of the simplest duties which could be properly devolved upon it. The committee in moving to strike out this clause were simply actuated by a desire not to perpetuate two sets of officials, when one, in their judgment, was all that was necessary to consummate the objects designed to be consummated by the appropriation. And in addition, I wish to say that we do regard the provisions of the act of last year, accepted by the Senator and by the Entomological Commission, as fixing the conditions on which that appropriation of $25,000 was made, and we insist that, until some further and stronger evidence shall be submitted, they shall be required to conform to the conditions of that appropriation.

Mr. McPHERSON. Mr. President, I have no knowledge of any difficulty between the Commissioner of Agriculture and Professor Riley. I have not the honor of Professor Riley's acquaintance. I suppose him to be a very capable officer, judging by the statements made by the Senator from Alabama. With respect to the Commissioner of Agriculture, I do know that he has performed more and better service than any officer who has ever preceded him in that bureau, and I hope the incoming Administration will do so wise a thing as to continue him at the head of the bureau.

With respect to Professor Riley and the commission, of which I understand he is the head, I find that during the past four years, from 1877 to 1880, inclusive, there has been a little upward of $69,000 expended in this work. Now, I wish to know if it is the purpose to continue this commission indefinitely. Last year, when this matter was up for discussion, if I am not in error about it, at the suggestion of the Senator from Alabama, the large sum of $25,000 was appropriated for the purpose of completing the investigation. Now we find again in the agricultural bill of this year an additional sum of money to complete and publish the data already obtained by them. I am informed that each member of this commission devotes about two or three months of each year to these duties, for which he is paid the sum of $3,000 per annum. The gentleman of the committee in charge of the bill thinks that some members of the commission give no attention whatever to it, are not here at any time during the year, and have not devoted an hour's time to the investigation of the question.

We have an entomologist in the Department of Agriculture, and I suppose him to be a very capable man, because I think none but capable men would be employed in that Department. His salary is $2,000 per annum, for which he devotes the entire time from the 1st day of January to the last day of December. Now, sir, is it not competent for that officer, whoever he may be, to compile the data obtained, as I understand the House bill, which has been amended by the Committee on Appropriations by striking out that clause providing for an appropriation of that much—and I will read the clause in order that the Senate may distinctly understand it:

That to enable the Entomological Commission to complete and publish the data already obtained by them, with the investigations made, the sum of $5,000.

If the data have already been obtained, why cannot the present officer in the Agricultural Department perform that duty just as well as the Entomological Commission?

Another question I should like to ask the honorable Senator from Alabama: I understand the work of this commission to have been completed, to have been published, and to have been circulated all over the country. I know there has been a publication made of the work of the commission on the cotton-worm, and it has been circulated. So I understand that there has been a later report made.

Mr. MORGAN. The report is the preparation of another year's work, which has not yet been published at all.

Mr. McPHERSON. Then I understand it is the intention to continue this commission when, in my opinion, the work can be done just as well by the Department of Agriculture as by Professor Riley and his assistants.

Mr. EATON. I want to say right here to my friend from New Jersey, that I hope it will be part of his remarks that this business was said to be finished last year, and that for the sum of $25,000 the whole matter would be published; and therefore the committee have taken the ground now that they want to have an end of this double-headed commission.

Mr. MORGAN. I will ask the honorable Senator from Connecticut how it was said last year that the business had been finished, when last year, under the appropriation bill, we sent a corps into the field to work another year? How was the business finished by a commission that was organized and appointed after you passed your act?

Mr. EATON. The promise was that it would be finished with the year.

Mr. MORGAN. Would be?

Mr. EATON. Would be finished with the year.

Mr. MORGAN. To whom do you attribute the promise? To me? I am not the Government of the United States.

Mr. EATON. I have not named the Senator from Alabama in this matter. He is not the great bug man; that is Professor Riley. [Laughter.]

Mr. MORGAN. I am not a bug man, but I may be a bugbear. [Laughter.]

Mr. EATON. I only want to say, so that my friend from New Jersey will be exactly aware of the facts, that the committee last year, not under the instruction of the honorable Senator from Alabama or anybody else, but from all the information that could be gained from this double-headed concern, understood that if $25,000 were given last year there would be an end to it, and hereafter we should have one general to command the Army, and not two. I think it was Napoleon who said, when the Directory began to be a little alarmed about him and thought they would send another general to Italy and place both in command of the army, "I resign then; one bad general is better than two good ones;" and so I think about the head or heads of the Agricultural Department, one bad one is better than two good ones.

Mr. LOGAN. Allow me to make a suggestion in this connection. I think the Senator from Connecticut is mistaken. I do not know very much about it myself, but I think the commission is composed of three scientific men.

Mr. McPHERSON. I will say to the Senator from Illinois if he intends to make a speech on this question that I shall be through in a moment and will then yield the floor.

Mr. LOGAN. I did not intend to make a speech on it, but only wanted to make a suggestion. Professor Riley was sent South to examine this one particular question in reference to the cotton-worm. Professor Thomas was sent to examine in reference to insects of another character. The other professor, whose name I do not remember, was sent in another direction. To my own knowledge Professor Thomas did travel, went to Minnesota and to different States and Territories on this very commission. He is an Illinois man, and I know the fact to be true that he did go. They have made their reports, I presume; and I have never yet found a scientific man who was willing to turn over his report to some other man, who would get credit for it, and I do not blame him. I would not either.

Mr. McPHERSON. I understood in voting an appropriation of $25,000 last year that it was to cover all, and that there would be no further appropriation of money to this purpose; but on referring to the laws passed previous to that time we find in the appropriation act of 1878 there was an appropriation of $10,000 made for completing the work of the commission. We find it was still incomplete, and in 1879 we made another appropriation of $10,000 according to the words of the act "for completing the work" of the commission. In 1880 we find the work still incomplete and the vast sum of $25,000 was appropriated for the purpose of covering all contingencies and completing the work of the commission. They are here again to-day asking for another appropriation for continuing indefinitely this work, when in all human probability they cannot add one single iota to what has been already stated by the commission and published by it and by the Agricultural Department.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, I regret very much that Senators have not informed themselves better about this matter before discussing it. I made a simple statement of the facts. If the facts were against me, of course I should not expect to have any influence here at all. The facts, however, of this case are with me.

It is alleged on all hands that the object of this appropriation sent to us by the House of Representatives is to continue the Entomological Commission. Now the language of the bill as sent to us from the House shows that that is a very grave mistake. There is a proviso to the appropriation of $15,000 to investigate the history and habits of insects injurious to agriculture and for other matters, in these words:

Provided, That to enable the Entomological Commission to complete and publish the data already obtained by them with the investigations made, the sum of $5,000 of said sum of $15,000 is hereby appropriated, to be expended under the direction of said commission.

There is a total denial of the position and statements made by Senators on this floor that the object of this measure is to continue the Entomological Commission. I shall content myself with that because a plain fact like that will put down any amount of argument, any amount of misrepresentation.

There is no intention, so far as this act is concerned, of continuing the Entomological Commission. The whole purpose is to enable that commission to arrange and complete the data which they themselves have collected in operations under the directions of this Government with the appropriation of $25,000 made last year. The Senator from New Jersey thinks this is a very extravagant appropriation, an enormous amount of money to be applied to the protection of people who raise $300,000,000 of product a year for the benefit of the commerce of the United States, all of which has been honestly and faithfully applied and most economically applied, and I think I venture nothing in making the assertion that no amount of money spent by this Government in any scientific investigation has ever heretofore produced as large an amount of benefit as this, or has ever succeeded in bringing out such exhaustive and laborious research as these commissioners have bestowed on this subject. I am not here for the purpose of defending the Entomological Commission, because I know but one member of that commission; but I must protest that it is an extraordinary injustice, if I understand the facts in this case rightly, to charge that commission or any part of it with having remained away from their duties. True they have not always been in Washington; they have been out in the field and have devoted their time and attention to the service for which they were paid by the Government.

I hold in my hand the second report of the United States Entomological Commission for the years 1878 and 1879, relating to the Rocky Mountain locust and western cricket, &c., a most elegant volume, replete with information, containing more than four hundred pages of printed matter, with divers lithographic designs and cuts for the purpose of illustrating the condition and ravages of these pests. This work was published in Washington City, in 1880, at the Government Printing Office by order of Congress. How do honorable Senators rise on this floor and charge these gentlemen who labor like scientific men always labor, industriously and zealously, with having used the money of the Government without any return, with having enjoyed the benefits without any return to the Government at all, at the same time that they have voted an appropriation here to print this splendid volume.

So much for that and so much in vindication of the Entomological Commission as a body. I now come to the other proposition. The Senator from Virginia seemed to have understood me as intimating that Mr. Le Duc had prejudiced the minds of the Committee on Appropriations against Mr. Riley. I made no such accusation. I have a better opinion of that committee than to suppose any such influence as that would swerve them in the slightest degree in the discharge of a public duty. What I mean to say is, that Mr. Le Duc's opposition to the Entomological Commission, I think, is founded upon a personal quarrel between him and Mr. Riley, because they were once associated in the Agricultural Department. When Le Duc wanted to give significance and importance to the Department of Agriculture in the branch of entomology, he invited Riley to take charge of it. Riley went there, and the South followed Riley in that Department, because they desired to have the benefit of his services, and not merely the services of the Department of Agriculture. Why, sir, if Professor Maury were living to-day, do you suppose there is a man in the United States that I should prefer to him if I wished to send out a commission to examine the high waves of the sea, to find the tides and currents that waft across its bosom? We want Professor Riley because he is a man of scientific ability.

The honorable Senator from Virginia said that there was no evidence before the Senate that Professor Riley stood any higher than anybody else in that regard. Sir, there may not be before this Senate any evidence of that kind; but if he will go to the colleges in France, if he will go to the Academy of Sciences there, if he will go into Germany and find the record that was made there in reference to the abilities of your citizens connected with entomological researches, he will find a record that the Congress of the United States cannot add much to by any compliment it may bestow upon him.

Mr. McPHERSON. Will the Senator from Alabama tell me if there is any evidence before the Senate that the present officer employed for the purpose in the Agricultural Department would not be competent to compile the data and facts already in possession of the bureau, as I understand, or in the possession of the commission? We are now paying him $2,000 a year salary. Is there any necessity for adding to that the pay of $9,000 a year, $3,000 to each commissioner, as I understand there are three, for the purpose of doing what this officer of the Government now can do as well?

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, I will not follow the tactics of the Senator from New Jersey and attack Mr. Comstock, because he has found it necessary without cause to attack Mr. Riley. I am not to be influenced to make any criticism of Mr. Comstock on the floor of the Senate, however just I might esteem such criticism to be; but I will say this of the entomologist of the bureau: he has as much as he can afford to do, for the small salary he gets, in Washington City. And I have further to say, that being a very young man, being just out of school, having just graduated from an entomological school, and having received most of his instruction under Professor Riley himself, I hardly suppose that it will be denied that Professor Riley is largely his superior in point of experience. At the South we trust in Professor Riley's judgment rather than take that of Mr. Comstock on a question of this kind. Mr. Comstock has made some reputation as an entomologist in that bureau, but he has done it by compiling the reports which Riley himself lodged with that bureau and by adding to them some little examination of his own.

But, sir, it would be impossible for Mr. Comstock to discharge his duties to the entomological department in Washington City and at the same time make the investigations that are necessary in the field to discover all the ravages of this insect and the reason why it has so long defied all efforts at extirpation. Not only is there the cotton insect, but the grasshopper of the West and the locust are confided to this entomological bureau; and it has now the investigation of the insects that infest grape-vines and the numerous insects that affect the orchards of the country. A vast field of investigation is expected to be surveyed and fully occupied by this young gentleman who occupies his office in Washington City upon a small salary that the Senator from New Jersey has called attention to.

Mr. EATON. If I understood my friend from Alabama aright, he stated that this Mr. Comstock would not have time to go into the field and make the necessary examination. I thought a little while ago my friend from Alabama was arguing with the bill in his hand that it would be only necessary to make up the reports, and now he speaks about going into the field and making further investigations.

Mr. MORGAN. The honorable Senator from Connecticut is sometimes a little forgetful. He does not remember that my attention had been entirely diverted from the bill, in answer to the Senator from New Jersey. I was merely responding to a question of the Senator from New Jersey, which was an answer to him and not an argument to the Senate.

Mr. EATON. And therefore the reason which my friend gives did not apply.

Mr. MORGAN. Not for continuing the commission at all, but for passing this bill that does not continue the commission.

Mr. EATON. Now my friend speaks about an individual going out into the field again.

Mr. MORGAN. I hope some time this individual may be got into the field. The honorable Senator seems to be alarmed about men going into the field. I wonder if he thinks an insurrection will break out in Alabama and somebody be wounded?

Mr. EATON. Oh, no; I do not.

Mr. MORGAN. The sensibilities of the committee are so extremely acute that I cannot help believing that it must have fallen into Mr. Le Duc's way of thinking of Riley.

Mr. WITHERS. Is this in behalf of Mr. Riley?

Mr. MORGAN. I am Mr. Riley's firm friend. I honor him because of his acquirements in science and his labors in that cause; but I am voting not for my friend, but for my cause; for what I conceive to be the interests of every Northern Senator as well as every Southern Senator, and that is to secure a diminution of the amount of depredation on the product of cotton. Senators on the committee seem to have such association with the head of this Department that they even imbibe his temper and cannot listen to any remarks about the matter without irritation. That has been the difficulty all the time, for which the South has had to suffer. They quarrel with each other, and quarreling with each other, we are compelled to put up with a cheap man rather than have a good man to investigate this matter. That is the whole of it. I am inclined to hold on to Riley, because I think Riley has sense enough to manage the subject; and Mr. Le Duc is struggling, through the assistance of his friends in the committee, that Riley shall not have anything to do with it, because he does not like Riley. That is the logic of the whole case.

Mr. WITHERS. The Senator is assuming that the committee have been controlled in their action by a particular individual. He has stated so two or three times.

Mr. MORGAN. I have been led to that remark only by the extreme similarity between the conduct of Le Duc toward Riley and the conduct of the Senators toward me. They are disposed to quarrel with me, and will not allow me to have a fair chance.

Mr. WITHERS. I am disposed to repel so injurious an aspersion on the committee.

Mr. MORGAN. It is not an aspersion. I think so; and I tried to do the committee more justice than to say they could be influenced largely by Le Duc. I do not think he is a man of sufficient ability, notwithstanding the laudations of the Senator from New Jersey, to influence the grave Committee on Appropriations of the Senate to any remarkable extent. The Senator from New Jersey has found out some wonderful traits in him, and I am glad he has discovered them, and I am glad of the promulgation of that discovery likewise; it will give the country a degree of satisfaction it has never heretofore derived from an examination of his works.

Now, Mr. President, I do not want to get a double-headed concern here. I would like very much indeed if the Congress of the United States would indulge the South in its earnest request, not found in newspaper slips that the honorable Senator alluded to a moment ago, but found in the newspapers of the entire South, and through all the circles of agricultural people in the South, the earnest request that Mr. Riley should be allowed to continue this subject, which he has so well advanced and has handled so ably, until its conclusion; but I despair of that. I have only suggested that I intended to offer an amendment here for $5,000 additional to enable him to complete some experiments that last year for want of an appropriation and for the want of time were left incomplete, in the construction of machinery adequate to meeting this necessity, this demand, and in the use of this plan, which I think is so valuable in this direction. But the immediate question before the Senate is simply this, as I have already stated, whether or not the Entomological Commission, having finished its labors, having accumulated the information, shall be allowed to arrange and publish it, or whether the work shall be taken out of its hands and turned over to somebody selected by Mr. Le Duc. That is all. There is not a man on this floor that ever took pride in any work of his own hand who did not desire that he should have the opportunity of finishing it himself, and that is particularly true of all scientific men. When they have laid the foundations of a great work, and have completed it by observations in the field and are ready to make their practical tests before the world, then it is regarded as a hardship to take from those men the right to complete their labors.

Senators refer to some promise that they say I made in reference to the expenditure of the $25,000 appropriated last year, and that it should cover every expense. Suppose I had promised it here? If I made such a promise it was done in entire good faith, believing that the sum would be sufficient; but events have proved that it was a mistake, and an honest mistake, as well on the part of those who estimated for this expenditure as on the part of myself, who believed that it might be sufficient. It is not enough in a very meager way to complete this important work. Now, we come and say this work needs $5,000 to complete it. Nobody denies that; the House committee grant it; but the Senate committee took upon itself to strike it out. That is because I suppose they know more about this business than the House committee and everybody else. I do not speak reproachfully of the Senate committee, but they must understand that when they reproach me and call me to account for promises I have made, so I call upon them to account for their labors and their works. I am willing to treat them fairly, but they must treat me fairly at the same time.

I ask nothing in this matter but that the Senate retain what the House has put in this bill, and that is $5,000 to be expended to let the commission publish the data already obtained by it. It has been said that Bulletin No. 3 covers the whole of that ground. Senators do not know what they are talking about when they say so. Bulletin No. 3 refers to the data collected the previous year, and not during the last season. The object now is to print the next bulletin, the succeeding part, the entire year's investigations; and because Riley has published one book, what is called Bulletin No. 3, containing the investigations of the year 1879, the Senate comes out and orders 30,000 additional copies—the highest compliment that could be paid to a man's work; and now when we propose to publish the work for 1880 to show the investigations, experiments, and discoveries during the year 1880, gentlemen say, "why, that is all covered by Bulletin No. 3," which covers only the field of exploration of 1879. That is the condition of it.

I have said all I am going to say on this subject. I am aware that I take more upon myself than I should do in the advocacy of this bill. Other gentlemen from the South are as much or more interested in it than I am. No Senator from the South, from a cotton-growing State, here will get up and deny what I assert now, and that is that the investigations of Mr. Riley in regard to the cotton pest of the South have been extremely valuable to the country; and I restate the assertion I made awhile ago, that that man's explorations and suggestions and investigations in regard to the matter of handling these cotton pests have saved the people of the South $20,000,000 in the last crop.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, I shall not occupy more than five minutes of the time of the Senate. I concur in what has been said by the Senator from Alabama. There is no reason for the action of the committee in striking out the provision of the bill as it came from the House. There is no interest in this country that has suffered so greatly as the cotton interest from the destruction of insects, and there is none that has been so far benefited by scientific inquiry as that interest under the investigations of the distinguished Professor Riley. To say that there has been saved not to the South but to the North and to the whole country, not millions but tens and hundreds of millions of dollars by the progress of scientific inquiry under Professor Riley, and no one else, is a fact beyond all controversy. The committee need but to have looked closely into the subject, on which data, perhaps, were not wanting, to ascertain that fact. My own section of the country, Florida, the south part of Georgia and of Alabama, are peculiarly afflicted by the ravages of this worm, and for the committee to have made an appropriation for the permanent employment not of one but of a half dozen distinguished scientists would have been only a full provision for an interest which amounts to hundreds and in a few years to thousands of millions of dollars.

I say, then, Mr. President, that there is no reason for the action of the committee, and I earnestly hope that the amendment proposed by the Senator from Alabama to devote $5,000 to continue the work of the commission will be adopted, and that the bill as it came from the House will stand and not as it is amended by the Committee on Appropriations.

I say again that there ought to be a permanent commission not only of Professor Riley, the most distinguished scientist, who has given practical proof of the value of his examinations and his experiments in the destruction of the cotton-worm and other insects, but of any distinguished scientist who will devote himself to this great subject, and there can be no money expended on the part of the Government more wisely or more beneficially than this.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, I did not intend to say a word in regard to this matter; but when the Senator from Florida, supplementing remarks heretofore made, announces with great emphasis that the committee have acted without reason, and I suppose that means without sense, I desire to tell him the reasons why we did it.

Mr. CALL. Allow me. I said "without evidence," I think.

Mr. BECK. "Without reason" were the words. In the present law, under which we are now living, this provision occurs, and it was before the Committee on Appropriations:

> For the completion of the work of the United States Entomological Commission under the Department of the Interior in the special investigation of the Rocky Mountain locust or grasshopper and the cotton-worm, the sum of $25,000, to be immediately available: Provided, That after the close of the next fiscal year all work of the character herein provided for shall be exclusively under the control of the Agricultural Department, and all operations under the Interior Department shall be fully and finally closed before the 30th day of June, 1881.

There is a peremptory order to stop the commission, and we carrying out the order of Congress have seen fit to say that the law shall be obeyed, and the operations of that bureau shall be continued hereafter under the Agricultural Department. Is there no reason in that? Would it not have been reason enough that we wanted to obey that law? In 1878 an appropriation of $10,000 was made for completing the work of this entomological commission. The excuse was made that they were not through with their work, and in 1879 we said we would give them $10,000 more to complete it. Again, in 1880, "for completing the work of the commission, $25,000," and this proviso was then inserted ordering the Committee on Appropriations not to go any further in that direction. We have simply obeyed the law. If Professor Riley, or any other professor—I never saw Professor Riley—is so valuable to these gentlemen, why do they not get the proper committees of Congress, the Committee on Agriculture, or some other committee, to get up a commission and put him at the head of it, and not come here to scold the Committee on Appropriations because we refuse to violate a peremptory order of Congress and a positive law, by confining these operations hereafter to the Agricultural Department.

Mr. MORGAN. Will the Senator from Kentucky allow me?

Mr. BECK. Yes.

Mr. MORGAN. I suggest to the Senator whether he has not during this session of Congress, and nearly every session that he has been so valuable and important a member of the Committee on Appropriations, time after time voted additional appropriations for measures of various kinds—public buildings—public improvements—as deficiencies where the law expressly required that no more than a certain sum of money should be applied to the object?

Mr. BECK. Perhaps I have; but when there is a positive law, and I am acting as a member of that committee in obedience to that positive law, I deny the right of any Senator to come here and accuse the committee of having no reason in anything they do. The Senate may overrule us; we certainly up to this time have done our duty in obeying the existing law, have we not? Who came before us and told us that it was better to have a divided authority than a united one? If the Department of Agriculture is imbecile, then make it strong or abolish it; but do not divide the operations of the Agricultural Department with the Interior Department and have two commissions working antagonistic to each other—hostile to each other—each seeking to undermine the other; and when Congress has come to the conclusion that that was not a proper thing to allow, and ordered the Committee on Appropriations to stop it, and did stop it themselves by an act of Congress, surely we were right in obeying the order thus given. That is all we have done, and that is the meaning of all the scolding, or whatever you call it, that we are now getting, and that is all I care to say about it.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, there is nothing in the law to which the Senator from Kentucky has alluded, nothing in the former act of Congress in making the appropriation, defining that the commission should end and that no more money should be appropriated for it. There is no evidence shown to have been before this committee that the work of this committee has been exhausted. I say again that we intend no reflection on the committee. The House has sent us a bill providing for the continuance of this commission and for the publication of the data and the investigations which they have made, and there is nothing in the fact that the Senate at the last session passed an appropriation for completing their work that if the work is not completed would indicate the propriety of their refusing to do it now. It is a work of great importance to the people of the South, and I hope that the Senate will not strike out the provision inserted by the House for the continuance of this commission as it was constituted at the time when the investigations were made.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations, after the word "dollars," in line 147, to strike out down to and including the word "agriculture," in line 154.

Mr. BECK called for the yeas and nays.

And they were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 26, nays 31; as follows:

YEAS—26.

Allison,	Davis of W. Va.,	Kernan,	Rollins,
Baldwin,	Eaton,	McDonald,	Wallace,
Beck,	Hamlin,	McMillan,	Whyte,
Blair,	Hampton,	McPherson,	Windom,

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. WITHERS. The result of that vote indicates the disposition and views of the Senate with regard to retaining the Entomological Commission; but I submit that it is unjust to the Agricultural Department to divert any of the $15,000, the amount estimated as necessary for their own operations in the investigation as to insects injurious to agriculture, to this purpose. As the Senate has determined to divert $5,000 of it, I move to amend the section by striking out "fifteen" in line 147 and inserting "twenty," so as to permit $15,000 to remain according to the estimate for the services of the Agricultural Department in that direction.

Mr. MORGAN. I hope that the amendment of the Senator from Virginia will be adopted. I think the appropriation has been extremely small both for the Entomological Commission and for the Department of Agriculture.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. HOAR in the chair.) The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Virginia, to strike out "fifteen" and insert "twenty," in line 147.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORGAN. In line 150, I move to strike out "five" and insert "ten."

Mr. WITHERS. I make the point of order on that amendment; it has not been estimated for or recommended by any of the standing committees of the Senate, nor by any head of a Department.

Mr. MORGAN. I might have made the same point on the Senator from Virginia, but as he was a member of the committee I let him off.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I call the attention of the Senator from Virginia to a verbal correction. In line 150, the word "fifteen" ought to be "twenty."

Mr. WITHERS. That follows the amendment already adopted on my motion.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Virginia what is his point of order? Is it that it is contrary to the rule of the Senate where you appropriate ten or twenty thousand dollars for a particular object to increase the disposition of a part of that to some other object?

Mr. WITHERS. Yes, if it has not been estimated for, or recommended by any head of a Department, or proposed by a committee of the Senate.

Mr. HOAR. I have no interest in the question whatever; but the bill appropriates $20,000 for the support of the Agricultural Department, or some general phrase of that kind, for the entomological division. Then the bill further says that of that $20,000 $5,000 shall be applied for a certain commission, and the amendment proposes instead of appropriating $5,000 to the commission to appropriate $7,000 or $10,000. That does not increase the appropriation at all. The same sum is appropriated by the bill, and it is simply making a different direction to the Commissioner as to how he shall expend the appropriation he has.

Mr. WITHERS. I will state in reply that it does increase the appropriation for this particular service by the amount of $5,000, but that is not the point. The point I make is that the appropriation for publishing the results of the Entomological Commission is increased by $5,000, if the amendment should prevail, because it is now appropriating $5,000, and it is proposed to increase it to $10,000.

Mr. HOAR. But it is $5,000 of a certain fund.

Mr. WITHERS. I understand that, but the fact remains that the $5,000 which is appropriated for the publication of the results of this investigation, if the amendment should prevail, would be increased by the amount of $5,000, and consequently it renders it obnoxious to the provisions of Rule 27, as I understand it.

Mr. HOAR. It is just as broad as it is long. It only increases the diversion in the same clause of part of the total appropriation for a particular purpose, and decreases the amount applicable for other purposes.

Mr. WITHERS. The rule is not quoted as applicable to the point that it decreases the appropriation, but that this increases it.

Mr. HOAR. I have no interest in the question. The Chair will rule as he chooses, but I think the point of order is not well taken.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. COCKRELL in the chair.) Rule 27 provides:

> And no amendments shall be received to any general appropriation bill the effect of which will be to increase an appropriation already contained in the bill, or to add a new item of appropriation, unless it be made to carry out the provisions of some existing law, or treaty stipulation, or act or resolution previously passed by the Senate during that session; or unless the same be moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate; or proposed in pursuance of an estimate of the head of some one of the Departments.

This certainly does not increase the general appropriation of $20,000 in this clause of the bill. It increases the amount of that appropriation which may be applied for a specific object. The Chair will submit the question of order to the Senate, is the amendment proposed by the Senator from Alabama in order?

Mr. HOAR. May I be permitted to state in a sentence one illustration, so that the Senator from Virginia may see my point? Suppose there is in an appropriation bill an item of $20,000 for the Library with the provision that of that $20,000, $10,000 shall be for American books and $10,000 for English books. Now, somebody proposes to amend by providing that it shall be $15,000 for American and $5,000 for English books. That increases the sum to be expended for American books, but it does not increase the appropriation within the meaning of the rule; the item of appropriation of $20,000 for the Library remains unchanged.

Mr. WITHERS. In response to what the Senator from Massachusetts has said, I do appreciate the point which he makes so forcibly; but my opinion is that the point of order is well taken, because there are two distinct subjects of appropriation now embraced in this paragraph. One is for the general work of the Agricultural Department under the entomological division thereof, and the subsequent one is for the publication of the works of the Entomological Commission, which is under a different Department, under the Department of the Interior, and has no connection with the Agricultural Department; and if the amendment should prevail it would increase the appropriation from $5,000 to $10,000 for that work. While it is true that the aggregate in the whole section would not be affected by it, it would increase the appropriation for this specific object, which is one of the two objects provided for in the paragraph.

Mr. HARRIS. I desire to ask the Senator from Virginia whether, if this amendment were held to be in order and be adopted, it would not on the same principle which led to moving to amend the paragraph by increasing the amount from fifteen to twenty thousand dollars make it necessary that we should again amend by increasing the amount provided for in the previous part of the section to $25,000 instead of $20,000? For this specific purpose, in the original bill $15,000 were appropriated; but when $5,000 by rejecting the amendment of the committee was appropriated for the publication of Riley's report, the committee recommended an increase of the aggregate amount appropriated to $20,000. Now, the Senator from Alabama moves to increase the amount for the publication of Professor Riley's report from $5,000 to $10,000. That will produce the necessity of increasing the amount of the original appropriation from $20,000 to $25,000. I think it clearly falls within the rule that prohibits the increase, unless it be upon an estimate of some one of the Departments, or recommended by the report of some committee. I think the amendment is clearly out of order, for that reason.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I think there is great force in what the Senator from Tennessee says. Should $10,000 be taken from the $20,000, then it would necessitate a still further increase of the total; but then a question of order might be raised on the further increase, because it was not estimated for. As I understand it, it is moved to increase the $5,000 on line 150 to $10,000. I submit that there is no estimate for it, it comes from no committee, and I do not see how it can be in order. It certainly increases the amount without an estimate and comes from no committee whatever. Upon either of those two points, as I understand the rules of order, the point is well taken.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is before the Senate. Is the motion of the Senator from Alabama in order? Those who believe that it is will say "ay;" those of a contrary opinion, "no." [Putting the question.] The noes have it. The motion is decided not to be in order.

Mr. WITHERS. Let us go on with the bill.

The Secretary resumed and continued the reading of the bill. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, after line 154, to insert:

> Examination of wools and animal fibers:
> To complete the testing, by scientific examination, of the textile strength, felting capacity, and other peculiarities of the different wools and animal fibers collected at the Philadelphia international exhibition of sheep and wool products, in pursuance of the acts approved June 16, 1880, and to publish the report thereon, $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary; and out of this sum the Commissioner of Agriculture is hereby authorized to pay to John L. Hayes, for his report on sheep husbandry in the South, published by resolution of Congress, at the rate per printed page paid for contributions to the agricultural reports, not exceeding the sum of $500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 173, before the word "thousand," to strike out "ten" and insert "twenty-five;" and in line 174, after the word "dollars," to insert "to be available immediately; and of this sum $15,000 shall be devoted to the investigation of the disease of pleuro-pneumonia among cattle;" so as to make the clause read:

Investigating the diseases of swine and other domesticated animals:
For continuing the investigation of the diseases of swine, and infectious and contagious diseases to which all other classes of domesticated animals are subject, $25,000, to be available immediately; and of this sum $15,000 shall be devoted to the investigation of the disease of pleuro-pneumonia among cattle.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in lines 186 and 187, to strike out "That $10,000 be, and the same hereby is, appropriated for" and insert "for;" and after the word "purpose," in line 189, to insert "$10,000;" so as to read:

For the continuation of experiments in connection with the manufacture of sugar from beets, and for the cultivation of beets for that purpose, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 225, after the word "dollars," to insert "to be available immediately;" so as to read:

Building for the display of the agricultural implements:
For the purpose of erecting a building on the Agricultural grounds for the display of all agricultural implements that may be presented to the Department for exhibition therein, $10,000; to be available immediately.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was concluded.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT CLARKSBURGH, WEST VIRGINIA.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 1943. It is one in which my colleague is specially interested, and one that I think will only take a moment or two. I think no one will object.

Several SENATORS. What is the bill?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. It can be read for information.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia asks the Senate now to proceed to the consideration of the bill which will be read for the information of the Senate.

Mr. HEREFORD. I hope the Senate will take this bill up.

There being no objection, the bill (S. No. 1943) to provide for a building suitable for a post-office, and for the accommodation of the revenue officers and the United States courts and their officers, in the city of Clarksburgh, West Virginia, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Do I understand that all prior and pending orders have been suspended to take up this bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There has been no suspension of anything, for there is no unfinished business. The bill is taken up by unanimous consent.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JAMES E. MONTELL.

Mr. WHYTE. Now I ask the indulgence of the Senate to refund to a poor man some taxes paid in error. It has been recommended unanimously by the Finance Committee. It is House bill No. 2844. It will not take two minutes. I am sure nobody will object to it.

By unanimous consent, the bill (H. R. No. 2844) for the relief of James E. Montell was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for the payment to James E. Montell, of Baltimore, Maryland, $12,000, or so much thereof as he shall prove to the satisfaction of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue that he has expended in the purchase of revenue-stamps used by him to stamp and repack manufactured snuff upon which a tax had been previously paid or declared paid, or tax free, under the revenue laws in force at the time of its manufacture and sale, but which was made liable to be stamped under the act of July 20, 1868.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHANGE OF NAMES OF VESSELS.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I now ask the Senate to take up the last bill on the Calendar, which is a bill touching the change of names of vessels.

By unanimous consent, the bill (H. R. No. 6023) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to change the name of vessels under certain circumstances was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EDWARD B. CLARK.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I move to take up House bill No. 2098. It is a bill which has passed the House, has been considered by the Senate District Committee, and reported unanimously.

By unanimous consent the bill (H. R. No. 2098) for the relief of the heirs of Edward B. Clark was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the commissioners of the District of Columbia to remit the taxes, assessments, and charges upon the property, with improvements thereon, of the late Edward B. Clark, located in the city of Washington, and known as lot numbered 9, in square numbered 353, which accrued during the time the property was held by the Government under title of confiscation.

Mr. INGALLS. I think we ought to have some explanation of that.

Mr. HARRIS. There is a printed report in the case.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I ask the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia to make a statement of the case.

Mr. HARRIS. There is a printed report in the case that states every material fact in respect to it, and I ask that the report be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be read.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The bill passed the House without objection, and it has been reported unanimously here.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Clerk informs the Chair that there is no report.

Mr. HARRIS. There is a report in respect to the Senate bill, which is exactly the same; but the facts are these——

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senate bill is No. 1722.

Mr. HARRIS. The Senate bill is exactly the same bill, intended to accomplish the same object, on which a report was made by myself from the Committee on the District of Columbia. The property of this particular party was sold under the confiscation act of 1862. I ask the Clerk if he now has the report to read it. It will be more brief than a statement from me.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. HARRIS January 5, 1881:

The Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred the bill (S. No. 1722) for the relief of the heirs of Edward M. Clark, submits the following report:

In 1863 Edward M. Clark, then a citizen of the State of Kentucky, was the owner in fee of lot No. 9, in square 353, in the city of Washington, District of Columbia; that in that year—said Clark being absent from Washington at his home in Kentucky—the said lot was libeled, and, by order of the United States district court for the District of Columbia, condemned and sold, under the provisions of the act entitled "An act to punish treason and rebellion, to seize and confiscate the property of rebels," &c., approved July 17, 1862; that one Wheeler became the purchaser of said lot at the confiscation sale, at and for the sum of $1,550, and took possession of the same; that said lot, with its improvements, was at that time worth $5,000 or $6,000, and its annual rental value was some $500 or $600; that said lot was held, used, and occupied by said Wheeler and those claiming under him from 1863 until April, 1878, when the said Edward M. Clark died, and the possession of the lot, with its improvements much dilapidated, was given to the heirs of said Clark, but incumbered with an accumulation of general taxes, special assessments, interest, and penalties which accrued during the time said lot was held under the confiscation title, amounting in the aggregate to about $2,500.

Upon examination of the record of this proceeding the committee finds no evidence of the fact that Edward M. Clark had any notice or knowledge of the seizure of said lot until long after its condemnation and sale; that it was sold by the marshal of the District on the 9th September, 1863, and the proceeds, $1,550, paid into court; that on the 26th September, 1865, by order of the court, the costs of the proceeding, amounting to $325.94, were paid out of the proceeds of sale, and the balance, amounting to $1,224.06, was paid into the Treasury of the United States.

That on the 3d day of January, 1873, the said Edward M. Clark filed his petition in the said district court, asking that the proceeds of said sale be paid to him, and on the 9th of January, 1873, the court ordered the payment of the net proceeds of the sale to the said Edward M. Clark, and the records of the Treasury Department show that on the same day the sum of $1,220.81 was paid to the proctors of the said E. M. Clark, $3.25 being retained for costs.

The court must have been satisfied that the said Clark had committed none of the acts which under the statute subjected his property to seizure and confiscation, or it would not have ordered the proceeds of the sale paid to him.

From these facts it appears that the property was wrongfully, and without personal notice to or the knowledge of the owner, seized, condemned, sold, and conveyed, and the purchaser put in possession for the term of the life of the owner.

That upon his appearing and presenting the facts to the court the wrong was repaired to the extent of paying him the proceeds of the sale, less about $330 costs, but this wrongful sale transferred the use, occupancy, and management of the property, the rental value of which was from $500 to $600 a year, and largely in excess of all taxes and assessments, from the said Clark, thus depriving him and his children, during his life, of the power to make the rents and profits of the property pay the taxes upon it as they accrued.

The authorities allowed the taxes and assessments to accumulate from year to year without taking the steps necessary to compel the tenant for life, under the confiscation title, to pay them. Hence, upon the termination of the life estate the property descends to the heirs encumbered by tax liens about equal in amount to the present value of the property in its dilapidated condition.

The committee is of opinion that it was the duty of the authorities of the District to have compelled the tenant for life, who was put in possession by the Government, to have paid the taxes as they accrued; and, having failed to do so, it is unjust to compel these remainder men to bear the burden which results from their negligence, especially when to do so amounts to practical confiscation of the estate in remainder.

The committee therefore recommends that all unpaid taxes upon said lot, which accrued during the time that it was held by parties under the confiscation sale, be remitted, and report the bill back with an amendment, and the recommendation that it pass.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I think the Senate had better consider what they are about, if this bill is to pass. This is nothing more nor less than a remission of taxes upon real estate which have accrued and are due. This land was confiscated and sold on account of the disloyalty of the owner. The person in the occupancy of the premises did not pay the taxes, but the taxes accrued; and now, because the owners of this land and the occupants of it have neglected to pay the taxes, they come in and ask to have them remitted. I can see no reason at all why this action should be taken. These taxes are due, and they should be paid. The fact that they are large in amount is no reason for remitting them. For my own part, I desire to vote against the passage of the bill.

Mr. CONKLING. I wish some Senator to state whether there is any allegation that these taxes were for any reason unjust?

Mr. HARRIS. This property was sold under the confiscation act. The purchaser at the confiscation sale went into the possession, use, and occupancy of the property and held it for a number of years, a property the annual rental of which the proof shows to have been worth from $500 to $600 a year, two or three times as much as the annual taxes upon the property. The authorities remained silent, allowed the confiscation tenant to occupy it without the payment of taxes for twelve or fifteen years, when the life estate terminated and it descended to the heirs with an accumulation of taxes that amounts to confiscation in the hands of the heirs; and for that reason and the negligence of the authorities in not enforcing the collection of taxes from the confiscation tenant, the Committee on the District of Columbia reported in favor of remitting the taxes that were thus not collected. These are briefly the facts of the case.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I will just say in addition to what the Senator from Tennessee has said, that the authorities of the District now are so well satisfied that these taxes ought not be collected that they have not enforced their collection and they are holding them back that the lady interested may have the opportunity of having this act passed for her benefit.

Mr. McMILLAN. There has been no irregularity whatever in the taxation of this property.

Mr. HARRIS. Does the Senator from Minnesota not admit the facts to be just as I have stated them?

Mr. McMILLAN. Yes, sir; I admit the facts as stated.

Mr. HARRIS. Of course the assessments were regular, but the authorities failed to enforce them and to collect them off the party who enjoyed the rents and profits and use of the property for twelve or fifteen years and who ought to have paid the assessments that were made upon it. If these taxes are now enforced, you confiscate in the hands of the heirs the property when it descends to them.

Mr. McMILLAN. You confiscate nothing; you enforce the law. The taxes are not assessed against the tenant for life or against any tenant of real estate. The taxes are assessed upon the real estate itself. If the authorities of this District have been negligent in their duty, if they have omitted to collect the taxes which have been duly assessed upon this property, is that any reason for coming to Congress and asking us to pass an act of Congress remitting the taxes on the ground of negligence upon the part of the authorities who should have performed their duty? That is no confiscation of property in the hands of tenants or any other person. You may perhaps remit all the taxes in the District upon the same principle, for if I understand anything about the manner in which the taxes have been collected here great negligence and inattention have marked the conduct of the authorities, and there is not the slightest ground for an act of Congress remitting these taxes which were duly levied because they are large in amount and have remained unpaid.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. What were these taxes for?

Mr. McMILLAN. The regular taxes on real estate due on the property which the District levied and collected in the ordinary manner in other cases—the ordinary taxes for the support of the government. There is no reason whatever for it.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, and read the third time.

Mr. McMILLAN. I call for the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 38, nays 12; as follows:

Cockrell,	Jones of Nevada,	Randolph,

So the bill was passed.

Mr. HARRIS. The House bill having passed, I move to postpone indefinitely Senate bill No. 1722, which is in the same words.

The motion was agreed to.

W. A. REID.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I ask the Senate to take up House bill No. 1996. It only involves $194, has been unanimously reported by the Claims Committees of the House and Senate, and unanimously passed by the House.

Mr. McDONALD. I shall not object to the taking up of this bill; but I should like to know in what manner the rules of the Senate are enforced in regard to the recognition of the Senators. If there is any other rule than the one printed and enforced heretofore I will try and study it out. The rule, as I understand it, requires that the Senator who first rises and addresses the Chair shall be recognized. I am certain that I have accomplished that feat twice this afternoon, but in all times I have not been able to be recognized.

Mr. INGALLS. The rule also requires that every Senator shall rise in his own place.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state for the information of the Senator that the Chair cannot recognize half a dozen Senators at the same time.

Mr. McDONALD. As a matter of course, the Chair is in difficulty when a number of Senators arise at once; but I do not desire to play leap-frog here unless there is some purpose in it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state to the Senator that the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. HEREFORD] notified the Chair when he took his seat this morning, when the Vice-President was here, that he was to be recognized as soon as the bill then being considered was passed. The Senator from Ohio, [Mr. PENDLETON,] who has not yet been recognized, came to the Chair and said that he should be recognized. I agreed to recognize the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. PENDLETON,] and a change was subsequently made by which that Senator yielded to the Senator from West Virginia. The Senator from West Virginia was recognized in the person of his colleague. The Chair then promised the Senator from Maryland, [Mr. WHYTE.] He was the next one that spoke. The Chair then promised the Senator from Rhode Island, [Mr. BURNSIDE,] who was the next one who spoke. The Chair then promised the Senator from Georgia, [Mr. BROWN,] who was the next one who spoke, and who has given place to his colleague; and the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. WINDOM] was the next one to speak. All these Senators were upon the floor and claiming the recognition of the Chair at the same time.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, where do I come in?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair had to recognize some one of them.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I hope, then, gentlemen will wait until I get my bill through.

Mr. McDONALD. I shall not undertake to antagonize it; but I feel some responsibility for some measures that I regard as somewhat in my charge, and I want to discharge the duty that I feel incumbent upon me, and if I can know when there is a chance of recognition I shall be happy. I want to be recognized at the earliest moment.

Mr. McMILLAN. I have no desire to occupy the attention of the Senate any great length of time. I would suggest, however, that there would be much less confusion and the order of the Senate would be better preserved if the Chair would call gentlemen in the order in which they have intimated their desire to take the floor, for there is a great rush for recognition, causing a great deal of confusion.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. Regular order, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. My motion is to take up a small bill which has been unanimously reported by the Committee on Claims of both Houses and passed unanimously by the House of Representatives. It is House bill No. 1996.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 1996) for the relief of W. A. Reid. It provides for the payment to W. A. Reid, of Eatonton, Georgia, of $194.50 for advertising done for the Government in 1867, by direction of the Secretary of War.

Mr. THURMAN. I do not want to talk about this bill, but I wish to say a word about the question of recognizing Senators. I recollect some time ago that I sat in the chair at the request of the Vice-President, and I found on his desk a list of Senators who wished to speak on the then pending measure. That list was handed to me, I supposed, for my observance, and I did observe it and recognize gentlemen just in the order they were put down. I got about half way down the list when I was taken to task by some members of the Senate for following that list, and I was inquired of what right I had to recognize Senators according to that list which was before me. I stated the fact, and the Senate did not censure me nor put me out of the chair, but some of the most experienced Senators gave me to understand that I was doing wrong.

I did not think I was doing wrong; but that was upon a great public measure, and a measure in which party entered, and the list that was made out was perfectly fair to both sides of the Chamber, and I thought it was a good thing to follow it. But I must say that the idea of recognizing in an arranged order Senators in order to move to take up independent bills is a thing that I never heard of before now. I never thought there was any harm when a great public measure was up for Senators to indicate their disposition to speak and for their names to be put down on a list; but upon the question of who shall be recognized to get up and move a particular bill in which he is interested I never have thought that that discretion belonged to the Chair. I think when half a dozen Senators rise at the same time the Chair must of necessity exercise a discretion which one he will recognize, and he may exercise it very justly and fairly in favor of a Senator who has not troubled the Senate much, and who has particular claims to be heard; but that there should be any previous arrangement as to what Senators should be recognized to move to take up independent bills is a thing that I do not think is admissible. I have nothing to say upon this particular bill.

Mr. SAULSBURY. In that connection I would say that if the Chair knew that several gentlemen desired to be recognized who had matters in charge, I think it would be a very proper thing that they should be recognized in some order.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I rise to a question of order.

Mr. BUTLER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. Let the bill get through. The bill is before the Senate, and there is no objection to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from South Carolina to proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I hope the Senator from South Carolina will withdraw that motion until the bill is passed. Nobody objects to the bill, and it is already up.

Mr. BUTLER. How long is it going to take?

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. It will not take one minute.

Mr. BUTLER. I withdraw the motion for that bill.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. The motion is withdrawn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion being withdrawn, the consideration of the bill will be proceeded with.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. TELLER. I do not desire to antagonize the bill, because I know it ought to pass; but I want to call the attention of the Senate to the unfair method of proceeding in this way, and I do it on this bill that I may be in order, and not that I have any objection to the bill. At the head of the list on that page of the Calendar is another case from the same State, having probably as much merit as this one, the case being that of an old lady, a widow, and it ought to be passed. On two pages of the Calendar are seventeen bills that came from the House, and every one of them would pass without objection in the Senate if we could get to the Calendar. We have lost more time in trying to get up cases out of their order than would have been required to pass these bills if we had gone to the Calendar. When five o'clock comes and somebody makes a motion for a recess, every Senator who has had the ear of the Chair and who has had the courtesy of the Senate in getting up his bill will promptly vote to adjourn. That has been done here every night, while upon the record we have a rule which provides that we shall have night sessions. We have had one single night session, and we did more business at that night session than we should have done in twice the length of time in the day, because everybody felt then that he had no right to delay the Senate.

Mr. ROLLINS and others. Regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on ordering the bill to a third reading.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT MINNEAPOLIS.

Mr. WINDOM. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 1962) appropriating money for the purchase of a site and the erection of a suitable building for a post-office and other Government offices in the city of Minneapolis, State of Minnesota, which has been unanimously reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and I think it will not take any time.

Mr. BUTLER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. WINDOM. I hope not. I have called up the bill and it can be acted on in a minute.

Mr. BUTLER. I have made the motion and decline to withdraw it.

Mr. WINDOM. I hope the Senate will vote it down.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from South Carolina that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 22, noes 22.

Mr. BUTLER. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. WINDOM. I hope that the motion will not prevail. This is the first time during the session that I have asked to take up any bill of this nature, in which my own constituents were interested, and I hope the Senate will give me the opportunity to have it heard. I have very frequently yielded to others for the purpose of bringing up bills, and I hope that this courtesy may be extended to me at this time.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I wish to make an inquiry. If we should go into executive session now would this bill be the unfinished business. Has the bill been taken up?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill has not been taken up. The question is on the motion to proceed to the consideration of executive business, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 25, nays 39; as follows:

YEAS—25.

Bailey,	Hampton,	Morgan,	Vance,
Bayard,	Johnston,	Pendleton,	Walker,
Beck,	Jonas,	Pugh,	Wallace,

ABSENT—11.

Blaine,	Garland,	Jones of Nevada,	Sharon,

So the motion was not agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. WINDOM] to proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 1962.

Mr. BECK. Let the bill be reported. If we are going into this thing of calling up bills by bargaining, I want to know what we are bargaining about.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Chief Clerk read the bill.

Mr. BECK. I have as little objection to a public building being erected in the town of Minneapolis as perhaps any other man in the Senate, but I object to the way in which this bill is to be taken up, and I object to the arrangement by which gentlemen are recognized as stated by the Chair. I want to go to the Calendar and proceed regularly, and not to have a general scramble all the time. I desire to look into this matter with regard to Minneapolis. Around the Falls of Saint Anthony in the last few years a large amount of money has been expended. I should like to have things go with a little more regularity, and I shall endeavor to do what I can to have it so.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would have been deeply grateful to the Senator from Kentucky had he moved to proceed to the consideration of the Calendar. It would have been a great relief to the Senate. The motion has not been made as yet.

Mr. WINDOM. I want to say a single word on the bill. It was unanimously reported by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. Minneapolis is a city of 50,000 inhabitants or more. We are now paying $3,000 a year rent for the post-office, and the accommodations are entirely inadequate. The cheapest thing the Government can do is to pass the bill and put up the building.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Minnesota, to proceed to the consideration of the bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 1962) appropriating money for the purchase of a site and the erection of a suitable building for a post-office and other Government offices in the city of Minneapolis, State of Minnesota.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds with an amendment in section 1, line 12, after the words "provided, that" to insert "the site purchased shall leave the building unexposed to danger from fire in adjacent building by an open space not less than fifty feet, including streets and alleys, and that."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PENDLETON obtained the floor.

Mr. BECK. I endeavored to state long before the Presiding Officer announced that the ayes had it on the passage of the bill, and in as loud a tone of voice as I could, that I desired to make a motion, and that was that the Senate adjourn, before the bill was passed. I was standing here and in a very loud tone of voice addressing the Chair.

Mr. PENDLETON. I submit that the Senator was out of order in addressing the Chair while the vote was being announced, and therefore was not entitled to be recognized.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the Senator from Kentucky desires, the Chair will place the bill back in the position it was before its final passage, and he can then make his motion. ["Too late."] If the Senator from Kentucky desires it, that course will be pursued and he may then make his motion.

Mr. BECK. Not after what has occurred.

THE BRIG GENERAL ARMSTRONG.

Mr. PENDLETON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 1441) for the relief of the captain, owners, officers, and crew of the late United States private-armed brig General Armstrong, their heirs, executors, administrators, or assigns.

Mr. GARLAND. Let the bill be read for information.

The Chief Clerk read the bill.

Mr. GARLAND. If I recollect aright the bill has gone through a consideration as in Committee of the Whole and the question stands on its passage.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct. The question when the bill comes before the Senate will be on its final passage. The question now is whether the Senate will take it up and proceed with it.

Mr. MORRILL. If there is a report in this case, I ask to have it read.

Mr. WHYTE. Let us get the bill up first.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is a report in the case. The question now is on taking up the bill. Does the Senator from Vermont ask for the reading of the report now?

Mr. MORRILL. Not until after the bill shall have been taken up, and then I will ask for it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Ohio to proceed to the consideration of the bill which has been read.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HARRIS. Now that the bill called for by the Senator from Ohio is before the Senate, I ask the Senator from Ohio if he will yield to me to move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. PENDLETON. I will do so after the bill shall have been reported.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be read by its title.

The CHIEF CLERK. "A bill (S. No. 1441) for the relief of the captain, owners, officers, and crew of the late United States private-armed brig General Armstrong, their heirs, executors, administrators, or assigns."

Mr. HARRIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After one hour and twenty-three minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at six o'clock p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, February 25, 1881.

The House met at eleven o'clock a. m. Prayer by Rev. DAVID WILLS, chaplain United States Army.

JOURNAL OF YESTERDAY.

The SPEAKER. On account of the length of yesterday's session extending to within fifteen minutes of eleven o'clock, the hour of the meeting of the House to-day, it has been a physical impossibility for the journal clerk to prepare the Journal of the proceedings of the legislative day of yesterday. The Chair would ask that the Journal may be read to-morrow morning instead of to-day.

There was no objection.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. PRICE. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table a Senate pension bill for the benefit of a feeble old man, for present consideration.

The SPEAKER. The Chair, in entertaining requests for unanimous consent, is bound to give the first recognition to the gentleman from California, [Mr. PACHECO,] who was on the floor heretofore to request unanimous consent, but was cut off by the call for the regular order. The Chair will state that he will endeavor at this time to give as many recognitions to gentlemen to request unanimous consent as he can. There is not yet a quorum present.

WILLIAM H. DAVIS.

Mr. PACHECO. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Private Calendar, for present consideration, the bill (H. R. No. 6860) for the relief of William H. Davis. I will say that this bill has been reported favorably by the Committee on War Claims.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, after which objections, if any, will be in order.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause to be investigated by the Quartermaster's Department of the United States Army the alleged taking by the United States authorities, for the use of the United States troops, during the years 1861 and 1862, of a certain wharf and warehouse property, formerly situated in San Diego, California, alleged to have been the property of William H. Davis, of Oakland, California, and to have been used by troops of the United States for fuel; such investigations to extend to the title of the property and the incumbrances thereon, the status of the owner, whether loyal or not, the value of the property destroyed, the circumstances of the destruction, and by whose direction, authority, or permission it was destroyed, and the reasons for the neglect to give notice to the War Department at or soon after the destruction occurred; and when such investigation shall be completed the Secretary of War shall report the result thereof, with his recommendation thereon, to Congress for action in the premises.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. WARNER. Is this reported by a committee?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California has stated that the bill has been reported favorably by the Committee on War Claims.

Mr. ATHERTON. It is a unanimous report from our committee.

Mr. BERRY. The whole substance of the bill is simply to provide for an examination and investigation to be made by the Quartermaster's Department with a view to ascertaining whether there has been any property taken, and if so, the status of the owner. That is all. A report has to be made to Congress and Congress must act on the matter before there is any final result.

There being no objection, the Committee of the Whole was discharged from the further consideration of the bill, and it was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BERRY moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SUPPRESSING INDIAN HOSTILITIES IN FLORIDA.

Mr. DAVIDSON. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of the joint resolution (S. R. No. 79) directing the Secretary of War to investigate the claim of the State of Forida against the United States for expenditures made in suppressing Indian hostilities in said State between the years 1855 and 1860, and to report the result of such investigation to Congress, and that it be brought before the House for consideration.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Whereas the State of Florida claims from the United States to be reimbursed for expenditures made by said State in suppressing Indian hostilities in said State: Therefore,

Resolved, &c., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to investigate, ascertain, and report to Congress, as soon as practicable, the amount of the claims of the State of Florida for expenditures made in suppressing Indian hostilities in that State between the 1st day of December, 1855, and the 1st day of January, 1860. In making such investigation the said Secretary is directed to receive and consider such testimony as he may deem necessary or proper for or against claims, including the muster-rolls of the State troops, and such other official data as may be on file in the War Department. In submitting his report to Congress the said Secretary shall not include any payments or allowances made by the State in excess of the amounts allowed by law at the time in behalf of troops regularly in the service of the United States.

Mr. DAVIDSON. This resolution has been considered favorably by the House Committee on Claims.

Mr. WARNER. I reserve the point of order until I hear something further about it.

Mr. DAVIDSON. I have nothing to say further than that this joint resolution has passed the Senate, and has been considered favorably by the Committee on Claims of the House. There is not a dollar to be paid out under the joint resolution.

Mr. WARNER. At what date were these expenses incurred?

Mr. DAVIDSON. Between the years 1855 and 1860.

Mr. WARNER. I would be disposed to vote against the resolution, but I do not like standing up here to defeat the resolution by interposing a single objection.

Mr. HASKELL. It simply provides for an investigation.

Mr. DAVIDSON. The resolution merely directs the Secretary of War to investigate these claims, just as in the Kansas case.

There being no objection, the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union was discharged from the further consideration of the joint resolution, and it was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. DAVIDSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

OTOE AND MISSOURIA RESERVATION.

Mr. VALENTINE. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. No. 753) to provide for the sale of the remainder of the reservation of the confederated Otoe and Missouria tribes of Indians in the States of Nebraska and Kansas, and for other purposes.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That with the consent of the Otoe and Missouria tribes of Indians, expressed in open council, the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to cause to be surveyed and sold the remainder of the reservation of said Indians lying in the States of Kansas and Nebraska.

SEC. 2. That the lands so surveyed shall be appraised by three commissioners, one of whom shall be designated by said Indians in open council, and the other two by the Secretary of the Interior.

SEC. 3. That after the survey and appraisement of said lands the Secretary of the Interior shall be, and hereby is, authorized to offer the same for sale through the United States public-land office at Beatrice, Nebraska, in tracts not exceeding one hundred and sixty acres, for cash, to actual settlers, or persons who shall make oath before the register or the receiver of the land-office at Beatrice, Nebraska, that they intend to occupy the land for authority to purchase which they make application, and who shall within three months from the date of such application make a permanent settlement upon the same, in tracts not exceeding one hundred and sixty acres to each purchaser: Provided, That if, in the judgment of the Secretary of the Interior, it shall be more advantageous to sell said lands upon deferred payments, he may, with the consent of the Indians, expressed in open council, dispose of the same upon the following terms as to payments, that is to say: One-quarter in cash, to become due and payable at the expiration of three months from the date of the filing of an application as hereinbefore required, one-quarter in one year, one-quarter in two years, and one-quarter in three years from the date of sale, with interest at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum; but in case of default in the cash payment as hereinbefore required, the person thus defaulting shall forfeit absolutely his right to the tract for the purchase of which he has applied: And provided further, That whenever any person shall apply under the provisions of this act to purchase a tract containing a fractional excess over one hundred and sixty acres, if the excess is less than forty acres, is contiguous, and results from inability in the survey to make township and section lines conform to the boundary lines of the reservation, his application shall not be rejected on account of such excess; but if no other objection exists the purchase shall be allowed as in other cases: And provided further, That no portion of said land shall be sold at less than the appraised value thereof, and in no case less than $2.50 per acre.

SEC. 4. That the proceeds of the sale of said lands shall be placed to the credit of said Indians in the Treasury of the United States, and shall bear interest at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum, which income shall be annually expended for the benefit of said Indians under direction of the Secretary of the Interior.

SEC. 5. That the Secretary of the Interior may, with the consent of the Indians, expressed in open council, secure other reservation lands upon which to locate said Indians, cause their removal thereto, and expend such sum as may be necessary for their comfort and advancement in civilization, not exceeding $100,000, including cost of surveys and expense of removal, the same to be drawn from the fund arising from the sale of their reservation lands under the act approved August 15, 1876.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. WARNER. That is a bill of some length. I would like to inquire from what committee it comes?

Mr. VALENTINE. It is reported unanimously by the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. MILLS. Is the land to be sold to the highest bidder?

Mr. VALENTINE. I understand so.

Mr. MILLS. The provision of the bill is that no portion of the land shall be sold at less than its appraised value and in no case less than $2.50 per acre.

Mr. VALENTINE. The lands are to be appraised by a board of three commissioners, the Indians in council appointing one and the Secretary of the Interior the other two. This is asked by the Department and by the residents of both States. There is no objection to it anywhere.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. VALENTINE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

TENTS, ETC., FOR ENCAMPMENT IN TEXAS.

Mr. MILLS. I ask unanimous consent to introduce for present consideration a joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to turn over to Governor Roberts, of Texas, such tents, poles, and pins as he may require for the use of the volunteers of the State for their encampment for the year 1881.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Be it resolved, &c., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to turn over to Governor Roberts, of Texas, such tents, poles, and pins, and camp and garrison equipage as he may require and as may be in the quartermaster's department at San Antonio, Texas, for the use of the volunteers of said State at their summer encampment for 1881. The quartermaster at San Antonio shall take a good and sufficient bond for the return of such property in good condition after said encampment, provided the Secretary of War approve thereof.

Mr. MILLS. That is a copy literally of the resolution passed in 1878 to lend these tents, &c., for the same encampment in that year of our militia. They have been returned to the department again in accordance with the bond then given.

There being no objection, the joint resolution (H. R. No. 413) was read three times, and passed.

LEVI PRICE.

Mr. URNER. I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar from the further consideration of House bill No. 6478, for the relief of Levi Price.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, after which the Chair will ask for objections.

The bill was read as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to pay Levi Price, of Frederick County, Maryland, the sum of $200, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated; and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed to cause to be credited to said Levi Price by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue the sum of $1,740.23, the amount of tax improperly assessed against him.

Mr. WARNER. From what committee does this come?

Mr. URNER. From the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. WARNER. Is it the unanimous report of that committee?

Mr. URNER. It is unanimous on the part of those members of the committee who considered it.

There being no objection, the bill was brought before the House for consideration, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time and passed.

Mr. URNER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BELFORD. I desire to ask how this business is being transacted?

The SPEAKER. To-day is a day within the scope of the rule providing for suspension of the rules, being one of the last six days of the session. Until an undoubted quorum is present in the House the Chair thought it would be advisable to allow members to present propositions requiring unanimous consent.

Mr. BELFORD. I desire to say that when the resolution reported from the Committee on Rules by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. FRYE] was adopted, in regard to an hour for the consideration of business to which there were not five objections, it was amended so as to take effect on the following Wednesday. I was unaware that the resolution had been amended, and was not in the House on the morning it went into effect, and therefore was not here to respond when my State was called. As I was unavoidably absent, and also misapprehended the effect of the resolution, being unaware that it had been amended, I ask the Chair to recognize me to call up a bill some time to-day. I do not ask that it be done at this moment.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has no objection to recognizing the gentleman. The Chair supposes the gentleman is referring now to a bill for a public building in his State.

Mr. BELFORD. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has no objection to recognizing the gentleman under the five-objection rule, or in his regular order when there is a quorum present. Until there is a quorum present the Chair was of the opinion that a great many matters pressed by members, and which were really not objectionable to any one, could be considered and acted upon.

DODD, BROWN & CO., OF SAINT LOUIS.

Mr. FROST. I ask consent to take from the Speaker's table for consideration at this time Senate bill No. 1181, for the relief of Dodd, Brown & Co., of Saint Louis, Missouri.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, after which the Chair will ask for objections.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the sum of $58,659.46 be, and is hereby, appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the payment of Dodd, Brown & Co., of Saint Louis, Missouri, as assignees of E. H. Durfee & Co., Durfee & Peck, John Shirley, Durfee & Peck, William Shirley, and Lemuel Spooner, respectively, said claims having been severally approved by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and by him reported to the Secretary of the Interior and transmitted to Congress for allowance.

To reimburse said sums there shall be withheld from the moneys due or to become due to the Comanche Indians, $7,541.75, under the treaty with that tribe; and from the moneys due or to become due to the Sioux Indians, $3,085 and $24,694.62, respectively; and from the moneys due or to become due to the Kiowa Indians, $5,520; and from the moneys due or to become due to the Kiowa and Comanche Indians, $3,900 and $13,918.09, respectively, the proportion of the two last-named sums to be charged against the said Kiowa and Comanche tribes as may be ascertained by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to be justly chargeable against them respectively.

Mr. ROBINSON. Does that bill come from any committee?

Mr. FROST. If the House will permit me for a moment to explain.

Mr. ROBINSON. I will reserve all points of order until the gentleman has made his statement.

Mr. FROST. This bill has passed the Senate, and a similar bill has been favorably reported unanimously by the Committee on Indian Affairs of the House. It passed the Senate last June. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DEERING] is perhaps more familiar with the circumstances of this case than I am. As I understand it, the claim is one which was allowed by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, but owing to some technicality it had to come before the House.

Mr. BREWER. Who reported the bill?

Mr. DEERING. I would state for the information of the House that a similar bill to this was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs of the House, and was carefully examined by that committee. I myself was chairman of the sub-committee to which it was referred. The claim is for depredations committed by several tribes of Indians, and for property destroyed by those Indians.

Mr. BREWER. Is it all right?

Mr. DEERING. After a careful examination, the committee believe it to be a just claim.

Mr. BREWER. That is enough.

Mr. WARNER. We are not going to vote these things through without knowing something about them.

Mr. SPRINGER. This is to be deducted from the Indian funds.

Mr. WARNER. Have you any right to deduct it from that fund?

Mr. DEERING. It does not propose to take a dollar from the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. WARNER. You may be taking it from the Indians when you have no right to do so.

Mr. DEERING. The most of them assent to it.

Mr. WARNER. Is not this the same bill that was brought up at the last session?

Mr. FROST. This bill has not been before the House before this time.

Mr. WARNER. Has it the approval of the Committee on Indian Affairs?

Mr. DEERING. It has.

There being no objection, the bill was taken from the Speaker's table, read three several times, and passed.

Mr. FROST moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed, and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JOHN H. TEMPLETON.

Mr. KETCHAM. I ask consent that the Committee of the Whole be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 7160) for the relief of John H. Templeton.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, after which the Chair will ask for objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Postmaster-General be authorized, and he is hereby directed, to credit John H. Templeton, postmaster at Millerton, State of New York, the sum of $576.64 in his account with the Post-Office Department, being the amount stolen from his safe in the post-office at said village, by burglars, on the night of the 3d day of August, 1880; the said amount being made up of $486.64 in postage-stamps and $90 in postage funds, so stolen.

Mr. HAYES. Does this bill come from any committee?

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not know.

Mr. STONE. This bill is unanimously reported from the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads. I made the report myself.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. KETCHAM moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JAMES B. WHITE.

Mr. ATHERTON. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 1560) granting a pension to James B. White, and that the bill be now put on its passage. The Committee on Invalid Pensions has made a unanimous report in favor of the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place the name of James B. White, late a private of Company B, of the Sixty-second Regiment of Ohio Volunteers, on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

M. F. CLARK.

Mr. GILLETTE. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. No. 76) for the relief of M. F. Clark, and that the House now proceed to the consideration of the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to M. F. Clark the sum of $510, being the value of three horses and one mule purchased of said Clark by Lieutenant E. D. Hillyer, acting assistant quartermaster, and Captain E. J. Barnes, assistant quartermaster, in the year 1864, and paid for to other parties upon vouchers fraudulently obtained and receipts the signatures to which were forged.

Mr. GILLETTE. A bill similar to this was passed by the House in the last Congress; and the present bill has been passed by the Senate in this Congress. There has been a unanimous report in favor of the bill presented by the gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. SAMFORD.]

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

HENRY F. LINES.

Mr. COWGILL. I ask unanimous consent to have taken from the Speaker's table and put on its passage the bill (S. No. 326) for the relief of Henry F. Lines.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay to Henry F. Lines, late a private in Company B, First Illinois Artillery, the sum of $360 in full payment and satisfaction of all his claim, pay, and allowance as a soldier and as a military-telegraph operator from June 1, 1865, to September 18, 1865, both inclusive, and upon such payment to close the account of said Lines on the books of his Department.

Mr. WARNER. I do not understand why such a claim as this could not be settled in the Department. Why is a special act needed?

Mr. COWGILL. There is a unanimous report in favor of this bill. This man was in the service of the United States during the war, and was detailed to do duty as a telegraph operator. He served in this capacity some three or four months after he had been mustered out of the service; and for this period he never received pay.

There being no objection, the bill was taken up, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. COWGILL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ISABEL M. EVANS.

Mr. CABELL. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. No. 367) granting increase of pension to Isabel M. Evans, and that the bill be now put on its passage. It has been unanimously reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, to increase the pension of Isabel L. Evans and Isabel M. Evans, widow and infant child of John J. Evans, deceased, late draughtsman on board the United States vessel Huron, who are now receiving a pension of $8 per month and $2 per month, respectively, to the rate provided by law for the widow and infant child of an ensign in the naval service of the United States; the said increase to date from the 24th day of November, 1877. And the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed to pay to the said Isabel L. Evans and her child, out of any moneys in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, the sum of money necessary to carry into effect the provisions of this act.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill; which was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BARGE W. J. SPICER.

Mr. CONGER. I ask unanimous consent to have taken from the House Calendar and considered now the joint resolution (H. R. No. 401) in relation to the barge W. J. Spicer. This resolution has been considered by the Committee on Ways and Means, whose report, as I understand, is unanimous.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, &c., That the barge W. J. Spicer, built in Canada but bought by an American citizen and brought into the United States, on payment of duties on the materials entering into her construction be admitted to the privileges extended to barges of American build and ownership by "An act relating to vessels not propelled by sail or internal motive power of their own, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1879.

Mr. CONGER. This resolution has not only the recommendation of the Committee on Ways and Means, but also the recommendation of the Secretary of the Treasury.

There being no objection the House proceeded to the consideration of the joint resolution; which was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

ANDREW J. PENNEL.

Mr. MULLER. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 7111) restoring the name of Andrew J. Pennel to the pension-roll, and that the House proceed to the consideration of the same.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to restore to the pension-roll the name of Andrew J. Pennel, late of Company F, Fifty-seventh Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers; and he shall be paid, on his pension certificate No. 58722, the original amount allowed him from the date his name was dropped from said roll.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill; which was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

RAILROAD CHARGES AND DISCRIMINATIONS.

Mr. DAGGETT, by unanimous consent, presented a joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Nevada in relation to railroad charges and discriminations in that State; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD. It is as follows:

Joint resolution to the Congress of the United States in relation to discrimination in fares and freights by interstate railroad companies.

Whereas the people of the State of Nevada have long suffered and do now suffer under the impositions and exactions of the Central Pacific Railroad Company, which, besides retarding enterprise, injures the business and prosperity of the people of this State, and amounts to the most enormous, unjust, and oppressive tax ever laid upon the industry of a people. The said railroad company exercises over the persons and property of others an almost absolute power, vicious and tyrannical, destructive of the rights of persons and of property, and opposed to common justice, as well as to every principle of civil and constitutional liberty known since the days of Magna Charta; and

Whereas it is proper that the truth should be known concerning this corporation and its transactions, the following facts are herein stated: The people of Palisade, distant four hundred and thirty-five miles east from Sacramento, have to pay for freight on flour (fourth-class freight, per published special-rate tariff of Central Pacific Railroad) per car load the sum of $282 from Sacramento, while the people of Toano, one hundred and twenty-nine miles further east, pay freight on flour per car load, according to the printed special rate, the sum of $275 per car load, while the merchant having a contract for some so-called competitive point with this railroad company pays freight on the same article, to wit, flour, per car load, only $200. The merchant at Toano, having a special contract, pays $82 per car load less freight than the merchant at Palisade, although, as before mentioned, the carriage is one hundred and twenty-nine miles more. The goods delivered at Palisade or Battle Mountain, distant respectively four hundred and thirty-five and three hundred and eighty-three miles from Sacramento, have a freight charge of $480 per car load, while at Toano the freight amounts to $275 per car load to persons having special contract rates for so-called competitive points, the greater service being performed for the less amount. Persons shipping wool or other products from Palisade, Battle Mountain, Elko, or other points in this State to the Eastern States, have to pay local rates to Sacramento, thence freight at through rates back over the same road to the point of destination, the shipper being often compelled to pay freight at local rates for a distance of over five hundred miles, a service useless and unnecessary even if rendered. The same unjust discrimination is practiced by this railroad company against the people of this State in the rates of freight upon goods shipped from points east of this State. The freight on a box of eggs from Ogden to Toano costs one man $3.35 per box, and the same number of eggs, in the same sized box, and of the same weight, costs another man sixty-five cents. A hundred pounds of squashes costs one man in freight $1.36, while it costs another fifty-five cents. Hams and case goods costs one man $2.04, while it costs another but fifty-five cents. The distance from Ogden to Toano is one hundred and eighty-three miles. The same unjust discrimination is also practiced by this railroad company in passenger fares. A ticket from Omaha to San Francisco costs $100, while a ticket from Omaha to Palisade, being six hundred miles nearer, costs $95. A person desiring to go East is charged within a fraction of the full fare, through and from San Francisco to the point he desires to reach, although he may ride over one-third or less of the line of the Central Pacific Railroad. More appalling examples of injustice than are shown by the above instances, selected from among a myriad of kindred transgressions, are hard to conceive; and

Whereas such pernicious practices should be no longer tolerated: Therefore,

Be it by the senate and assembly conjointly resolved, That the passage of the bill now before Congress, known as the Reagan bill, prohibiting discrimination in fares and freights on interstate railroads, will be hailed with joy by the people of this State as a measure of justice and relief.

Resolved, That our Senators in Congress be instructed and our Representatives requested to vote for and use all honorable means in their power to secure the earliest passage of said Reagan bill.

Resolved, That his excellency the governor is hereby requested to transmit an engrossed copy of these resolutions, under the great seal of the State, at the earliest moment, to each of our Representatives in Congress.

STATE OF NEVADA,
Secretary's Office, ss:

I, Jasper Babcock, secretary of State of the State of Nevada, do hereby certify that the foregoing is a true, full, and correct copy of the original joint resolution which passed the Nevada Legislature February 10, 1881, on file in my office.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of State. Done at office in Carson City, Nevada, this 12th day of February, A. D. 1881.

[SEAL.] JASPER BABCOCK,
Secretary of State,
By J. J. CHESLEY, Deputy.

Mr. DAGGETT addressed the House. [See Appendix.]

FIRST NATIONAL BANK, MERIDEN, CONNECTICUT.

Mr. PHELPS. I ask unanimous consent to have taken from the Speaker's table and considered the bill (S. No. 1905) changing the name of the First National Bank of West Meriden, in the county of New Haven, and State of Connecticut.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the name of the First National Bank of West Meriden, in the county of New Haven, and State of Connecticut, shall be changed to the First National Bank of Meriden, Connecticut, whenever the board of directors of said bank shall accept the new name by resolution of the board, and cause a copy of said resolution, duly authenticated, to be filed with the Comptroller of the Currency: Provided, That such acceptance be made within six months after the passage of this act; and that all expenses incident to such change, including engraving, shall be borne and paid by said bank.

SEC. 2. That the debts, dividends, liabilities, rights, privileges, and powers of the First National Bank of West Meriden, in the county of New Haven, and State of Connecticut, shall devolve upon and inure to the First National Bank of Meriden, Connecticut, whenever such change of name is effected.

Mr. PHELPS. That becomes necessary to conform to the name of the place where the bank is located.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PHELPS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LOAN OF TENTS TO SOLDIERS' REUNIONS IN INDIANA AND IOWA.

Mr. ORTH, by unanimous consent, introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 414) relative to loaning tents for soldiers' reunions in Indiana and Iowa; which was read a first and second time.

The joint resolution, which was read, authorizes the Secretary of War to loan to the adjutant-general of the State of Indiana five hundred wall or marquee tents, to be used at a soldiers' reunion to be held at La Fayette, Indiana, during the month of September, 1881, upon said adjutant-general executing, or causing to be executed, to said Secretary of War a sufficient bond for the safe-keeping and return of the same. It further authorizes the Secretary of War to sell and deliver to said adjutant-general 50,000 rounds of blank cartridges for breech-loading rifles at the cost price thereof, for the use of said reunion.

It further authorizes the Secretary of War to loan to the Soldiers' Reunion Society of Benton County, Iowa, two hundred tents from the arsenal at Rock Island, Illinois, to be used in a soldiers' reunion to be held at Vinton, Iowa, during the ensuing fall; provided said association shall execute, or cause to be executed, to said Secretary a sufficient bond for the safe-keeping and return of the same.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ORTH moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. COX. I ask to take from the Speaker's table Senate joint resolution No. 156, in relation to the international exhibition of 1883.

Mr. SPARKS. I demand the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER. The regular order of business is the morning hour.

Mr. O'NEILL. I hope the regular order of business will not be demanded, and that we may all have a chance for unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois demand the regular order against the request of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. CALDWELL and Mr. SPARKS demanded the regular order.

MEMORIAL ADDRESSES ON EVARTS W. FARR.

Mr. WILSON. I rise to make a privileged report from the Committee on Printing. I report back from that committee joint resolution (H. R. No. 402) to provide for the publication of the memorial addresses on Evarts W. Farr, with amendments.

The SPEAKER. The joint resolution will first be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, &c., That there be printed 12,000 copies of the memorial addresses delivered in the Senate and House of Representatives upon the life and character of Hon. Evarts W. Farr, late a Representative from the State of New Hampshire, together with a portrait of the deceased; 9,000 copies thereof for the use of the House of Representatives and 3,000 copies for the use of the Senate. And a sum sufficient to defray the expense of preparing and printing the portrait of the deceased for the publication herein provided for is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The SPEAKER. The amendments of the Committee on Printing will be reported by the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 3, strike out "12" and insert "5;" so it will read: "That there be printed 5,000 copies of the memorial addresses," &c.

In line 7, strike out "9" and insert "4;" and in line 8, strike out "3" and insert "1;" so it will read "4,000 copies for the use of the House and 1,000 for the use of the Senate."

Mr. BRIGGS. I hope the amendments reported from the Committee on Printing will not be agreed to. In the original resolution I have only asked for the usual number to be printed of these memorial addresses.

Mr. WILSON. The original resolution provides for a larger number than is ordinarily printed of these memorial addresses. There have been, of course, some exceptions where distinguished men of national reputation have died when a larger number has been ordered to be printed. But, sir, I will not press the amendments against the gentleman from New Hampshire.

Mr. BRIGGS. I am very glad the gentleman does not press his amendments, and I hope they will be disagreed to.

The amendments were disagreed to.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BRIGGS moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PRINTING REPORTS OF TENTH CENSUS.

Mr. WILSON also, from the Committee on Printing, reported back joint resolution (H. R. No. 405) to print the report of the tenth census of the United States.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, &c., That there be printed, in quarto form, 50,000 copies of the report on population of the tenth census of the United States, together with maps, diagrams, and charts illustrative of the same; 31,500 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, 13,500 for the use of the Senate, and 5,000 for the use of the Census Office.

SEC. 2. That there be printed of such of the other reports, comprising the industrial and social statistics of the tenth census of the United States, as may be ready for publication prior to the first regular session of the Forty-seventh Congress 5,000 copies of each, in quarto form, inclusive of maps, diagrams, and charts illustrating the same; of which 3,000 copies shall be for the use of the House of Representatives, 1,000 for the use of the Senate, and 1,000 for the use of the Census Office.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WILSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

INTERNATIONAL EXHIBITION.

Mr. COX. I understand objection is withdrawn to my request to take from the Speaker's table joint resolution (S. R. No. 156) in relation to the international exhibition of 1883.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection and the resolution will be taken from the Speaker's table, and the question is on its third reading.

The joint resolution, as read, authorizes and requests the President, whenever he shall deem the preparations which shall have been made therefor adequate, to invite, in the name of the United States, all foreign governments to be represented at and take part in the international exhibition of arts, manufactures, and products of the soil and mine to be held, under the direction of the United States international commission, at the city of New York, in the State of New York, in the year 1883; provided, however, that the United States shall not be liable directly or indirectly for any of the expenses attending such exhibition or by reason of the invitation hereby authorized.

Mr. COX. This joint resolution has been indorsed by the Committee on Foreign Affairs unanimously, and it has already passed the Senate.

Mr. WARNER. It does not involve the Government in any expenditure.

Mr. COX. None at all.

The joint resolution was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. COX moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SPARKS. I demand the regular order.

Mr. SPRINGER. The regular order being demanded I move to suspend the rules and discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 882) for the relief of L. S. Ensel, which I send to the desk.

Mr. BREWER. I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded.

Mr. SPRINGER. This is the regular order. I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill under the provisions of the rules of this House.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Speaker, I move to set aside private business to-day, and also move that the House dispense with the morning hour and proceed in Committee of the Whole to further consider the sundry civil appropriation bill.

Mr. SPRINGER. But I had the floor.

The SPEAKER. The Chair promotes the passage of appropriation bills in preference to private bills, and therefore gives the gentleman from Georgia the opportunity to present his motion.

Mr. SPRINGER. This is private bill day. This is the day set apart by the rules for the consideration of private business. This is the last private bill day of the session. Now, this is a private bill which I have indicated and which I desire to have taken taken up, and being the last private bill day I propose under the rules of the House and in pursuance of the demand for the regular order that we suspend the rules and pass the bill. I think, Mr. Speaker, we are entitled to this one day for private bills. We have not had a private bill day for a long time.

Mr. BRIGHT. I think so, too.

Mr. SPRINGER. The committees of this House have been laboring for two years in preparing private bills, and our Calendar is loaded with them. The labor of two years is on the Calendar, and but a brief time in the whole session of this House is allotted to the consideration of such business. The Private Calendar, as is very well known here, is seldom reached. We cannot pass half the bills on the Calendar. I therefore hope that this day, at all events being the last one in this session for the consideration of private business, will not be interfered with.

Several members demanded the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is the morning hour. The gentleman from Georgia now moves to dispense with the morning hour.

Mr. SPRINGER. Does the Chair decline to recognize my motion?

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not decline to recognize the motion of the gentleman, but gives the preference, as he has stated, to the general appropriation bills.

Mr. SPRINGER. Is the motion in order, then?

The SPEAKER. It is after the reading of the Journal. The Chair will remind the gentleman from Illinois that the Journal has not been read to-day, and, technically, his motion would not be in order until after that. The Chair, however, will take no advantage of that fact if the House desires to proceed with the consideration of private business.

Mr. SPRINGER. If I can make a compact with the Speaker to recognize me at some future time, I do not desire to press the motion now; but I hope that some time will be given to the consideration of these private bills.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will be glad to recognize the gentleman if he has the power to do so.

Mr. ANDERSON. I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ANDERSON. Would it be in order by a two-thirds vote to suspend proceedings under the rule?

The SPEAKER. That rule has expired by limitation. It is not operating now.

Mr. SAMFORD. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER, The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SAMFORD. I wish to ask if the morning hour is suspended if the new rule is in operation for the passage of bills by consent?

The SPEAKER. It is not. The new rule has expired by limitation.

Mr. COX. I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. COX. I wish to know if the apportionment bill then loses the effect of the previous question, which has been ordered upon it yesterday?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York was not pressing the motion to resume the consideration of the bill, and the Chair therefore recognized the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. COX. The Chair did not recognize my question. I asked if the previous question was still operating upon the bill.

The SPEAKER. Of course it retains its force and effect. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Georgia, to dispense with the morning hour.

Mr. SPRINGER. That will bring into operation the provision of the new rule, if adopted.

The SPEAKER. It will not. That rule, as the Chair has stated, has expired by limitation, and does not operate during the last six days of the session by special provision.

On the motion to dispense with the morning hour there were—ayes, 125, noes 29.

So (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the morning hour was dispensed with.

Mr. BLOUNT. I now move that the House go into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union to consider the sundry civil appropriation bill.

Mr. SPRINGER. I want to antagonize that motion with the private business set apart for to-day.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that to-day it will require a two-thirds vote to carry that motion.

Mr. SPRINGER. This is private bill day, and I antagonize the motion of the gentleman from Georgia.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 123, noes 17.

So (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the House determined to go into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose indicated.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia, in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole to consider the bill (H. R. No. 7203) making appropriations for the sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, and for other purposes. The Clerk will report the pending amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out paragraph beginning with line 668 and ending with line 674, as follows: "For printing and binding, under direction of the Secretary of War, of 10,000 copies of a compilation of the official records, Union and confederate, of the war of the rebellion, so far as the same may be ready for publication during the fiscal year, to be distributed as provided in the act approved June 16, 1880, $40,000."

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. ATKINS. I believe, as I made that motion to strike out, I ought to be entitled to the floor.

Mr. KEIFER. I am willing to yield the floor to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. ATKINS. Mr. Chairman, I have always voted in this House for this clause in the sundry civil appropriation bill, and voted for it in good faith, because I believed its object was a liberal, just, and patriotic one.

I felt the other day, when the preceding clause was voted out of the bill, that there was perhaps a mistake upon my part; that there was not a disposition to have a fair history of this country written. For, sir, I undertake to say that anything that does injustice to the one side or the other does injustice to the whole country. And in writing the history of this country, if anything perchance were said complimentary to the confederate soldier, I do not think it would detract from the Federal soldier. On the contrary, I think it would throw additional luster on the reputation and the glory of the Federal Army for the reason that they were the conquerors in this instance.

Now, Mr. Chairman, since I offered this amendment, offering it as I did with the motive I have expressed, I have been assured by distinguished gentlemen upon the other side that it was their purpose and their design that all the records that would throw light upon the late war should be at the control of the Government one way or the other. And with that view and with that feeling I withdraw my motion to strike out the paragraph.

Mr. WARNER. I am glad the gentleman withdraws it.

Mr. FORNEY. I now ask that my amendment which is pending to that paragraph be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

On line 668, after the word "for," insert "continuing the preparation of the publication of the official records, indexing, and proof-reading; and."

Mr. FORNEY. The words I insert are needed so as to make the language correspond with that of the paragraph in the last appropriation act.

Mr. BLOUNT. I have no objection to that amendment.

Mr. KEIFER. Let the paragraph be read as it will be if thus amended.

The paragraph as proposed to be amended was read.

Mr. KEIFER. That is all right.

The amendment was adopted.

The Clerk read the following:

Support of military prison at Fort Leavenworth, Kansas: For subsistence stores for three hundred and seventy-five prisoners, $20,531.25.

Mr. HAWLEY. I notice in this clause and those that follow a long catalogue of the expenses of this military prison. Appropriation is made for three hundred and seventy-five prisoners, that, I suppose, being the average number. I should be glad to know whether these prisoners earn anything; whether there is any balance on the other side of this account. There are penitentiaries in the country that pay their own expenses by the earnings of their prisoners. I ask the gentleman in charge of the bill is there any statement in the report of what those prisoners earn?

Mr. BLOUNT. This is the usual appropriation.

Mr. HAWLEY. I had hoped the committee had some information on that subject.

Mr. BLOUNT. Everything here is fixed by law, and we had no discretion.

Mr. HAWLEY. I do not question the items, but I wanted to know what became of the money these prisoners earn. I suppose it goes directly into the Treasury, and we appropriate de novo.

The Clerk read the following:

Appliances for disabled soldiers: For providing surgical appliances for persons disabled in the military or naval service of the United States, not otherwise provided for, $3,000.

Mr. HOSTETLER. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 762 insert the following:

"That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to transport free of charge subsidiary silver coin when requested to do so, provided that an equal amount of coin or currency shall have been deposited in the Treasury by the applicants; and that there is hereby appropriated $20,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for that purpose, and that the same be available from and after its passage."

Mr. HOSTETLER. The gentleman in charge of the bill has informed me he will not raise the point of order on my amendment. And I hope no other gentleman will do so. This is a matter of necessity to the country.

Mr. CLYMER. I would like to have some explanation of the purpose of the amendment.

Mr. CLAFLIN. I hope the gentleman from Pennsylvania will not make any point of order on this amendment. It provides for what is an absolute necessity.

Mr. CLYMER. I would like to know what it means.

Mr. CLAFLIN. You cannot get this subsidiary coin out of the Treasury without some means of transporting it to the people who require it. You have now $25,000,000 of it there.

Mr. GILLETTE. I would like to hear the amendment again read.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. CLYMER. I do not make the point of order.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Support of National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, current expenses, including construction and repairs: For the Central branch, for the Eastern branch, for the Northwestern branch, for the Southern branch, and for out-door relief and incidental expenses, $950,000: Provided, That the Secretary of War is directed to sell at public auction, after due advertisement, all the old clothing now held for the National Military Homes for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, and, upon proper estimates from time to time, to turn the proceeds over to the managers thereof. Said managers are authorized to estimate for building and maintenance at the Central branch of a building or buildings for the safe and proper keeping of the insane. And General John Love, of the State of Indiana, one of the managers of said homes, having died, General George B. McClellan, of the State of New Jersey, is hereby appointed to fill the vacancy for the unexpired term.

Mr. BROWNE. I move to amend in line 778 by striking out the words "General George B. McClellan, of the State of New Jersey," and insert in lieu thereof the words "General Daniel Macauley, of the State of Indiana."

Mr. WEAVER. I offer as an amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana what I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the word "died," to and including the words "New Jersey," and insert the following: "General Benjamin F. Butler, of the State of Massachusetts."

Mr. BROWNE. Mr. Chairman, there is already one of the managers of the Soldiers' Home a citizen and resident of the State of New York. It is stated in the bill that General McClellan is of the State of New Jersey. To vindicate the truth of history I may be permitted to say he is now a citizen of the city and the State of New York. His home is at Gramercy Park in New York City. I hold in my hand here a New York paper published within the last three or four days which gives an elaborate account of an entertainment or reception given by General McClellan at his residence, No. 5 Gramercy Park, in the city of New York.

I think there ought not to be two of the managers of these important institutions from the same State, although it may be so large a State as that of New York. General Love, by whose death the vacancy occurs, was a citizen of the State of Indiana and a most excellent man. I propose now, in order to make all things even, that we fill the vacancy by one who went into the service of the Government in his boyhood as a private soldier, participated in almost all the battles of the war, was several times severely wounded, and by his gallantry on the field won his way up through the different grades until he reached that of brigadier-general. Returning from the battle-fields after the war, he was elected for two consecutive terms mayor of the city of Indianapolis, the capital of his State, and while filling that office he acquitted himself to the satisfaction of all men of all political parties.

It is true that General Macauley is a republican. It is equally true that selections for this office ought to be non-partisan. They should be ex-soldiers, having sympathy with the inmates and the purposes of the institution, men of ability, fidelity, and in all respects capable of performing the duties assigned to them by their position. Such a man is General Macauley, of Indiana.

Mr. WEAVER. It is unnecessary, Mr. Chairman, for me to pronounce any eulogy upon the gentleman named in my amendment, General Butler, of Massachusetts. The country knows him; history will embalm his name and fame. Not only that, but the disabled soldiers in the very institutions named in this amendment have felt the beneficial effect of his great executive and administrative ability. As to being non-partisan, there is not a man in America who can show such a non-partisan record as General Butler. [Great laughter.]

Mr. McMAHON. This is not the first occasion upon which a gentleman rises to vindicate the truth of history, and himself violates that truth. My friend from the State of Indiana, [Mr. BROWNE,] who is the last person to whom I should apply for any authentic information as to where General McClellan resided, informs us that he resides in the State of New York. He forms his opinion upon what most of my republican friends rely for their historical information, upon a newspaper.

Now, I happen to know as a matter of fact—I hold a letter from General McClellan in my hands, in which he states that he is a resident of the State of New Jersey, though he is spending the winter in New York. I have no doubt that so good a democrat as General McClellan would be the last man in the world to desert the chief State that stood by the democratic flag in the last presidential campaign.

As to General Butler, he has had a long trial in this position; and after a very long discussion he was left out by a very decided majority, and with considerable unanimity.

As to the non-partisan character of the managers of these soldiers' homes, I will say to my distinguished friend from Indiana [Mr. BROWNE] that if he will show me where one democrat was appointed as a manager of these soldiers' homes when the republican party had power in both Houses of Congress, I will let his man go in without an objection. You cannot find one democrat put in by republican votes.

Mr. McCOOK. I did not exactly understand the statement of the gentleman.

Mr. McMAHON. I say that there never was a democrat put in as a manager of these soldiers' homes by republican votes when the republicans had control of both Houses of Congress.

Mr. McCOOK. I do not know about that for I was not here then. I know that since I have been in Congress Colonel Len. Harris, of Ohio, was appointed a manager.

Mr. McMAHON. Yes, but that was when we had a majority in this House, although you had a majority in the other.

The Committee on Military Affairs one year ago recommended General George B. McClellan for this position. Being then governor of the State of New Jersey he was compelled to decline the position because of the provision in the constitution of that State. To fill the vacancy caused by his resignation, the name of General John Love, of Indiana, was put in the bill. General John Love having died, it is but right and proper that General George B. McClellan should be put back into the place for which he was recommended by the Committee on Military Affairs.

I want to say here and now, without detracting in the slightest degree from the reputation of General Macauley—I want to say to my friend from Indiana [Mr. BROWNE] that while that reputation is partly local the reputation of General McClellan is national. The hold which General McClellan has upon the hearts of the soldiers of this country, without regard to politics, is national in its character. No man now living holds a higher place in their estimation. I hope that both amendments will be voted down.

Mr. BROWNE. The information I have in regard to the residence of General McClellan is to be found in the New York Tribune.

Mr. McMAHON. Yes, I expected so.

Mr. BROWNE. The New York Tribune of day before yesterday, says:

General and Mrs. McClellan gave a large german last night for their daughter, Miss May McClellan, at their house No. 5, Gramercy Park.

And then it goes on to enumerate seventy-odd guests who were present. I do not suppose that publication was for political effect.

Mr. McCOOK. One word. As perhaps every member of this committee knows, there are twelve of these managers; three ex officio, the President of the United States, the Chief-Justice of the Supreme Court, and the Secretary of War. The other nine managers are elected by Congress. Where Congress gets the authority to enter into this election, I do not know. At all events, the statute prescribes that these nine citizen managers shall be elected by Congress.

During the time that the republican party had possession of both branches of the Government, I believe that without exception these managers were republicans. It is not necessary for me to defend their selection; the gentlemen who made it are amply able to defend their action and to care for it.

I believe, however, that this board should not be partisan. And acting upon that opinion, in the Forty-fifth Congress, (the republicans being in the minority in this House, although they had a majority in the Senate,) I voted very cheerfully and very willingly for the election of democratic managers for these soldiers' homes. As the board is now constituted there is but one republican citizen manager, Colonel Martin, of the State of Kansas. And for that reason, if for no other, I favor the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. BROWNE.]

Now, there is another reason why it appears to me General McClellan's name should be stricken out and that of General Macauley substituted. These managers, as I understand, have a great deal to do with the furnishing of transportation to indigent soldiers who may want to go to any of these national homes. In other words, the question of location enters or should enter very largely into the selection of these managers. We have one now from the State of New York, one from Connecticut, one from Massachusetts, and one from Maine; in other words, New England and New York have one-half of the citizen board. There is one from the State of Pennsylvania; and, with the exception of the gentleman from Kansas, Mr. Martin, Colonel Harris, of the State of Ohio, and General Palmer, of Illinois—probably there is one from Wisconsin——

Mr. McMAHON. There is one from Wisconsin, as well as one from Kansas.

Mr. McCOOK. I have mentioned Kansas. With the exceptions I have named, the great West and Northwest, which furnished so considerable a portion of the troops for the suppression of the rebellion, are left without their proper proportion of this board.

I have nothing to say against General McClellan's qualifications for the position. It is possible I might differ with the gentleman from Ohio in regard to his national position as a soldier; but we are not discussing that. We are discussing now the propriety of striking out General McClellan's name and substituting that of a gentleman from Indiana to take the place of one from Indiana who has died. For this reason, and believing the amendment will be in the interest of the soldiers of this country, I shall support the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. BROWNE.]

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. WEAVER, to strike out "General George B. McClellan, of the State of New Jersey," and insert "General Benjamin F. Butler, of the State of Massachusetts," it was not agreed to.

The question then recurred on the amendment of Mr. BROWNE, to strike out "General George B. McClellan, of the State of New Jersey," and insert "General Daniel Macauley, of Indiana."

The amendment of Mr. BROWNE was not agreed to, there being—ayes 74, noes 86.

Mr. BROWNE. I move to amend by striking out "General George B. McClellan, of New Jersey," and inserting "General Mahlon D. Manson, of Indiana." General Manson was one of the most distinguished brigadiers from our State. He served through the entire war; has been always a consistent and, I may say, not a very conservative democrat. He has been twice elected by the unanimous vote of the democratic party to the position of auditor of the State of Indiana. He is a democrat "without guile" in his politics; in that respect he has shown neither variableness nor shadow of turning.

I am anxious that Indiana should have one of these managers, because I believe that for the good of these institutions it is proper with reference to location that one of these officers should be from that State.

Mr. WHITE. As a member of the Committee on Military Affairs, I want to reiterate the testimony which my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from New York, [Mr. McCOOK,] has borne to the manner in which the managers of these soldiers' homes were selected in the Forty-fifth Congress. I recall with great pride and pleasure that the selection was then made without any reference whatever to the political opinions of the gentlemen selected. The gentleman named from my State, who now occupies the position, was General Richard Coulter, one of the most gallant soldiers that Pennsylvania contributed to the Union Army; and a democrat in his convictions. He lives in an adjoining county to mine. When his name was mentioned, I, as a Representative of that State and a republican member of the committee, gave my cordial assent and co-operation in that selection. So with other names that were mentioned. I submit that party affiliation should not be regarded alone in making these selections. While for party reasons I would have been glad if General Macauley, who was named by my colleague on the committee, had been selected, it seems that he could not be. Now I trust we will consider the claim of locality; and I submit, as a disinterested friend of these soldiers' homes, that in the interest of their economical and prudent management some regard should be paid to locality in the selection of managers; they should be distributed over different portions of the country. I submit that inasmuch as New York has one manager, and Pennsylvania another, and New England has her full quota, the Central and Western States should receive the compliment, indeed the justice, of the selection of a member from that part of the country. Of course, I assume that the selection proposed is a proper one, because it comes from my colleague on the committee, who lives in that State. I shall cheerfully vote for the amendment; and I appeal to gentlemen on the other side, in the interest of fairness, to come to the rescue in this matter.

Mr. SPARKS. It is very wonderful, Mr. Chairman, that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WHITE] should take an interest in a gentlemen who on the other side is paraded for his politics, and paraded here as a democrat, for General Manson is a democrat. Now I know that in the original distribution of these officers the object was to give New Jersey a member of the board—to select General McClellan. Ohio has one, Illinois has one; and there are but nine to be selected out of thirty-eight States. There are two from three States that adjoin. There is one in New York. We had originally selected General McClellan. He was then governor of New Jersey and could not accept this position without resigning the other. He gave notice that he would not accept it. Now, of course, he is relieved from any such embarrassment. The man whose place it was originally designed General McClellan should take is now dead, and we propose only to do what we would have done then but for the position in which he was placed.

Mr. BROWNE. I wish to say, Mr. Chairman, that I have not a particle of interest in the politics of General Manson. I never had, and never hope to. I am not asking his appointment as a democrat. It would be the last recommendation on his part to me.

Mr. SPARKS. What do you present him for, then?

Mr. BROWNE. I present him in the interest of 208,000 men who went from Indiana into the service. I want to have them, if I can, have a representative in the management of these soldiers' homes. Indiana sent 208,000 men to the front during the war. General Manson, although a democrat, was identified with these men; in sympathy with them; in sympathy with them during the war, and in sympathy with them now, although in view of the fact that he voted the democratic ticket that would seem paradoxical.

Mr. SPARKS. Iowa sent men to that conflict, and so did other States who have no representatives on that board.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. Mr. Chairman, I raise the point that this paragraph is out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. That point comes too late.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. But I raise a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. It is too late.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. But I ask leave to state it. The statute requires that these vacancies shall be filled by joint resolution.

Mr. McMAHON. But that was settled at the last session.

Mr. BLOUNT. The gentleman's point of order comes too late.

The CHAIRMAN. It comes too late, the merits of the question having been discussed.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I ask to have three lines of the statute read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order, and what is the use of having the statute read? If the point of order had been made in time it might have been applicable; but even if the point is good it was not made in time.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. Let me state the point of order. You may then rule upon it as arbitrarily as you please.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has stated it.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. Let me have three lines of the statute read.

Mr. SPRINGER. I object.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. The statute provides this vacancy shall be filled by joint resolution of the two Houses.

Mr. SPRINGER. We went over that at the last session.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. In putting this paragraph into the bill we are violating the law. I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4826. Nine managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteers shall be elected from time to time, as vacancies may occur, by joint resolution of Congress.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. This, therefore, proposes a change of existing law in an appropriation bill, while it does not reduce expenditures.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman had made his point of order in time it might have been a good one.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. The Chair would not recognize me. I made it the moment the Chair recognized me.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not hear the gentleman, and he has a clear distinct voice.

Mr. McMAHON. I move to strike out the last word. I do it for this purpose: I think the old maxim ought to apply to the friends of General Manson, the old classical maxim, "We fear the Greeks even when they brings us gifts." I noticed when the distinguished gentleman from Indiana got the floor and thought he had the party strength, he put forward a party man. The superior qualifications of General Manson did not then occur to him. After he failed in that proposition what do we find him doing? Trying to sow the seeds of discord by nominating a democrat and candidly admitting—and I love him for his candor—that under no circumstances would he vote for a democrat if he thought he could get a republican.

Mr. BROWNE. I did not say that, if the gentleman will allow me.

Mr. McMAHON. That was the inference, but I will allow the gentleman to correct the inference I drew.

Mr. FRYE. I should like to see a republican vote for a democrat if he could get a republican.

Mr. McMAHON. I know General Manson, at least by reputation. I know a great many of the Indiana soldiers as well. A great many are inmates of the soldiers' home at my place. I believe, and I say it on the floor of the House knowing General Manson and his friends, that he is the last democrat in the State of Indiana who would permit his friends to be used against the great American, democratic volunteer general, General McClellan.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Indiana.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 66, noes 73.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. McCOOK. I offer the following amendment:

After the word "term," in line 780, add the following: "And the citizen managers elected or to be elected by Congress in accordance with the provisions of section 4824 of the Revised Statutes shall be entitled to the privileges of the floor of the House of Representatives during their term of office."

Mr. McMAHON. I hope there will be no objection to the adoption of that amendment.

Mr. BLOUNT. I must make the point of order against it.

Mr. McCOOK. What is the point of order the gentleman from Georgia makes?

Mr. BLOUNT. Let it be read again.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. BLOUNT. I raise the question of order that this is legislation upon this bill. It is not a matter proper for the House to control and is not pertinent to this question. It ought to go to the Committee on Rules.

Mr. McCOOK. Does the gentleman make the question of order upon the amendment? I do not care to detain the committee by arguing the question.

Mr. McMAHON. I suggest that the gentleman from New York send this to the Committee on Rules to report.

Mr. McCOOK. It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that there can be no objection to the incorporation of this amendment. These citizen managers are elected by Congress. The ex officio members, the President, Secretary of War, and the Chief-Justice, all have the privileges of the floor. The men we elect ought certainly in all respects to be on a perfectly equal footing with those members who serve as ex officio officers of these institutions; and every member here knows that it is frequently the case that these gentlemen have come to Congress for purposes of consulting in one way or another on matters connected with these homes, and where some of them have the privileges of the floor all of them should be entitled to it so that they may be upon an equality in that respect. I know that some of the members of the Committee on Rules favor something of this kind. It would be too late, however, to get the Committee on Rules to report upon it and incorporate it in this bill. This is simply an expeditious way of doing an act of justice to these managers of the national homes.

Mr. HAWLEY. I am undoubtedly in favor of the idea proposed to be accomplished by this amendment; but I rather think it ought to come from the Committee on Rules, for the reason that this bill will have to go to the Senate for its consideration, and this is simply asking the Senate to concur in admitting some persons to the privileges of its floor; and the Senate will probably and very properly decline to have anything to do with it.

Mr. McCOOK. The amendment which I originally drew proposed to incorporate the privileges of the floor of the House and Senate. But I struck that out, thinking it would be better for the Senate to determine that for itself. I hope, however, that there will be no serious objection to this, which seems to be only a matter of justice and right.

Mr. BURROWS. But it must be acted upon by both Houses.

Mr. BLOUNT. I ask the gentleman to let it be referred to the Committee on Rules to report at once to the House in reference to the propriety of it.

Mr. McCOOK. Let it go in its present form. I do not see where the objection can be to it. I do not understand the gentleman from Georgia as pressing the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will decide the point of order. The Chair thinks it is out of order for several reasons. One, that it is not germane. But a paramount reason is that the Committee of the Whole have no right to change the rules of the House when they have not been committed to them by the House for consideration. Moreover, the Constitution provides that each House shall be the judge of its own rules and mode of proceeding, and this is a proposition to extend the privileges of the floor of the Senate under the operation of a bill which originates in the House.

Mr. McCOOK. Do I understand the Chair to rule that it is out of order simply on the ground that it is not germane?

The CHAIRMAN. That it is not germane to this appropriation bill and for other reasons which the Chair has stated at length. The gentleman of course can take an appeal from the decision of the Chair if he so desires; if not, the Clerk will read the next paragraph.

Mr. BLOUNT. I move that the committee rise for the purpose of appointing a committee of conference.

The motion was agreed to.

CONFEREES ON LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee informally rose, and the Speaker resumed the chair.

Mr. ATKINS. I move that a committee of conference be appointed upon the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. That motion was agreed to previously. The Chair will simply appoint the conferees.

Mr. ATKINS, Mr. CLYMER, and Mr. BAKER were appointed conferees on the part of the House.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

Navy-yard, Mare Island, California: For continuation of stone dry-dock, $200,000.

Mr. BERRY. I offer the following amendment:

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 825 add:

"For roads and pavements and renewing plank road, Mare Island, $5,000; for extension of timber shed, Mare Island, $5,000."

Mr. BERRY. I wish to state, Mr. Chairman, that these appropriations have been estimated for, and I know not why the Committee on Appropriations failed to include them in the bill. It is a fact that in certain seasons of the year in the climate of California we have a great deal of moisture, and the condition of the roads at Mare Island navy-yard are rendered almost impassable. Some of the wooden planks have been long decayed, and it is absolutely necessary that they be repaired.

In regard to the other item, the extension of the timber-shed, permit me to say I have myself witnessed the great injury done to the valuable timber. The extreme wet of the winter time and the extreme dry weather in the summer have ruined thousands of dollars' worth of timber, and simply because we have been unable to secure an appropriation for the timber-shed. I think, as well as my memory serves me, this extension of the timber-shed has been estimated for for several years past; and I do hope, in the line of economy, these two small appropriations that have been estimated for by the Department will be incorporated in this bill.

I wish, at the same time, to say that I feel the Committee on Appropriations have done what they should have done, so far as the appropriation for the stone dry-dock is concerned. They have given every dollar that has been estimated for that work; but it is absolutely necessary for the interest of the Government and the preservation of its property that that appropriation for the timber-shed should be made.

Mr. BLOUNT. The Committee on Appropriations have recommended larger appropriations for the yard at Mare Island than they have for all the other navy-yards together. They have been exceedingly liberal upon that coast.

Mr. BERRY. I acknowledge that.

Mr. BLOUNT. And for the very reason that this was the only navy-yard upon that coast to which they have been thus liberal——

Mr. BERRY. I will say that is no argument. While I acknowledge——

Mr. BLOUNT. The gentleman will allow me to proceed in my own time. The officer in charge of this class of work at navy-yards and stations and who makes these estimates was invited to the committee-room, and after reviewing these items stated that if this sum were allowed they would get along very well and be well content with the appropriation.

Mr. BERRY. Who made that statement, did the gentleman say?

Mr. BLOUNT. The officer having charge of these appropriations; I think an officer holding the rank of commodore. I do not recollect his name.

As to what my friend from California has been saying in regard to roads and pavements and other little items, there is a gross appropriation of $300,000 for repairs and preservation of navy-yards; and that fund may be used for the very purpose designated by my friend. Certainly the gentleman ought to be content if this yard is on a footing in the matter of repairs with the other yards of the country. The appropriation is rather larger than usual, and as far as that navy-yard is concerned it is exceedingly liberal.

Mr. BERRY. Will the gentleman from Georgia permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. BLOUNT. Certainly.

Mr. BERRY. Was not the $5,000 separately estimated for this special purpose in addition to the amount of $300,000 here appropriated for repairs and preservation of navy yards?

Mr. BLOUNT. That is true. There is no question about that. And so we might run all the way through the bill. It has never been the practice of the majority side of the House to go to these estimates and take them as an ipse dixit. We have granted much more than has been appropriated there for many years. We have been, in the estimation of the officer having charge of this service, very liberal to the Pacific coast, and I had hoped the gentleman would have been content with the provisions of this bill.

The question being taken on Mr. BERRY'S amendment, it was not agreed to.

Mr. WAIT. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 825 insert:

"For continuing repairs and improvements at the navy-yard, New London, Connecticut, in extending one of the buildings thereat so as to furnish a hospital, $25,000."

Mr. BLOUNT. I rise to make the point of order on that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the gentleman's point of order?

Mr. BLOUNT. There is no law at all for a hospital at that yard.

Mr. HAWLEY. Oh, yes, there is.

Mr. WAIT. The point of order cannot be sustained against the amendment that I have now offered, and which has been read by the Clerk. At the last Congress the Secretary of the Navy recommended an appropriation for the construction at that yard of a building, one part of which should be for the purpose of making a drill-room for the apprentices on the training-ships, and the other part of that building was to be used for the purposes of a hospital, not merely for the training-ships, but for the United States vessels that happened to be there, either temporarily or located there permanently, when out of service. This amendment is strictly within both the spirit and letter of that clause of the rule which permits an amendment to a general appropriation bill, when the same is in continuance of an appropriation for a public work that is already in progress and being constructed.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Connecticut state there is a law for this, or was it recommended by the Department?

Mr. WAIT. Congress at a prior session made an appropriation of $20,000, about half what the Secretary recommended, to be used in the construction of a drill-room and hospital at the New London navy-yard. The Secretary found the amount Congress so appropriated would not complete the building so as to embrace a drill-room and the hospital. So he took the entire $20,000 and used it for the construction of a building which is to serve as a drill-room for the apprentices on board these training-ships.

Mr. BLOUNT. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. WAIT. I will hear the gentleman's question.

Mr. BLOUNT. I wish to ask if that building has been completed?

Mr. WAIT. It is now in process of construction. Its walls are now being erected. The Secretary at this session again comes forward in an official communication to Congress and recommends an additional $25,000 to continue that building now in process of construction and carry it out in length so as to make in addition to it a building to be used for the purposes of a general hospital, to be used for the crew of any ship of our Navy. That is it. The gentleman's point of order, therefore, does not apply, for this $25,000 is recommended here, I will state to the Chair, for the continuance of a work now in process of construction. The Secretary found that the amount of money appropriated by the last Congress was insufficient to erect and complete a building which could be made available for the double purpose originally intended, so he very wisely took the entire appropriation and applied it to the construction of that part of the building which could be used as a drill-room. He then at the present session recommended the appropriation of $25,000 for the completion of this building by constructing the part to be used as a hospital, not, as he says, for the special use of the training-ships, but for the use of the crews of any Government vessels that might be sent there.

Mr. BLOUNT. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him a moment?

Mr. WAIT. Certainly.

Mr. BLOUNT. I will withdraw my point of order, because upon examining the statute I do not think it lies against this amendment. The language of the statute is as follows:

For continuing repairs and improvements at the navy-yard, New London, Connecticut, in extending one of the buildings thereat, so as to furnish a drill-room and hospital for the use of training-ships of the Navy, $20,000.

Mr. ALDRICH, of Rhode Island. I renew the point of order.

Mr. WAIT. As the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] says the point of order clearly does not lie against this amendment, will the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] state what is his point of order?

Mr. ALDRICH, of Rhode Island. It is that this work has not been previously authorized by law, and this appropriation is not for the continuation of any work now in progress. The language of the statute which the gentleman from Georgia has just read is from the sundry civil appropriation bill of last year. What does that provision do? It makes an appropriation to extend one of the buildings at the New London navy-yard for a drill-room and hospital. According to the statement made by the gentleman from Connecticut himself, that building is now in process of erection, and the appropriation made last year is sufficient to complete it.

The gentleman now proposes an appropriation for the construction of a new building, not for the extension of one of the buildings at the New London navy-yard, but for the construction of a new building, to be used as a hospital. It therefore changes existing law, and does not retrench expenditures. It is subject to both points of order contained in the third clause of Rule XXI.

Mr. HAWLEY. If anybody is to blame in this matter, if there is any blame in it——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. WAIT] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. WAIT. The appropriation made last year was for the construction of a building, one-half of which was to be used for a drill-room and the other half of which was to be used for a hospital. The appropriation was about one-half of the estimate. The Secretary of the Navy, seeing that he could not construct a building of the size sufficient to cover both drill-room and hospital, took the entire $20,000 for that part of the building which was to be used as the drill-room.

Mr. ALDRICH, of Rhode Island. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. WAIT. Certainly.

Mr. ALDRICH, of Rhode Island. Is it not the intention to use this $25,000 which he asks to have appropriated for the construction of a separate building to be used as a hospital?

Mr. WAIT. I will reply to the gentleman——

Mr. ALDRICH, of Rhode Island. Will the gentleman answer my question?

Mr. WAIT. Yes, I will answer it, if the gentleman from Rhode Island will give me the opportunity to do so and not interrupt me.

Mr. ALDRICH, of Rhode Island. I hope the answer of the gentleman will be noticed.

Mr. WAIT. I will in the first place ask to have read the original recommendation of the Secretary of the Navy in regard to the first appropriation, and then I will ask to have read a letter which the Secretary recently addressed to me upon the same subject.

Mr. ATKINS. Does the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. WAIT] think that New London is as good a place as any other for the morals of these apprentice-boys?

Mr. WAIT. Yes, sir; for the morals of the boys, for the health of the boys, for depth of water for the ships, and for everything else that can be required.

The Clerk read as follows:

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, December 15, 1880.

SIR: I have the honor to inclose a copy of a communication, dated the 13th instant, from Surgeon-General Philip S. Wales, Chief of the Bureau of Medicine and Surgery, and to recommend that an appropriation of $25,000 be made for the immediate construction and equipment of a naval hospital at New London, Connecticut.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

R. W. THOMPSON,
Secretary of the Navy.

Hon. J. D. C. ATKINS,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations,
House of Representatives.

Mr. WAIT. I understand that the claim is that this appropriation is to be for a hospital building separate from and independent of the building now being erected, and solely for the use of the apprentice-boys on board the training-ship. I myself recently interviewed the late Secretary of the Navy, and asked him if that was the recommendation he made to Congress at the time when the first appropriation was made. Let his letter answer. I ask now to have read the letter of Secretary Thompson, addressed to me after the interview I have referred to, giving his own construction of what he intended when he made that recommendation.

The Clerk read as follows:

WASHINGTON CITY, February 12, 1881.

MY DEAR SIR: The recommendation made by me, while Secretary of the Navy, for building a hospital at the New London navy-yard was made without special reference to the location of a station for training-vessels. I considered it necessary for several reasons. Ships will frequently visit there, both cruisers and those with apprentice-boys, and its healthy location and facility of access will make a hospital, if one is built there, a most desirable place for such of them as may have sick on board. Crews whose health has been impaired by the epidemic diseases of the southern coast will find there such means of recovery as are not surpassed at any other point.

Very truly, &c., R. W. THOMPSON.

Hon. J. T. WAIT, House of Representatives.

Mr. WAIT. Now, let me say in connection with that letter, that in 1868 the State of Connecticut gave this property to the United States—and a magnificent gift it was—and the United States, through Congress, accepted it and agreed that it should be forever used and improved for purposes of this kind. In accordance with the solemn pledge which the Government then made, Congress has from time to time made appropriations with which large and expensive buildings for officers' quarters, for storage, for the equipment and repair of vessels, both steam and sail, mechanics' shops, an admirable wharf, and all the various fixtures and constructions that a navy-yard would require have been erected. And there is now, as I have already stated, in process of erection a first-class drill-room for the boys connected with the training-ships. The $25,000 which I ask to extend the building now in progress, so as to provide a hospital there, is not merely for the training-ships, but for any vessels of the United States

Navy that may come there for the purpose of recruiting the health of their crews who have suffered from being in another climate.

Mr. ALDRICH, of Rhode Island. It is not true, Mr. Chairman, that New London has been selected as a site for a naval training station, or has been used for any considerable period for that purpose. But I do not propose now to discuss the merits of this amendment. It is not before the committee in any form. The question now to be considered is whether the appropriation asked for is for a purpose not previously authorized by law. The gentleman from Connecticut himself [Mr. WAIT] conceded that it is when he says that it is for the erection of a new building not authorized by last year's appropriation bill. It seems to me that in making that statement he gives away his whole case. It is the only question I raise.

Mr. WAIT. The building heretofore authorized by Congress was to embrace both drill-room and hospital. But the Secretary of the Navy, having expended the whole sum for a drill-room, has recommended this additional appropriation to go on with the hospital. This appropriation will appropriately complete the structure in its entirety. This House, if it looks at the question from an economical stand-point, cannot hesitate a single moment in regard to the propriety of the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that as Congress has passed a law providing for hospital accommodations at the point proposed, and it has been found that they are not sufficient for the purpose, it is competent for the House now upon this bill to provide for additional accommodations. Even if a new building should become necessary, it would still be a continuation of the work which has been begun. The object was to provide sufficient accommodations for hospital purposes, and in the opinion of the Chair it is as much in order to erect a new building as to make an addition to one already erected. The Chair is strengthened in this opinion by the ruling of the Committee of the Whole the other day in the Baltimore case. He therefore overrules the point of order and decides that the amendment is in order.

Mr. ALDRICH, of Rhode Island. Do I understand the Chair to hold that an appropriation bill of one year can authorize new work for the next year.

The CHAIRMAN. The appropriation bill of last year not only made an appropriation, but it contained affirmative legislation authorizing the construction of a building for hospital purposes. It therefore had the effect of a continuing statute as much as if it had not been in an appropriation bill. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Connecticut, [Mr. WAIT.]

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Chairman, I hope that this appropriation will not be agreed to. In the first place, it is not estimated for; it is not included in the Book of Estimates. In reference to every other yard we have reduced the expenditures even where they have been asked for in the Book of Estimates. In the present case the first communication the committee received on the subject was a letter from the Secretary of the Navy recommending the construction of a hospital at this navy-yard; and this letter was accompanied with a communication from Surgeon-General Wales recommending the appropriation on the ground (and this seemed to be the basis of the recommendation of the Secretary of the Navy) that, as a training-ship was located there, it was necessary to have these hospital accommodations for the boys on board that ship. It turned out, however, that a commission created to examine into the question has reported against this point and in favor of Rhode Island. After this recommendation of Surgeon-General Wales, and in view of the report of this commission, he sent in a communication withdrawing his recommendation for a hospital at this point on the distinct ground that his recommendation was based alone upon the fact that a training-ship was located there.

Mr. HAWLEY. Who was that?

Mr. BLOUNT. The Surgeon-General.

Mr. HAWLEY. Not the Secretary of the Navy?

Mr. BLOUNT. No; but in making his recommendation as to this structure he accompanied it with a letter from Surgeon-General Wales, which, we inferred, naturally, I think, was the basis of his action; and that letter rested the case upon the location of the training-ship there.

Mr. WAIT. Does not the Secretary of the Navy, in his recent letter to me say, in the most distinct and unmistakable terms, that he never intended to limit this appropriation of $25,000 to the construction merely of a building for the accommodation of apprentices on the training-ship, but that it was designed for the general purposes of the Navy? This decision was not reversed by the Secretary who retired from office prior to such retiracy, nor has his successor ever, by any act or declaration, set that decision aside. Will the gentleman from Georgia claim that the Surgeon-General was clothed with an authority which empowered him to either revise or reverse a decision of his superior officer, the Secretary of the Navy? I think not. If he entertains a different opinion I will thank him to show me the law on which he rests that opinion.

Mr. BLOUNT. I will not yield further because my friend has already communicated to us those facts. He has recently procured from the former Secretary of the Navy a communication such as he states. That I concede. It is not an official paper to this House. I will not dispute, however——

Mr. ALDRICH, of Rhode Island. I suggest to the gentleman that the letter was written two or three weeks after Mr. Thompson had ceased to be Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. BLOUNT. That is true; according to the statement of the gentleman from Connecticut himself the letter does not come in any official shape. I do not care anything about that, however. But the law requires that estimates for the public service shall be submitted by the various heads of Departments to be included by the Secretary of the Treasury in the Book of Estimates. In the Book of Estimates there is no mention of this appropriation, and I imagine that there is some connection between the great interest of my friend from Connecticut in this matter, and this unofficial communication. Our committee-room is loaded down with all sorts of letters from heads of Departments recommending matters outside of the Book of Estimates.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, it is true that the Secretary of the Navy did not in the formal estimates renew the estimate which he made last year. But last year the appropriation which has already been quoted and fully explained by my colleague [Mr. WAIT] was made, an appropriation of $20,000 for a drill-room and hospital. It has been shown that the Secretary of the Navy used the whole of that appropriation upon the drill-room, doing nothing in the way of providing hospital accommodations. The Secretary forgot or overlooked the matter in his general estimates this year; but he sent a letter afterward expressing his desire that there should be a hospital there. Now, it is not at all unusual for Cabinet officers, when the formal book of estimates has been made up, to send some supplementary suggestion or estimate in regard to public works as Secretary Thompson assuredly did in this case, and accompanying his letter is that of the Surgeon-General. Afterward the Surgeon-General, thinking that this hospital pertained to training-ships alone, withdrew his letter, and Secretary Thompson, although he had then become a private citizen, sent an explanatory note saying he did not mean that recommendation for training-ships solely, but for general hospital purposes. It now stands before the committee and before the House a recommendation for this small hospital for the accommodation not of training-ships alone, but of all the vessels of the Government there.

Reference is made to the selection of some other site as headquarters for training-ships. The Government does not own any place at Newport for any such purpose. It has a torpedo station, and has Fort Adams there, but it has no ground whatever for navy-yard or training-school purposes. It has in the Thames River, at New London, a magnificent site for a navy-yard, eight hundred yards of excellent wharf there and some seven or eight buildings, store-houses, dwellings, drilling-room, &c., and only needs a little hospital. If you are going to Newport you will have to acquire a new island there, and embark in building a new set of wharves, dwellings, and sheds and all that, when the places are only about sixty miles apart.

Mr. ALDRICH, of Rhode Island. Let me ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. HAWLEY. With pleasure.

Mr. ALDRICH, of Rhode Island. Has the gentleman from Connecticut read the report of the commission, in which they state all the buildings are there which are needed?

Mr. HAWLEY. I have read it and I claim they do not say it. There are some buildings never put up for the purpose of a navy-yard at all. I heard it said one was an old almshouse. There are a few buildings not put up for navy-yard purposes at all on that island. That island does not belong to the Government, and the Secretary of the Navy has no right to make it the headquarters of training-ships. It is ground which does not belong to us. He has no right to accept the tender of that pretty island. If he has he can bind the Government to an expense of several hundreds of thousands of dollars for new buildings. He cannot make it the headquarters for training-ships, because the Government has never authorized him to accept it and embark in a new navy-yard.

We have everything needed at New London, and while Newport and every harbor north of Norfolk has been closed by ice, a skiff could easily go nine miles up the Thames river. It is a harbor that never freezes and during the winter a tug-boat ran constantly from the city to the navy-yard. Even the Brooklyn navy-yard has been partly closed to the Navy while this river has not been closed at all.

If you want to argue the general question of the respective merits of Newport and New London harbors for naval purposes, we can say that there is no finer place for a navy-yard in the whole United States than the former. Our greatest steamers could go in there or a skiff could go in there without being troubled by the ice during the winter. The largest vessels, as I have said, can go up there—the only thing desired for present uses is a little hospital building in addition to the drill-room, for the dwellings, sheds, and store-rooms are already there.

Mr. ALDRICH, of Rhode Island. What is this proposition of the gentleman from Connecticut, [Mr. WAIT?] It is to appropriate $25,000 for the construction of a building at New London, which is not recommended by the Navy Department. I hold in my hand a letter from the Surgeon-General of the Navy, withdrawing a recommendation which he had previously made.

Mr. HAWLEY. Secretary Thompson says that he was wrong.

Mr. ALDRICH, of Rhode Island. He desires it to be considered as void.

Mr. HAWLEY. Secretary Thompson does not declare it to be void. The Clerk read as follows:

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
BUREAU OF MEDICINE AND SURGERY,
February 15, 1881.

SIR: My recommendation to the Secretary of the Navy, under the date of December 13, 1880, that an appropriation be made to build a hospital at New London, Connecticut, was based upon an interview with him in which I was impressed with the idea that that point had been adopted as the training station, as is shown by the tenor of the communication, a copy of which is herewith transmitted.

Subsequent official action changing the location of the station, the recommendation, as far as New London is concerned, becomes void, as the hospital was intended expressly for the accommodation of the large number of persons that must necessarily be connected with the training school.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

PHILIP S. WALES,
Surgeon-General United States Navy.

Hon. J. D. C. ATKINS,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations,
House of Representatives.

Mr. ALDRICH, of Rhode Island. You will notice that this is a positive withdrawal of the recommendation which Surgeon-General Wales had made. It is true that last year in the sundry civil bill an appropriation of $20,000 was made for a hospital at New London. It was put on the bill in the Senate and became a law on the report of a conference committee. It was never considered or discussed in this House. The Minnesota, one of the training-ships, was then stationed at New London.

Mr. CAMP. Mr. Chairman, I yield my time to the gentleman from Rhode Island.

Mr. ALDRICH, of Rhode Island. I am very much obliged to the gentleman from New York. I was saying, Mr. Chairman, that the Minnesota was ordered to the New London navy-yard last year as an experiment, and that during the time she was there an appropriation was made for a building to be used as a drill-room and hospital, without as I believe any recommendation from the Navy Department. New London was found not to be a satisfactory location for a training station, and in November, 1880, the Secretary of the Navy appointed a commission consisting of several well-known officers of the Navy for the purpose of making an investigation and determining a proper location for this purpose. I now send to the desk and ask to have read an order issued by the Secretary of the Navy based upon the report of that commission.

The Clerk read as follows:

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, December 16, 1880.

General Order No. 257.

Ordered, that the vessels employed in training apprentices for the Navy shall, from and after this date, constitute a training fleet, and be placed under the command of an officer who shall be of a rank not below that of captain, who shall also be in command of the permanent headquarters or "naval training station."

Ordered, that the "Coaster's Harbor Island," in Narraganset Bay, near Newport, Rhode Island, be, and the same hereby is, established as the "naval training station" for apprentices, which place shall be the headquarters of said "training fleet."

Ordered, that all business and correspondence of said "fleet and station" shall be conducted as heretofore, through the same channels, under the jurisdiction of the Navy Department.

Ordered, that the tender of the real estate made by the State of Rhode Island for the uses of said "training fleet" be, and it hereby is, accepted; and when hereafter the same shall be conveyed to the United States by authority of law, then the station hereby established shall be permanent—until then it shall be considered as only temporary.

R. W. THOMPSON,
Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. ALDRICH, of Rhode Island. Now, Mr. Chairman, it will be noticed that this order positively establishes Coaster's Harbor Island as a naval training station for apprentices and the headquarters of the training fleet which is ordered to that station.

I also send a letter to the Clerk's desk to be read, from the Chief of the Bureau of Equipment and Recruiting, to show that the naval training station was never located at New London and that the Minnesota was sent there, as I have stated, merely as an experiment.

The Clerk read as follows:

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
BUREAU OF EQUIPMENT AND RECRUITING,
Washington, February 22, 1881.

SIR: On the 7th November, 1879, the Minnesota was ordered to proceed to New London for winter quarters. Up to the above time that vessel had been stationed during the winter months at the New York navy-yard, employed in recruiting and training boys for the naval service. But as she occupied so much space at that yard, it was thought advisable to select some other point for her purposes. Several places were thought of; it was, however, finally decided to send her to New London. It was, however, discovered after she had been but a short time at that station, that the place was not suitable for the training of naval apprentices. In addition the vessel was in quarantine very nearly the whole time of her stay, on account of sickness on shore. Consequently in April last she was ordered back to New York.

I am free to confess that I was quite disappointed when I learned that New London was not what I had anticipated. I visited that place last summer and became satisfied that there were many objections to it, as a place for the training of boys to become thorough sailors. Under the circumstances the bureau certainly could not have asked for an appropriation, although I understand that during the last session of Congress money was appropriated under the representation that it was for the naval training station at New London. It has never been adopted as such, nor could I consistently recommend it.

As a naval arsenal the place has many advantages.

Yours, truly,

E. ENGLISH,
Chief of Bureau of Equipment and Recruiting.

Hon. N. W. ALDRICH, M. C.,
Arlington House, Washington, D. C.

Mr. ALDRICH, of Rhode Island. Now, Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that it can hardly be possible that this House of Representatives on an appropriation bill like this, and in a discussion under the five-minute rule, would undertake to reverse the deliberate action of the Navy Department upon a question of so much importance as this, a question involving the welfare if not the existence of our system of training naval apprentices, upon which, in the opinion of many competent judges, must depend all hopes of the restoration of our Navy.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. ALDRICH, of Rhode Island. Has my time expired?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has one half minute of his time remaining.

Mr. WILBER. If I can be recognized I will yield to the gentleman from Rhode Island.

Mr. ALDRICH, of Rhode Island. Now, Mr. Chairman, the commission to whom this matter was remitted was composed of some of the most competent officers in the Navy; men familiar with questions of this character. It consisted of Commodore English, the Chief of the Bureau of Equipment and Recruiting, the bureau in charge of training-ships; of Captain Franklin, senior captain of the United States Navy, an able officer; Captain Luce, late in command of the Minnesota, who has been interested in the matter of training-ships since 1864, and who in that year made a report to the Navy Department in reference to the training-ship system of Great Britain. Captain Chandler, now in command of the Minnesota, was also a member of the commission, as was also Lieutenant-Commander Chadwick, whose able report on the training systems of England, France, and Germany has recently been published, and has won for him an enviable reputation. This officer was a lieutenant on the Sabine in 1863, has since pursued constantly his studies of this subject, and is now a recognized authority at home and abroad. This board thoroughly examined the subject, and their unanimous report, which was printed in the RECORD of December 15, 1880, should be accepted as conclusive.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Chairman, Surgeon-General Wales says in substance in his letter that he was under the impression that the Secretary of the Navy wanted the hospital with a view solely to supply the needs of a training-school station at New London, and that subsequent official action changing the location of that station induced him to withdraw his recommendation so far as New London was concerned. Now, Secretary Thompson corrects that impression in a letter addressed to my colleague, in which he says:

The recommendation made by me, while Secretary of the Navy, for building a hospital at the New London navy-yard was made without special reference to the location of a station for training-vessels. I considered it unnecessary for several reasons.

The Surgeon-General withdrew his letter under a misapprehension. Secretary Thompson made a recommendation in this direction which he renewed this year; but the Surgeon-General, a subordinate officer, misunderstanding the recommendation of his chief, undertook to withdraw his own recommendation subsequently. The gentleman speaks of the Navy Department having adopted a station at Newport. I call the attention of the House, and I would like to call the attention of the chairman of the Naval Committee, [Mr. WHITTHORNE,] and I ask him to give his attention to the language of the Secretary of the Navy in this matter. I consider that a highly respectable gentleman and a competent and able officer has made a great mistake. I will read the orders of the Secretary of the Navy in connection with this matter. He says:

Ordered, that the vessels employed in training apprentices for the Navy shall, from and after this date, constitute a training-fleet, and be placed under the command of an officer who shall be of a rank not below that of captain, who shall also be in command of the permanent headquarters or "naval training station."

Ordered, that the "Coaster's Harbor Island," in Narraganset Bay, near Newport, Rhode Island, be, and the same hereby is, established as the "naval training station" for apprentices, which place shall be the headquarters of said "training-fleet."

Ordered, that all business and correspondence of said "fleet and station" shall be conducted as heretofore, through the same channels, under the jurisdiction of the Navy Department.

Ordered, that the tender of the real estate made by the State of Rhode Island for the uses of said "training-fleet" be, and it hereby is, accepted; and when hereafter the same shall be conveyed to the United States by authority of law, then the station hereby established shall be permanent—until then it shall be considered as only temporary.

And I should think, judging by the chart, though I have not looked into it very minutely, that there are seventy-five or one hundred acres on that island within a mile and a half of Newport. But because that is an admirable place for dancing, holding elegant entertainments, and enjoying social life it does not follow it is a suitable place for training boys. Now, here is a commission composed of five or six elegant gentlemen, who, according to the testimony of competent witnesses, spent some forty minutes at the New London navy-yard and then went to Newport and claimed it was the best place for a training-school.

Mr. ALDRICH, of Rhode Island. Is the gentleman aware a majority of the board spent a considerable time there prior to this visit?

Mr. HAWLEY. I presume some of them had been along there, but as a commission they barely looked at the place. Probably the House will ultimately be called upon to discuss the fitness of Coaster's Island for a naval station, in considering reports made under proper authority, bringing the subject forward in the usual and legitimate manner and not by a usurpation of the Secretary; I am prepared now to deny the correctness of the report of those officers in some particulars. We can prove by the testimony of officers of higher rank, giving an elaborate report after a careful examination, that New London has the better harbor. The New London site has every possible requisite for a general naval station. It is within six or eight miles of the Sound. Going thence a few miles to the southeast, you pass out into the Atlantic Ocean.

Gardiner's Bay, Fisher's Island Sound, and the adjoining waters furnish admirable facilities for target-practice and all manner of naval exercises.

The Secretary of the Navy has no right to accept Coaster's Island for and in the name of the Government simply upon the recommendation of a board not authorized by law to look for further opportunities to spend money. If he has the right to accept lands offered him for naval purposes, it follows that he can bind us to large expenditures. There is no wharf at all, I think, at Coaster's Island, unless it be some petty landing for a clam-boat. At present no vessel of size can lie near it. And why should the Department order training-ships to rendezvous there for the chief reason, as it would appear, that Newport furnishes agreeable society, when nineteen dollars out of every twenty that would be spent at Coaster's Island would be laid out in duplicating the works already in existence at the New London yard?

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. WHITTHORNE. Among the items which go to make up the expenses of the naval administration of the country, there are none which present a wider field for retrenchment and reform than are presented in the navy-yards and stations and the civil establishments connected therewith. The United States Government now use, I believe, some nine navy-yards and stations. I was profoundly surprised when informed that the Secretary of the Navy had established a station and had bound by his acceptance, as far as he could bind the United States by his acceptance, of a new station at Narraganset Bay, in face of the fact, Mr. Chairman, that the United States own navy-yards at Kittery, at Boston or Charlestown, at New London, at Brooklyn, at League Island, at Norfolk, at Pensacola, and at Mare Island.

Now, why was it, when the Government had expended and was expending large sums of money at these other navy-yards and stations, that the Navy Department and its officers should go and select this new station? What merit did it have? Why enter into any new obligations?

Mr. Chairman, I must say that my judgment forces me to the conclusion that but for the fact that Newport is a fashionable summer resort, Narraganset Bay never would have been thought of. In point of accessibility, in point of health, in point of morals, I submit that Kittery, Maine, or New London, Connecticut, is just as eligible, just as suitable for training purposes, and more so. If gentlemen will but reflect a moment they will see the fact that the officers of these training-ships are giving their hearts and souls to pleasure, will demoralize the young men attached to these training-ships. It is a wrong, and a serious wrong in my judgment, that the Secretary of the Navy and the officers of that Department are perpetrating or attempting to perpetrate on this new system now organized in the naval service. It is doing injury, and manifest injury, at the expense of the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. Chairman, may I be indulged in another remark in this connection? If the minds of gentlemen on this floor will recur to the gifts of public lands to the Government for naval stations or navy-yards, they will see how it is the Government is involved to-day in expenditures at New London, where land was given to the Government for naval purposes, and a navy-yard was established, for which in my judgment the Government had no earthly use.

Again, the city of Philadelphia presents to the Government of the United States League Island for the purposes of a navy-yard. That is to be a gift to Congress. The Government is to be enriched by the sale of the old yard; and yet before the Government is done with that yard it will cost $100,000,000 to make it a complete navy-yard. Under this idea of giving something to the Government and the Government accepting these gifts you are simply opening other avenues to the public Treasury by which it may be robbed and plundered. And in this fight between New London and Narraganset Bay there is opened up a new channel of expenditure and extravagance. If we have now, as we do for the moment, this naval station at New London, then I submit to the Committee of the Whole that you should go on and improve it for hospital purposes, as it may ultimately result in taking the asylum from the city of Philadelphia and making this an asylum and a hospital of retreat for the invalid sailors of the country; and in that way you can economize the gift which has been made to the Government.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BLOUNT. This amendment does not raise the issue which gentlemen have been discussing as to whether the training-ship should be stationed at New London or at Coaster's Island Harbor. The construction of a hospital at New London does not prevent the stationing of this training-ship at Coaster's Island Harbor. When you have completed the hospital you will still have your issue with the Navy Department as to where this training-ship shall be located. The discussion of that question does not elucidate the importance or non-importance of this amendment.

It has been alleged in the course of this discussion that it would be well to place this hospital at New London because of the other buildings there. If that is to be one reason for so doing, and the fact in regard to the ice in the harbor is to be another, then why not go just a little farther south to the Norfolk navy-yard, where you will find your hospital building and no ice.

Mr. HAWLEY. There have been epidemics there.

Mr. BLOUNT. The gentleman says it is not so healthy there. I regard it as quite as healthy a locality as the other. The gentleman suggests that there may be an epidemic there. If so, I cannt see why this training-ship cannot be moved from one yard to another. Therefore I can see no reason why we should make this expenditure at all. If it is improper to locate this training-ship at Coaster's Island Harbor, if there has been a violation of the law on the part of the Navy Department, let that Department be held responsible. I am much inclined to the opinion of the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] that they have gone beyond their power in this matter.

We still come back to the simple proposition whether or not there is any necessity for the construction of this particular building for hospital purposes. As a matter of fact, this training-ship is not now at New London and is not likely to be there. If there is any occasion for it, perhaps the drill-room could be fitted up for hospital purposes. It might be very proper to utilize the building in that way.

As the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. WHITTHORNE] has well said, we have already gone into extravagance in building up and keeping up too many navy-yards. With a small navy we have more navy-yards than Great Britain. Why shall we continue this expenditure, constructing building after building at the navy-yards? I trust that the Committee of the Whole will see fit not to add this appropriation to this bill.

Mr. ALDRICH, of Rhode Island. I desire to say, Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Debate has been exhausted upon the pending amendment.

Mr. ALDRICH, of Rhode Island. I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of saying that I am amazed that the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs of this House, [Mr. WHITTHORNE,] who is certainly supposed to be familiar with naval matters, should rise in his place and advocate the appropriation of this $25,000 upon the ground that we do not need a navy-yard at New London, and therefore we ought to make this appropriation there; that we have no earthly use for it, to use his own words.

The question whether this Government shall use Coaster's Island Harbor or not is not in this discussion at all. When it comes up for decision I have no doubt this House will decide it wisely upon such light as may be before it.

What was the other statement made by the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. WHITTHORNE?] It is that these officers decided in favor of Newport, because of the society there. That was the plain intimation of the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs. Now, the gentleman ought to know, and I presume that he does know, that the two senior officers of this board live in the city of Washington, have residence here, and have nothing to do with Newport in any shape, way, or manner.

Does the gentleman mean to intimate that we have officers of the well-known character and position of the officers who compose that board who are willing to place the success of the training of naval apprentices at the mercy of their own whims as to the proper place as regards society merely? I cannot believe the gentleman honestly and sincerely thinks so. Lieutenant-Commander Chadwick has given more attention to this subject, I believe, than any other man in this country. I ask the Clerk to read a letter from him on this subject; and I earnestly invite the attention of the House to that letter, which it seems to me is decisive of the question at issue.

The Clerk read the letter, as follows:

OFFICE OF LIGHT-HOUSE INSPECTOR, THIRD DISTRICT,
Tomkinsville, New York, February 15, 1881.

DEAR SIR: Mr. T. Coggeshall wrote me that you had had some discussion on the subject of the relative amount of ice at New London and Newport, and requested me that I should write to you my experience at these two ports. In the last twenty years I have passed three complete winters at Newport. In the same interval I have passed one at New London, while in the apprentice-ship Sabine, (1867-'68.) In the latter case the Thames River was completely frozen over as far down as Winthrop's Point (two miles below the naval station) for many weeks, six, if my memory serves me rightly. We were anchored off State street, and the river above and below us was full of floating ice during this period.

During my experience of Newport I have never known trouble with ice. It certainly has been very exceptional. Drills afloat while I was there continued almost without interruption throughout the winter, a thing which cannot be done even at Annapolis, the Chesapeake being much more subject to ice than Narraganset Bay. I have known within the last five years the Chesapeake to be solidly frozen for some miles south of the Potomac.

The inner harbor at Newport may be somewhat incommoded this winter, but I can hardly think that the vicinity of Coaster's Harbor Island has been much troubled. If you will look at the comparative thermometrical tables of Newport and New London you will find the thermometer always goes lower at a given period at the latter place.

I was east a short time since on light-house duty, and while the snow had almost entirely disappeared about Newport the country about New London was still heavily covered, and the sleighing at the latter place good. The date of my visit was January 15.

As I say, the question of ice at Newport is one which need hardly be taken into consideration, as its occurrence in any quantity is a very rare case. When it does occur there must be at least as much trouble on the same account at the station at New London.

I fear that few persons realize the immense importance of fixing upon the proper place for this establishment. It will unquestionably be the nursery not only for the trained seamen of the Navy, but for those of our mercantile marine, and to go wrong at the start would be a national loss. I certainly think that the placing of it at New London would be to go wholly wrong. I look at all this merely with the eye of a naval officer. Being a West Virginian, I can hardly be accused of local prejudice in the case.

The reasons for the selection of Newport instead of New London are succinctly set forth in the report of the board of which Commodore English was president, (December, 1880.) Any one conversant with the subject would not hesitate a moment between the two places.

The national good is much more concerned in this question than most persons appreciate, and I should look with deep regret upon an effort to establish the school at a point so utterly unfitted for it as is the Thames. I certainly think that to place it there would be utterly fatal to its successful operation.

The Thames was selected as the site of a navy-yard, for which it is well adapted. Why destroy its possible efficiency as such by turning it into a training station, which has almost every disqualification for the purposes of training. If selected for the latter, its efficiency as a navy-yard is destroyed. The two cannot possibly exist together.

It was my good fortune in 1879 to see much of the manner in which England and France and Germany trained their boys, and I send you the report which was made upon the subject. The realization of our own backwardness, and the earnest desire to place our own service upon at least an equal footing with these in the question of education and training, makes me hold what may seem at first sight unwarrantably strong opinions in this matter.

I am, very truly, yours,

F. E. CHADWICK,
Lieutenant Commander, United States Navy.

Hon. N. W. ALDRICH, Member of Congress.

[Before the reading of the foregoing paper was concluded the hammer fell; when

Mr. ALDRICH, of Rhode Island, said: The most important part of that letter has not yet been read.

Mr. BALLOU obtained the floor, and said: I yield my time to my colleague.

Mr. HAWLEY. If my excellent friend from Rhode Island is to occupy twenty minutes or half an hour on this question, we on our side ought to have more time.

Mr. ALDRICH, of Rhode Island. The most important part of the letter has not been read. I want the reading finished.

Mr. BALLOU. I will ask the Clerk to continue the reading in my time.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the letter.]

Mr. HAWLEY. It will be observed that this is not an official paper of any kind, but a private letter.

Mr. ALDRICH, of Rhode Island. I ask consent to have printed in the RECORD additional letters on this subject.

There was no objection.

The letters are as follows:

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, November 27, 1880.

SIR: The board of which you are senior member will assemble on board the United States steamer Powhatan, at the naval station, New London, Connecticut.

You will then carefully examine that station, with a view of obtaining a site for the establishment of a permanent headquarters for the training of naval apprentices.

Having examined that station thoroughly, proceed to Narraganset Bay, where you will make a similar examination.

Should the board not find a desirable site in either of the above-mentioned places, you will make further examinations of such places as in the judgment of the board are likely to answer the necessary requirements.

The board will bear in mind the necessity and importance of having sufficient depth of water for the largest ships, to allow the easy access and egress of training ships at all seasons of the year, sufficient sea room to maneuver vessels under sail, facilities for boat exercise, good holding-ground, and to afford a harbor well protected from violent weather.

There should be the necessary land to accommodate such buildings as are likely to be erected, with the best advantages for perfect drainage and other sanitary requirements. In short, a suitable site for the headquarters should offer every facility for making them all that can be desired in order to successfully carry out the object in view. The Department has placed the United States steamer Powhatan at your disposal. You will report the result of your examinations to the Department.

Respectfully, &c.,

R. W. THOMPSON,
Secretary of the Navy.

Commodore EARL ENGLISH,
Chief of Bureau Equipment and Recruiting.

NEWPORT, RHODE ISLAND, February 14, 1881.

From west side of Goat Island, on which torpedo station is located, or from proper anchorage in upper harbor of Newport, Rhode Island, within one-eighth of a mile of Coaster's Harbor Island, or one-sixteenth of a mile from Newport lighthouse, I could on any day of the present winter, 1880 and 1881, have anchored a ship-of-war of the United States Navy drawing up to fullest draught of water; nor would such ship have been obstructed by ice. I could have sailed such a ship, without steam, from a point within a fourth of a mile of Coaster's Harbor Island out into clear water without obstruction from ice. Only in the lower harbor has there been ice between our wharves and Goat Island, nor one day that steamers have not been to and from Goat Island and Canonicut Island. In upper bay, north of Coaster's Harbor Island, there has been ice, but tugs and steamers daily went through it to Providence. The steamer Eolus, to Wickford, missed only the trips on February 3, 4, 5, and 7; then ran regularly; not a day that vessels did not anchor in our upper harbor not a quarter of a mile from Coaster's Harbor Island. No ice here or about here since February 7 instant. Clear water in outer harbor the entire time.

I have not this year been to New London. I usually visit there each year in the winter. On many occasions I have seen a great quantity of ice across the Thames, the vessels lying near proposed naval station completely frozen in, a channel track only kept open for steamers by constant effort. From New London Harbor, where vessels anchor, to proposed naval station is quite three miles. Ice as a rule is abundant there in winter.

STEPHEN A. GARDNER,
Harbor Master of the Port of Newport, Rhode Island.

Mr. HAWLEY. I ask the privilege of having printed in the RECORD the report of Admiral Stringham and others on the New London navy-yard.

There was no objection.

The documents are as follows:

OFFICIAL REPORT CONCERNING NARRAGANSET BAY, LEAGUE ISLAND, AND NEW LONDON HARBOR.

UNITED STATES NAVY-YARD,
Philadelphia, October 24, 1862.

SIR: The board appointed to examine the harbor of New London, Narraganset Bay, and League Island, and to report whether, in their opinion, the public interest will be promoted by acquiring the title to League Island for naval purposes, or by establishing a navy-yard and naval depot either in or near the harbor of New London or in the waters of Narraganset Bay, instead of League Island, has the honor to report, that in accordance with your order of August 12, 1862, the board met at New London on the 26th of August, and proceeded to make a thorough and careful examination of that harbor and its surroundings. Having completed this examination, the board proceeded to Narraganset Bay and made a minute examination of its waters, after which they visited League Island, and have devoted much time in investigating its qualities for a naval station.

NARRAGANSET BAY.

The list of materials collected in reference to this bay will be found in Appendix No. 1.

As required by our instructions, we examined and surveyed the extensive waters of this bay, visiting all the sites which had been suggested by the examinations of previous boards, or by more recent surveys by the Coast Survey, which were suggested by local authorities or which appeared in our inspection of the bay to present promising positions for a navy-yard.

Thus we examined Mount Hope Bay and its approaches in by the channel, between Bristol and Rhode Island, down to the old stone bridge, which now closes the eastern passage of the bay, (sometimes called Saughkonnet River,) and out by the northern shore of the island of Rhode Island, into the main channel of Narraganset Bay. Providence River, especially near Gasper Point, was examined. The whole of the eastern side of Prudence Island was very carefully examined, especially south of Sandy Point and in Potter's Cove; the western shore of Rhode Island, behind Dyer's Island; the eastern shore of Canonicut, surveying Taylor's Cove, which is protected in part by Gould Island from winds, currents, and ice; visiting Newport Harbor, and passing around to the western shore of Canonicut, and in by the south and out by the north entrance of Dutch Island Harbor. The surveys of this bay have developed the fact that sticky bottom for anchorage occurs generally in water too deep for convenient anchorage, except in the coves, and that deep indentations of the shore lines or coves are few in number, and such as are found are small in extent.

The advantages of Narraganset Bay for a navy-yard are an adequate depth of water, but with the drawback just stated; that it is easy of ingress and egress, (the practicability of easy ingress with a northwest wind is now of little consequence since steam is of such common use,) is not easily blockaded, is moderately free from ice, presents full space on its islands for the erection of buildings, docks, and basins, with extensive water front; presents good foundations for the accessories of a yard, has a moderate range of tides, and is but little exposed to freshets or overflows in any properly selected site, and is proverbial for the excellent health of the vicinity.

The disadvantages are: the entrance is often difficult from fogs; that its defense will involve most costly and difficult works of permanent fortification and of local floating batteries, or the closing of one of the two entrances now open by a dike, (similar to that which closes the third entrance at the north,) and defensive works and floating batteries for the main entrance; that each available site must as a rule depend also upon itself for defense; that the population does not furnish enough troops readily transferred to the point of attack, and the best sites are so near the entrance of the bay as to be easily attacked, and all are upon islands; that the bay is swept by powerful winds from the northwest, southwest, northeast, and sometimes from the southeast, which raise a chopping sea, and is in some places exposed to; is defective in holding-ground, on account of the bottom being generally rocky, where the depth is less than twelve and more than four fathoms. The rocky nature of the excavation of the sites makes foundations expensive; the facility for obtaining iron and coal is small, and supplies generally require to be brought from a distance; a scant supply of fresh water generally; moderate facilities for procuring workmen, who must be domiciled on the site; all the bad effects of salt water upon wood and iron.

Advantageous thus as it is in some respects, we consider that, balancing the advantages and disadvantages, this bay would be an indifferent one for the location of a navy-yard.

The board having decided that Narraganset Bay is an indifferent one for the location of a navy-yard, the solution of the question submitted is reduced to a comparison between the advantages possessed by New London and League Island.

The list of materials collected in reference to New London will be found in Appendix No. 2; those collected in reference to League Island in Appendix No. 3.

The board, at an early period of its labors, adopted a series of points for particular examination, as containing the principal requisites for the site of a navy-yard and naval depot. A comparison between New London and League Island has been made with reference to these points, as follows:

"1. Adequate depth of water at and near the site for vessels of the largest class."

In this respect the board regards the two sites as equal; either of them have a sufficient depth of water at and near for the accommodation of any vessels of our Navy.

"2. Facility of ingress and egress."

The harbor of New London has a fine, clear entrance from the ocean, accessible at all times and all seasons; from it vessels of any class can proceed to sea with almost any wind, and be clear of the land in a few hours, the distance from the entrance of the harbor to the ocean being only about twenty-five miles.

League Island is situated at a distance of about one hundred miles from the sea, on a river, the navigation of which is often tedious and difficult for vessels of large class, especially in winter when obstructed by ice. The board is of the opinion that, with regard to this qualification, the harbor of New London is far superior to League Island.

"3. Security from attack by an enemy, and facility and economy of defenses. To be easily defended from its own topographical advantages. To be readily re-enforced by troops from a dense population, within easy marching distance. Not easily blockaded. Not too near the mouth of a bay or river."

The present defenses of the harbor of New London are Forts Trumbull and Griswold, the first a strong fortress, built of granite in the most substantial manner, and the second an extensive earthwork on Groton Heights, opposite the city of New London. From the entrance of the harbor from Long Island Sound to the site deemed most suitable for a navy-yard, there are on either side of the river numerous points upon which iron towers or turrets, armed with guns of the largest caliber, can be erected at moderate cost, and so arranged as to render the entrance of hostile ships impossible, if forts and towers can be constructed of sufficient strength to resist the attack of ships of modern construction and armament. Brigadier-General George W. Cullum, of the United States Engineers, states as his opinion that no harbor in the United States is more susceptible of defense against the entrance of a fleet than New London.

* * * * * * *

The remoteness of League Island from the sea renders it little liable to attack from the sea if the river approaches were properly defended. This, however, will require heavy expenditures on account of the great length of the river to be defended. No possible doubt can exist as to the ability of the city of Philadelphia to furnish promptly any number of men that may be required for its defense.

The board is of the opinion that either of the sites under examination may be promptly and efficiently defended, and that upon this question they may be regarded as equal.

"4. Security from violent winds at sea, and from ice, whether fast or moving."

The harbor of New London is well protected from violent winds and sea, and is not obstructed by ice. Vessels of any size may anchor there with perfect safety at all times.

The anchorage off League Island is not exposed to danger from violent wind or sea; but in severe winters the drift ice from the river above often renders the positions of vessels in the river insecure and dangerous. On this point the board is of the opinion that the advantages are decidedly with New London.

"5. Ample accommodations for safe anchorage, with good holding-ground in the adjacent waters."

The waters adjacent the harbor of New London are Fisher's Island Sound and Gardner's Bay, spacious roadsteads having abundant depth of water for the largest vessels, with the best holding-ground, and ample space to accommodate any number of vessels that the Government may desire to concentrate there. This sound and bay are protected on nearly all sides, and in them merchant ships often ride out the severest gales in safety, under the shelter of the highlands of Fisher's Island, the Connecticut shore, and Long Island.

The waters adjacent League Island are the Delaware River and Bay. These have ample space, sufficient depth of water, and good holding-ground, and furnish an abundance of safe anchorage, with the exception that vessels anchored in these waters during severe winters are exposed to injury from the drifting ice. The board is of opinion that, upon this point, the harbor of New London is most advantageous.

"6. Abundant space for the erection of all buildings, docks, and basins that may be required for a first-class establishment, with extensive water-front for the accommodation of a large number of vessels."

Each of the sites under consideration afford ample space for the accommodation of the various structures which may be required at a first-class naval establishment, with a line of water-front sufficient for all the wants of such an establishment.

We are informed by very respectable persons in New London that one hundred acres of land can be purchased for from fifty to seventy-five thousand dollars, and two hundred acres for $100,000. They are therefore regarded as equal upon this point.

"7. Adaptation of the site to the construction of permanent stone dry-docks, wet-basins, piers, wharves, rolling-mills, forge shops, furnaces, and other heavy works."

The site at Winthrop's Point is well adapted to the construction of docks and all the various buildings required at a navy-yard. The cove above the point is admirably suited for the construction of docks and basins. Such works, located in that position, would require but little excavation, and it is believed that secure foundations could be found without resorting to the tedious and expensive process of piling. The soil is gravel and stone, which afford the best and most substantial foundations for most of the buildings required at a navy-yard. League Island is a reclaimed marsh, and the borings made by the board show that there is a depth of mud and fine sand varying from twenty-five to fifty-six feet in depth, under which is found gravel of good quality, and in sufficient quantities to sustain piles. It is undoubtedly true that no heavy structure can be erected on this island with any probability of safety without resorting to the expensive operation of piling.

The board is therefore of opinion that in this particular New London is vastly superior to League Island.

"8. Topography of the site, whether high, requiring excavation and grading, or low, requiring filling. If the first, what is the character of the excavation? And if the second, where are the sources from which the materials can be obtained?"

* * * * * * *

The board is of opinion that upon this point the advantages are vastly in favor of New London.

"9. Mean range of tides and exposure of the site to freshets and overflows."

The range of the tide at New London is two and five-tenths feet, and at League Island seven and five-tenths feet. When properly filled and graded neither site would be liable to suffer from freshets and overflows. On this point New London has the advantage, there being less than one half the range of tide.

"10. Set of currents about the site, and their effects."

The currents at New London are not rapid, the water is clear, and there is nothing to be apprehended from deposits at this place after the lines of wharves have been established and the wharves constructed.

At League Island the currents are more rapid. The water of the Delaware is dirty, holding a large quantity of earthy matter in solution, which is deposited in various points along the river, as shown by the immense accumulation which has taken place within a few years at League Island, and which is still in progress.

This current is thrown against the shore of New Jersey, opposite the Horseshoe, and is thence deflected toward League Island, as is clearly shown by the horizontal curves on the coast-survey charts. Thus, during severe winters, upon the breaking up of the ice on the Horseshoe, where all admit that it accumulates, it must be thrown with great violence toward League Island, to the great detriment and danger of all vessels lying in the vicinity. The board is of the opinion that upon this point the harbor of New London has greatly the advantage.

"11. The facilities for procuring most rapidly supplies, stores of all kinds, and materials, especially iron and coal; easy communication by water, by railroads, and by good common roads, with a country not likely to be occupied by an enemy, so as to furnish naval stores and other supplies in time of war."

The facilities for obtaining all the materials, supplies, and stores necessary for a navy-yard, except iron, coal, and the timbers grown at the South, are abundant at New London.

In addition to the means of transportation by water to a harbor always accessible, the railroad communications connect with the great lines which traverse the Eastern, Northern, and Western States, and render the productions of those States available with ease and certainty, and these Northern and Eastern States are the points where the largest portion of our merchant marine is constructed.

The Salisbury, Ulster, Adirondack, and other mines in the vicinity, though at present worked to a limited extent, furnish iron of a very superior quality, and it is believed they would, with proper extension of their mining operations, be competent to supply all the iron required for a navy-yard,

For a building material this vicinity abounds in the finest granite, which can be furnished at the site at moderate cost, and an abundant supply can be had for the construction of docks, walls, and foundations.

In the article of coal New London would be deficient, as it must necessarily be transported from other points at an increased cost.

League Island possesses great facilities for procuring all the materials and stores required for a navy-yard except the timbers grown at the South, and that for light spars grown at the North. The canal and railroad communications throughout the State of Pennsylvania and their connections with other States are not surpassed in extent or efficiency. The supply of iron and coal from the mines of Pennsylvania is immense, and no doubt can exist as to the certainty of a supply of those articles at League Island at a cheaper rate than at any other point. The board is of the opinion that for a supply of iron and coal League Island possesses the advantage over New London, but for other supplies that they are on an equality.

"12. Abundant supply of good fresh water, both for all yard purposes and for the shipping."

At New London an abundant supply of the softest and purest water can be obtained. At a distance of about one mile of the site, at Winthrop's Point, there is a stream of pure, fresh water, from which an ample supply to meet all the wants of the service can be had, at an elevation of near one hundred feet above tide-water.

The supply of fresh water at League Island is unquestionable, and on this point the board is of the opinion that the two places are equal.

"13. The facility for procuring workmen of all classes."

No reasonable doubt can exist as to the practicability of procuring at New London all the mechanics and workmen of every description which may be necessary to execute the work in a navy-yard; for, although the city of New London does not at this time contain a large population of this kind, the numerous cities, towns, and villages of New England and New York abound in artisans of all descriptions who are ever ready to respond to demands for their services. These people always concentrate where employment is to be obtained, and there would be great inducements for them to resort to New London, where house rents are remarkably low. Tenements can be had in the immediate vicinity, and the cost of living is moderate.

League Island is situated near a city celebrated for its manufactures and the excellence of her workmen. Persons working in a yard upon League Island would be compelled to reside at a distance from their work, there being no houses in the vicinity or sites suitable for the erection of habitations. They would therefore be subjected to the inconvenience of a long walk, or the expense of riding to and from their work. Without doubt any number of workmen of all classes can be had at this place, notwithstanding the inconvenience to them. The board is of the opinion that upon this point the two places may be considered equal.

"14. Quality of the water near the site, whether fresh or salt, and the probable effects of the same upon the bottoms of iron vessels when laid up for a length of time."

The water of New London is salt, which is undoubtedly injurious to the bottoms of iron vessels. Fresh water for laying up such vessels, when not wanted for active service, can be found a few miles higher up the river. Still this separation of the vessels from the immediate supervision of the officers of the yard would be inconvenient, and attended with additional cost in the necessary precautions for their protection and safe-keeping. This objection could be obviated by providing means for taking such vessels out of the water when not required for immediate service.

At League Island the water is fresh, and in this respect the board is of the opinion that the advantage is with League Island, so far as iron vessels are concerned.

"15. Health of the vicinity."

No question can be raised as to the superior excellence of the health enjoyed by the residents of New London. League Island is situated on a fresh-water river, nearly surrounded by marshes covered with vegetable matter and exposed to the sun at every low tide during the day; and although we are told that it is as healthy as other places in the vicinity, we cannot believe that League Island can be regarded as a healthy place. The board is of the opinion that on this point New London is vastly superior.

From the foregoing comparison it will appear that for an average depth of water at and near the site for vessels of the largest class; for security from attack by an enemy, and facility and economy of defense, to be easily defended from its own topographical advantages, to be readily re-enforced by troops from a dense population within easy marching distance, not easily blockaded, not too near the mouth of a bay or river; for abundant space for the erection of all buildings, docks, and basins that may be required for a first-class establishment, with extensive water front for the accommodation of a large number of vessels; for facilities for procuring most rapidly supplies, stores of all kinds, and materials, except iron and coal; easy communication by water, by railroads, and by good common roads, with a country not likely to be occupied by an enemy, so as to furnish naval stores and other supplies in time of war; for an abundant supply of good, fresh water, both for all yard purposes and for the shipping, and for the facilities for procuring workmen of all classes, the board is of the opinion that while League Island possesses some of the requirements to a greater extent than New London, still either of the two points possess these qualities to an extent amply sufficient to meet all the demands of the service, and that on these points, for all practical uses of a navy-yard and naval depot, they may be regarded as equal.

That for facility of ingress and egress; for security from violent winds and sea, and from ice, whether fast or moving; for ample accommodations for safe anchorage, with good holding-ground in the adjacent waters; for the adaptation of the site to the construction of permanent stone dry-docks, wet-basins, piers, wharves, rolling mills, forge shops, furnaces, and other heavy works; for the topography of the site, whether high, requiring excavation and grading, or low, requiring filling—if the first, what is the character of the excavation, and if the second, where are the sources from which the material can be obtained; for the mean range of the tides and exposure to freshets and overflows; for the set of the currents about the site and their effects, and for the health of the vicinity, the board is of the opinion that New London Harbor is superior to League Island. That for the supply of iron and coal, and the quality of the water, whether fresh or salt, and the probable effects of the same upon the bottoms of iron vessels when laid up for a length of time, the board is of the opinion that League Island possesses advantages over the harbor of New London.

The board is aware of the importance of the advantages which League Island possesses over the harbor of New London in the immense supplies of iron and coal, which can without question be delivered at that point at cheaper rates than at any other site examined, and also of the fact that the fresh water of the Delaware River would be very advantageous to the bottoms of iron vessels. Still, in view of the very great expense that must necessarily be incurred in filling up this island before it can be of practical use for a navy-yard, the probability that a large annual appropriation will be required for maintaining a sufficient depth of water at the island by dredging, the great cost of pile foundations for every structure required in the yard, the danger from drift ice, and in view of the many advantages possessed by the harbor of New London over League Island, the board, after a very careful examination of all the points under consideration, and mature deliberation, is of the opinion that the advantages of a more abundant supply of coal and iron at League Island, and at cheaper rates, together with the advantages of fresh water, are more than balanced by the superior advantages possessed by New London in other respects; and therefore,

Resolved, That in the opinion of the board the public interests will not be promoted by acquiring the title to League Island for naval purposes.

Resolved, That the harbor of New London possesses greater advantages for a navy-yard and naval depot than any other location examined by this board.

Mr. HAWLEY. And as further indicative of the intelligent public sentiment of the country, I give the following memorial, addressed to the honorable Secretary of the Navy by the principal merchants and business men of New York, and forwarded to him in November, 1869:

The undersigned believe, in addition to the intrinsic advantages of this location for a navy-yard, that its use for that purpose would largely contribute to the protection of the commerce of Long Island Sound, and of the great city of New York in the event of a naval war. It may be assumed that this country has, in a future war with a foreign power, nothing to fear except for its commerce, and the cities adjacent to the coast. But in the event of a naval war, the first point of attack would undoubtedly be the city of New York, as it so largely concentrates the capital and the commerce of the nation. That city at present is nearly defenseless to a foreign foe in its approaches from the ocean through Long Island Sound. The sound once entered forms a great natural roadstead or harbor for a foreign fleet. It was so occupied by the British navy in the war of 1812, threatening the whole coast line and the city of New York itself. The site at New London is the strategic point, which covers the entrance of the sound, and in the opinion of competent engineers and naval authorities occupied as a naval station would furnish adequate protection to the city of New York and the commerce of the sound, thus guarding the communication between the great industries of New England and their natural market.

We hope that you will see proper to recommend that an appropriation for this object be made at the next session of Congress.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. WAIT, it was not agreed to; there being—ayes 15, noes not counted.

Mr. O'NEILL. I move to amend by inserting the following:

Navy-yard, League Island, Pennsylvania: For commencing the building of a dry-dock, $200,000.

Mr. BLOUNT. I raise a question of order on that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania whether there is any law authorizing the building of such a work at the point proposed?

Mr. O'NEILL. No, sir; but there has been great effort to get a law passed to authorize the building of a dry-dock.

The CHAIRMAN. From the phraseology of the amendment, the Chair thinks he will have to rule it out of order; for it uses the words "commencing the building." What the Chair desires to know (and he hopes the gentleman from Pennsylvania will not take more time than is necessary) is whether there is a law authorizing the construction of the work mentioned in this amendment.

Mr. O'NEILL. No, sir; there is no law distinctively proposing the construction of a dry-dock at League Island navy-yard; but there have been numerous recommendations from naval officers and others for such a dock there. In pursuance of the idea that this is one of the means for the improvement of the Navy and for general naval purposes, is it not in order to offer an amendment which would accomplish the object contemplated?

The CHAIRMAN. This is not for the construction of a work already authorized.

Mr. O'NEILL. In connection with this amendment, I wish to refer to the remarks of my friend from Tennessee, [Mr. WHITTHORNE,] the chairman of the Naval Committee. He may have his own opinion as to other locations for navy-yards; he may not like the location of New London, which was accepted by the Government; he may not like the idea of the Secretary of the Navy commencing to do something with reference to a navy-yard or naval station in Narraganset Bay. Yet I want him to consider that before he was a member of this House (and I do not think his history of the Navy goes farther back than during the time he has been a member of the Committee on Naval Affairs, for a few years its chairman) the very best officers of the Navy recommended the Government to select League Island for a naval station; and Philadelphia, as gentlemen are aware, presented the property for that purpose.

Mr. Chairman, I want to call the attention of the Committee of the Whole, the Committee on Appropriations, and the Committee on Naval Affairs to this fact: here is a location where a navy-yard can be built which will not be excelled by any navy-yard in the world.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will please confine himself to the point of order, and not discuss the necessity of the appropriation.

Mr. O'NEILL. Well, to come back to the point of order, as I said before, the idea of the Government in accepting League Island, containing eight or nine hundred acres of land, as a gift from the city of Philadelphia, was that there should be a great naval station there; and that point was selected as superior to all other locations. That was the time of the controversy between New London and Philadelphia and other places.

My desire is to make this navy-yard at League Island a complete navy-yard; and it cannot be complete until a dry-dock is built there. The gentleman from Tennessee knows that very well.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order and rules the amendment out.

Mr. O'NEILL. Then I move to amend by inserting, after the words "repairs and preservation of navy-yards, $300,000," the words "$100,000 of which amount to be expended at the League Island navy-yard."

Mr. Chairman, there can be no doubt that this amendment is in order.

Mr. BLOUNT. To save time I do not raise the question of order.

Mr. O'NEILL. Mr. Chairman, I feel a little hurt when we are considering a naval appropriation bill to find an appropriation of $200,000 made for going on with a dry-dock at Mare Island—no doubt a very proper appropriation; but it hurts my feelings. I certainly want this Government to be as well prepared in the way of navy-yards as any other government on the face of the earth. With that great territory given by the city of Philadelphia to the Government for a navy-yard, the Government has not yet even commenced the construction of a dry-dock there, although recommendations from time to time to that effect have been made by the Navy Department, by naval officers and others to the Committee on Appropriations, and for aught I know through the Navy Department and through the Secretary of the Treasury in letters of estimates. I know that there has not been a naval officer of the United States or a Secretary of the Navy within the last fifteen years who has not favored the completion of the League Island navy-yard and to a certain extent its rapid completion. To complete it there must be a dry-dock. Yet we get nothing from the Committee on Appropriations in this sundry civil appropriation bill. The only apology, I believe, is that such an item has not been asked for in the Book of Estimates—that it has not been formally asked for by the Secretary of the Navy through the Secretary of the Treasury in the Book of Estimates. I wonder whether the Congress of the United States has not the power to enact laws. For one, I do not believe in confining ourselves so much to the Book of Estimates. I do not know where the law is which limits our power. I know there is a rule in committee. We have had such a rule in the Committee on Commerce in reference to river and harbor bills. If an estimate is not made, an appropriation is not put into the bill. But, sir, the Congress of the United States has the power to make these appropriations, and I as one of its members feel it would be right for the Committee of the Whole to insert in this bill an appropriation to commence the construction of a dry-dock at League Island navy-yard.

What is next best to that is, as I propose in my amendment, to devote a large portion of this amount to repair and preservation at League Island—repairs of roads, of wharves, and everything connected with that navy-yard.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. BLOUNT. It is not even asked for.

Mr. O'NEILL. It does not increase the appropriation one dollar, but merely directs how a portion of the $300,000 shall be expended.

Mr. BLOUNT. It is not recommended by anybody.

Mr. O'NEILL. It is recommended by me, and I hope the Committee of the Whole may recommend it.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

To enable the Secretary of the Navy to cause to be constructed and placed over the unmarked graves of persons interred in the naval cemetery at Philadelphia suitable headstones, $445.

Mr. GOODE. I am instructed by the Committee on Naval Affairs to offer the following amendment:

To enable the Secretary of the Navy to establish at the Isthmus of Panama naval stations and depots of coal for the supply of steamships of war, $200,000, to be available for expenditure as soon as suitable arrangements can be made to the proposed end.

Mr. BLOUNT. I rise to a question of order on that proposition. In the first place, there is a joint resolution pending in the House for the same purpose. In the next place, it is not germane here. Relating to a coaling station, it belongs in the Navy appropriation bill under the heading of "bureau of equipment and recruiting." In the third place, there is no authority of law for it.

Mr. GOODE. I think the gentleman is mistaken in all of his propositions. There is no joint resolution, as I am advised, pending in this House authorizing an appropriation of $200,000 for this purpose.

So far as the other objection is concerned, to wit, that it is not authorized by existing law, I maintain under existing law there is ample authority for the establishment of these coaling depots and naval stations by the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. BLOUNT. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. GOODE. Certainly.

Mr. BLOUNT. I ask it with a view of getting at what is authorized by this proposition. Is there not a purpose here to buy lands on the Isthmus of Panama?

Mr. GOODE. The purpose is to do identically what the President of the United States and the Secretary of the Navy have recommended; and, if the gentleman will allow me, I will proceed to call the attention of the Chair to the acts of Congress upon which I rely for authority in the premises. The very original act, Mr. Chairman, establishing the Navy Department, in the year 1798, gives authority to the Secretary of the Navy, under the direction of the President, to do whatever may be necessary and useful to promote the Navy Department.

Again, in 1847, the chairman will find that there is an act of Congress which looks to the acquisition of foreign stations for coaling purposes. The law provides for the acquisition of coal and other stores at foreign stations, and provides that the Secretary of the Navy may appoint proper naval officers, or, if there be none such, appoint civilians to take care of such naval stores or foreign stations. But if there should be any doubt upon the mind of the chairman, then I will call his attention to and request him to examine the original act creating the Navy Department, passed in 1798, and the further act of 1847; after which examination I apprehend there can be no question. If the chairman would examine section 1552 of the Revised Statutes, which I will read, it will be found that it provides as follows:

The Secretary of the Navy may establish, at such places as he may deem necessary, suitable depots of coal, and other fuel, for the supply of steamships of war.

Now, I submit that there can be no broader or clearer provision than this, or one more comprehensive in its terms. By the very terms of the statute this authority is conferred upon the Secretary of the Navy to establish coaling depots for steamships of war.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia will please suspend for a moment to receive a message from the Senate.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. ROBESON having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. BURCH, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. No. 7033) to constitute Chattanooga, in the State of Tennessee, a port of delivery; and

A bill (H. R. No. 7103) to constitute Atlanta, Georgia, a port of delivery.

The message further announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill of the Senate No. 2184, to authorize the commissioners of the District of Columbia to appoint additional policemen for temporary service in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

The message further announced that the Senate insists upon its disagreements to the bill of the House No. 6529, making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, and for the armament thereof, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, and for other purposes, and had agreed to the conference asked for by the House of Representatives on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Messrs. ALLISON, BECK, and BOOTH as conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message further announced that the Senate insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 7101) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, and for other purposes, and had agreed to the conference asked by the House of Representatives on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses and had appointed as conferees on the part of the Senate Messrs. DAVIS of West Virginia, WILLACE, and ALLISON; and also that the Senate had passed, with an amendment, the bill (H. R. No. 3520) to establish a port of delivery at Indianapolis, in the State of Indiana; in which amendment concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. GOODE. Now, Mr. Chairman, I have referred to this section of the Revised Statutes which provides that the Secretary of the Navy may establish, at such places as he may deem necessary, these depots for coal and other fuel for steamships of war.

Now, I repeat that nothing can be more comprehensive than that expressed authority which is given by the very terms of this statute, and in addition, under another branch of the rule relied upon by the gentleman from Georgia, I insist that this proposition is in continuation of objects already in progress. Why, from the very beginning it has been the cherished object of the Government to acquire these foreign stations; as far back as the time of Mr. Jefferson, when he was the President of the United States, that was the policy of the Government. The same principle was held under the administration of Mr. Polk, of Mr. Fillmore, Mr. Pierce, and Mr. Buchanan, during which administrations earnest attention was given to this matter.

In 1859, while Mr. Buchanan was President, and Mr. Toucey Secretary of the Navy, the Government entered into a contract to acquire these coaling stations and the use of the waters as harbors in Golfito Bay and one on the east side of the Isthmus at Chiriqui Lagoon. In addition to that, showing the recognition by the Government of this great object, which I will endeavor to impress upon the House, the Select Committee on Interoceanic Ship Canal, during this very Congress, have unanimously adopted a resolution and report to this House in which they recommend the importance of the object.

Again, the Naval Committee, during the second session of the Forty-sixth Congress, reported a resolution to which the gentleman refers, and in recommending the appropriation, reported a resolution which is now on the Calendar of the House, recommending the Secretary of the Navy to take such steps as might be necessary, and the Naval Committee of the Senate have done the same thing.

There is on the Calendar of the Senate a similar resolution, and the President of the United States in his last message to Congress uses the following language:

The Secretary of the Navy has taken steps toward the establishment of naval coaling stations at the Isthmus of Panama to meet the requirements of our commercial relations with Central and South America, which are rapidly growing in importance. Locations eminently suitable, both as regards our naval purposes and the uses of commerce, have been selected, one on the east side of the Isthmus at Chiriqui Lagoon, in the Caribbean Sea, and the other on the Pacific coast, at the Bay of Golfito. The only safe harbors sufficiently commodious on the isthmus are at these points, and the distance between them is less than one hundred miles.

Now, again, Mr. Chairman, the President of the United States, during this very month, on the second day of February, sent in a special communication to Congress, transmitting a letter from the Secretary of the Navy, in which he recommends the appropriation of $200,000 for this very object.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would ask the gentleman from Virginia a question for information. The statute referred to by the gentleman reads thus:

The Secretary of the Navy may establish, at such places as he may deem necessary, suitable depots for coal and other fuel.

The purpose of the amendment is—

To enable the Secretary of the Navy to establish at the Isthmus of Panama naval stations and depots of coal.

The Chair would ask the gentleman what is the distinction between naval stations and depots for coal. In the statute, only depots for coal are mentioned; in the gentleman's amendment, naval stations and depots for coal are mentioned.

Mr. GOODE. There is really no distinction. In all the acts of Congress relating to this matter these are used as synonymous terms; sometimes the expression "naval stations," and sometimes the expression "depots for coal." There is no difficulty on that point.

I want to say to the Chair, furthermore, this recommendation of the President and the letter of the Secretary were referred to the Naval Committee. The Naval Committee, in response to that recommendation, adopted a resolution approving and certifying this to the Committee on Appropriations and asking their favorable recommendation.

And now, to sum up, I repeat the original act creating the Navy Department and the act of 1847 recognizing foreign naval stations, and especially section 1552 of the Revised Statutes, confer ample authority upon the Government to establish these coaling stations; and all the action taken by these committees, by the Interoceanic Canal Committee, by the Senate Naval Committee, by the House Naval Committee, by all the committees of this House, has been based upon the assumption that the Government had the power to do what the President now recommends, to wit, to appropriate $200,000 for this measure. It will be admitted by the gentleman from Georgia that it is in the line of economy. Here is a letter from the Secretary in which he says a quarter of a million dollars would be saved to the Government by the acquisition of these naval stations.

Mr. BLOUNT. May I ask the gentleman from Virginia if he can state how much the Government pays annually for coal?

Mr. GOODE. I am unable to say. But I say we are informed by the Secretary of the Navy that by this acquisition the Government would save more than a quarter of a million.

Mr. BLOUNT. Not at all. Read the Secretary's letter. I call the attention of the gentleman from Virginia to it.

Mr. GOODE. And I invite to it the attention of the Committee of the Whole, too. This is what the Secretary says:

It is estimated that our expenses could thus be reduced upward of a quarter of a million of dollars per annum.

Mr. BLOUNT. Estimated by whom?

Mr. GOODE. Doubtless by the Navy Department; estimated by men to whom this work has been confided; estimated by the authority of the Government by its officers who have the matter in charge; and the estimates sent in here by the President himself who says he indorses the estimate of the Secretary of the Navy, to wit, the sum of $200,000 for this purpose.

Mr. HATCH. I rise to a question of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HATCH. I understood the Chair during the progress of this bill has more than once decided that debate on all these points of order is limited to five minutes to a side. I ask that that ruling be enforced.

Mr. GOODE. I do not wish to occupy unnecessarily the time of the House. I think the objection made by the gentleman from Georgia has been answered.

Mr. BLOUNT. The rule which the gentleman from Missouri invokes does not limit debate on questions of order in the way the gentleman would state. The only limitation is how far the Chair is willing to hear a gentleman. And I suppose the Chair will not be disposed at this stage to cut off debate on so important a proposition.

Now, Rule XXI, clause 4, provides as follows:

No bill or resolution shall at any time be amended by annexing thereto or incorporating therewith the substance of any other bill or resolution pending before the House

I desire to have read a joint resolution pending before the House which has been introduced by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. GOODE] himself. It may enable us to see what a coaling station is. It will enable us to see if it does not mean something else in the eye of the gentleman from Virginia than a place to deposit coal. I ask the Clerk to read it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution authorizing and instructing the Secretary of the Navy to take the necessary steps to secure adequate coaling stations and harbors for the use of the naval forces of the United States at proper points on the Atlantic and Pacific coasts of Central America and of the American Isthmus.

Whereas the maintenance of full communication by land and sea between the Atlantic and Pacific territories of the Union is a material element of the national integrity and sovereignty; and

Whereas in the midst of the violent revolutions and the wars which continually agitate the States through the territory of which this communication, in the event of the construction of any ocean water-way or ship-canal, must be maintained, their public authorities have been shown by past experience to be unable to afford due protection to foreigners and to foreign interests within their territory, or even to defend their own soil against individual aggressions, foreign or domestic; and

Whereas it is the purpose and the policy of the United States, as set forth in a message of the President to Congress, bearing date March 8, 1880, to exercise a single and undivided protectorate and supervision over any such ocean water-way or ship-canal and the Territories through which it may be constructed in the equal interest of the innocent commerce of mankind: Therefore,

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That in order that said protectorate may be rendered efficient and complete, the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized and instructed to take such steps as may be necessary to secure adequate coaling stations and harbors for the use of the naval forces of the United States at proper points on the Atlantic and Pacific coasts of Central America and of the American Isthmus.

Mr. BLOUNT. Now, it is quite clear that in that resolution is a proposition to enable the Government to take the necessary steps to secure coaling stations at that point. And the House will bear in mind that one of the reasons recited there is not that there may be a depot for coal, but the importance of establishing an interoceanic ship-canal. And, sir, before this debate shall close, perhaps it may appear that there is much more than a coaling station in it. But for the present, however, it sufficeth to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that the proposition contained in the joint resolution which has been read is to authorize the President to take steps to establish coaling stations at that point. The omission of the appropriation is a simple matter; the great objective point is the establishment of the coaling stations themselves.

But, says the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. GOODE,] coaling stations and naval stations mean the same thing. If that is so, then, as regards coaling stations, there is no difficulty at all; because coal has already been deposited there, as it has been deposited at various points throughout the world, to suit the convenience of our Navy. There is, therefore, no difficulty upon that point. We have places now where our squadrons are stationed, and they are known as naval stations. In various parts of the world we have what are known as naval stations. But they are altogether different from coaling stations.

I do not dispute the proposition which the gentleman has made, that coal may be deposited at various points, wherever the Navy may need it; that is one proposition; that is a simple thing. But even if that was all the gentleman means, as I have already said, this amendment is not germane to this bill. The naval supply of coal is by virtue of an appropriation under the head of the Bureau of Equipment and Recruiting in the naval appropriation bill. We have already appropriated the money for that purpose; it has already passed the House in the naval appropriation bill; and, if so, it is not germane here.

What does the gentleman really mean? What is the purpose of this movement? The gentleman says it is for coaling stations. He does not tell how we are to make any saving at all by this, and we are left very much in the dark except what little light is thrown upon the subject by the provisions of the joint resolution which was introduced by the gentleman himself and which has been read. I say that this amendment is unquestionably and distinctly not germane to this bill, if it is simply for the purpose of purchasing coal down there and saving large sums of money in that way. If it is simply what my friend claims, then it is clearly out of order, because it is substantially the same as a joint resolution now pending before this House.

The gentleman tells us that this will result in a saving of $250,000 per annum. How? What does he mean? You have already appropriated the money to buy the coal, and you have your depots down there. What does the gentleman then mean by this appropriation of $200,000 for coaling stations? If he means to buy land there, then the law expressly prohibits the purchase of any land on account of the United States except under a law specially authorizing such purchase.

Does my friend mean to purchase coal mines there, in order to make the saving that he claims will be made? If that be so, if he has any purpose of making any permanent investment, then the proposition is out of order. And if it is simply to buy coal for the Navy, then it is in the wrong place.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I deem this amendment to be in order, and not liable to the exceptions of the gentleman from Georgia, [Mr. BLOUNT.] He says, first, that the joint resolution introduced by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. GOODE] is in substance the same as the amendment submitted by him. If gentlemen will look at the joint resolution they will see that Congress by it undertakes to advise, so to speak, or to instruct the Secretary of the Navy to select such stations.

Now, at this very moment of time, under the general law of the land, the Secretary of the Navy has the right to select coaling stations anywhere he may see proper. And Congress, or the Committee on Naval Affairs, might well have left to the Secretary of the Navy this general discretion under the law.

But the subject-matter being one of such importance, the committee have seen fit to endeavor to instruct him to do this thing. Suppose it is done with law. That is all the resolution proposes. Now, what is the object of this amendment? It is to appropriate a sum of money for the purpose of making a permanent establishment or station there. That is essentially different, and proposes to accomplish an entirely different office from that proposed to be accomplished by the joint resolution.

Mr. BLOUNT. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. WHITTHORNE. Certainly.

Mr. BLOUNT. The gentleman from Virginia claims that in section 1552 of the Revised Statutes there is already authority conferred to establish coaling stations. To what does the joint resolution refer which authorizes the Secretary of the Navy to go to work to establish stations?

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I thought the gentleman's common sense would enable him to take in the proposition. It is simply saying that if the Congress of the United States deems it of sufficient commercial and national importance to direct the Secretary of the Navy to acquire a naval station or a coaling station in the Island of Cuba, it could direct it to be done. But the Secretary of the Navy can do that without the direction of Congress. It is simply the legitimate discretion which belongs to the sovereign power, and which we sought to exercise here during the last session of Congress.

Now, in addition to section 1552, I ask the attention of the Chair to section 1438:

The Secretary of the Navy shall order a suitable commissioned or warrant officer of the Navy, except in the case provided in section 1414, to take charge of the naval stores for foreign squadrons at each of the foreign stations where such stores may be deposited, and where a store-keeper may be necessary.

Mr. BLOUNT. Does that refer to coaling stations?

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I was reading this clause for the purpose of answering the hypercritical distinction which my friend from Georgia attempted to draw between a coaling depot and a naval station.

I would also bring to the legal mind of the Chair the inherent and necessary powers of the Commander-in-Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States. The President of the United States is the commander-in-chief of the Navy. Now, the Navy does not content itself with the exercise of its functions upon our own coasts, and within sight of our own shores. It must go in other directions; it must float upon distant waters; and in the administration of that branch of the service, it becomes necessary that you shall have depots of supply or stations of supply. From the foundation of the Government down to the present time the President of the United States has uniformly, under the powers given by law, selected stations or depots of supply. Down, probably, from the time of the introduction of steam——

Mr. BLOUNT. If the object of this amendment is only to establish depots for coal, what is the necessity of the amendment, when the Secretary of the Navy already has ample power to establish such coal depots as he may deem necessary?

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I will come to that point in a moment.

Mr. BLOUNT. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question? I desire to know whether or not the purpose of this appropriation is to purchase land or any other property. I ask this for an important reason, which I will refer to later, as I do not wish now to interrupt the gentleman.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I will come to that in a moment, as well as to the point suggested by the Chair.

Now, with the introduction of steam, coal became, of course, one of the supplies of the Navy; and without special authority the Secretary of the Navy, under the general law of the land, could have selected a station, and coal would have been one of the supplies of the Navy. But, Mr. Chairman, here is, first, express authority given to the Secretary of the Navy to select stations; and secondly, specific authority to select four depots.

But the inquiry is intimated, if the Secretary of the Navy may already select these, what is the need of the amendment?

Why, Mr. Chairman, do I travel out of the limits of the question of order when I say that upon such a point no statesman of this country should pause or stickle? The region of country now under consideration is possibly to be the limit of the great coastwise trade of the United States. If contemplated improvements are to be made it is to become in the future a naval theater equal to the Bosphorus in the past. And here, if statesmanship shall grasp the occasion, is an opportunity to obtain control over the only coal supply in that region of country. This amendment has in view that you shall confer upon the commander-in-chief of the Navy, upon the Chief Executive representative of the Government, power by lease or otherwise, to make that which is temporary more permanent in form and character, not only in the interest of the Government but with reference to the great commercial and national interests of the country. I warn gentlemen who stand here to stickle upon a mere question of order that they are trifling with an opportunity involving great national interests, which should not be endangered by any delay or technicality.

Mr. BLOUNT. In view of the speech of my friend who has just taken his seat I call attention to another section of the Revised Statutes.

Mr. SPRINGER. May I not suggest that this discussion be confined to the point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to have it so confined.

Mr. SPRINGER. It seems to have taken a wide range on the merits. As I am satisfied from the intimation of the Chair that he will rule against the amendment, I hope we may not occupy further time upon the point.

The CHAIRMAN. As at present advised the Chair will refer this point of order to the Committee of the Whole for decision; and therefore he desires that the committee shall hear the argument upon the question.

Mr. BLOUNT. Do I understand that the Chair proposes not to decide this question himself, but to submit it to the committee?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair at present feels disposed to refer the question of order to the Committee of the Whole for its action.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Chairman, the object of this appropriation, as stated by the gentleman from Tennessee, is to lease or purchase mining lands for the use of the Navy Department. Whichever may be the purpose, I contend it cannot properly be carried out on this bill. If the idea is to buy land, I refer to section 3736 of the Revised Statutes:

No lands shall be purchased on account of the United States, except under a law authorizing such purpose.

If the object is to lease lands with a view of obtaining fuel for the Navy, I refer to section 3732:

No contract or purchase on behalf of the United States shall be made, unless the same is authorized by law or is under an appropriation adequate to its fulfillment, except in the War or Navy Departments, for clothing, subsistence, forage, fuel, quarters, or transportation, which, however, shall not exceed the necessities of the current year.

It goes on to direct this purchase shall be made by advertisement. So, in either point of view, it is entirely improper.

But one thing the gentleman has failed to discuss and that is that anything relating to coal for the Navy is not germane to this bill, but to the Navy appropriation bill which has already been disposed of.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I call for the reading of the President's message on the subject.

Mr. BLOUNT. Are you going, Mr. Chairman, to have the message read on the point of order?

Mr. GOODE. I think it is a proper thing to do, in view of the gentleman's speech. He asks whether we want to buy land, and I want the gentleman and the committee to understand exactly what we do want.

Mr. CONGER. On the point of order I desire to say a word. What acquaintance I have, Mr. Chairman, with this subject at all was gained when the subject was presented to the Interoceanic Canal Committee. That committee took considerable pains to find out the authority under which the Secretary of the Navy established coaling stations, and it came to the conclusion there was no possible doubt of the power of the President, or the Secretary of the Navy under his direction, to establish coaling stations in foreign ports to supply the necessities of our Navy. They found the laws which have been cited, which are cited in this report, and about which I think there can be no question, give authority to do it. They found also that in 1859, under those very laws, President Buchanan and his then Secretary of the Navy did contract for these two same coaling stations and obtained possession of them, and for a time occupied them. The right still remains and has remained in the United States by virtue of that contract made in 1859. So not only does the law authorize the Secretary of the Navy to establish depots of coaling stations in foreign countries which are the cruising grounds of our naval vessels, but it was done years ago, and it is the acknowledged right and property of the United States. The Committee on Interoceanic Ship Canal, after careful examination, gave the Secretary of the Navy its opinion at least that a coaling station was necessary at these places. They were convinced these places on the Gulf and on the Pacific coast were the best and the only harbors where we could procure and keep coaling stations for our Navy cruising in Panama waters. They recommended, therefore, that coaling stations should be re-established there.

Now, one other consideration, for I will not delay further upon that point. I assume that the proof is conclusive from the reading of the law that the authority to establish coaling stations from 1798 has been vested in the President and in the Secretary of the Navy. We cannot have a steam-squadron cruising in any of the waters of the world without having convenient coaling stations.

Sir, the expense of furnishing coal for the Pacific Mail Steamship Company at the Sandwich Islands is very great. The coaling station for that company costs hundreds of thousands of dollars. The expense of transporting coal there to be used by that company in crossing the ocean since its organization will amount to millions.

This bill is to provide for this coaling station, to build the docks and to transport the coal there in order to make it a coaling station. We cannot send tenders along with every fleet. We cannot send vessels laden with coal to accompany every steam-vessel which we send into foreign waters to protect our commerce. We must either have, if we have a steam navy at all, coaling stations or a fleet of coal-laden vessels to accompany our squadrons.

We have the right to this station. We have possession of the property there by a contract made in 1859. These are the best and the only places for a safe harbor and for a coaling station either on the Pacific side or on the Gulf side of that Isthmus. There is not an equally good station a hundred miles north or south on the Pacific, or nearer than San Juan River, a poor station north, and none above the Orinoco on the south.

What is this proposition? It is to keep up that coaling station, which is a necessity, to pay for transporting coal there, and to provide proper accommodations for furnishing our war vessels with necessary fuel when they are in the Gulf or in the Pacific.

The gentleman says there is another bill like this. There is no bill making appropriation for this coaling station. There have been bills for establishing and regulating it, and here is an appropriation of money in the only bill where it ought to be, that is, in the sundry civil appropriation bill.

It is a surprise to me that any one who has looked at the provisions of the law from 1798 up to the present time should doubt we could not have coaling stations for our vessels even when they were wooden vessels, just for the supply of those vessels with fuel without regard to its necessity in the generation of steam. But in the present condition of our Navy if we have steam-vessels we must have coaling stations to supply them. The proof shows this station has been selected under authority of law, and we want it kept so. There is no use in a steam squadron if we have not coaling stations. They must be provided beforehand at the places where they are necessary. This is to provide such a station, to transport there the coal and put it upon the docks and furnish such accommodations for storing as may be necessary.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair having some doubts upon the point of order, which he prefers not to decide himself, resolves it in favor of the right of the members of the committee itself to decide the question, and with that view will ask the Clerk to report the amendment to the committee, and then read the joint resolution, which it is said embraces substantially the same subject-matter.

Mr. McMAHON. I would like the privilege of being heard for a few moments upon the point of order. I thought the Chair was going to decide it without further debate.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman with pleasure.

Mr. McMAHON. Mr. Chairman, I hope that as this question has been submitted to the committee we will not make any mistake upon a question of order because of any supposed exigencies or important public occasion which may be claimed would justify a departure from our rules. Nothing is better settled under our rules than that there shall not be incorporated by way of amendment to a pending proposition the substance of another bill which is pending before Congress.

Now that another bill containing substantially the same provisions as this amendment is pending before Congress, is as plain to me as that two and two make four.

I will read the joint resolution which is pending, and show that it is in substance the same. This joint resolution provides:

That in order that said protectorate—

That is, said protectorate over the coaling stations, &c.—

may be rendered efficient and complete, the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized and instructed to take such steps as may be necessary to secure adequate coaling stations and harbors for the use of the naval forces of the United States at proper points on the Atlantic and Pacific coasts of Central America and of the American Isthmus.

Now, what is the difference between this joint resolution and the proposition pending in the amendment before the committee? That now before the committee goes only a little farther and proposes to appropriate money for the purpose of buying land or stations or something. That is about the only difference between them.

I hope, Mr. Chairman, that our friends upon both sides of the House will look at the question as it is. Nobody supposes that this has reference exclusively to coaling stations, or that there is nothing else behind it. Nobody supposes that an amendment which provides the sum of some two hundred thousand dollars for coaling stations is all that is contemplated. Behind all of this there is something else; something that interests the Executive of the country; something that interests somebody engaged in great schemes, in which they hope to interest Congress. What, then, is that interest, and where is it located?

There is, Mr. Chairman, to my knowledge, in existence such an association as the Chiriqui Land Improvement Company, which owns some two millions of acres of land, that embraces the points contemplated in this bill; and you may find, possibly, that millions of dollars are contemplated to be paid for this property in the future, and $200,000 paid for some few thousand feet of it at the present time. These facts I know, because the whole question was presented to the sub-committee having the matter in charge, and I had an opportunity of looking into it in that way, and the committee did not choose to have itself run blindly into this subject, when it found that the chief promoters of the enterprise before the committee were agents and attorneys, as admitted, of this improvement company.

And here, Mr. Chairman, if I may be pardoned a slight digression, I will refer briefly to a matter of public history in connection with this subject, and state what is a fact, that there is in existence to-day a written contract, which is signed by President Lincoln as President of the United States and authorized by a concurrent resolution of the two Houses of Congress, a contract having in contemplation the purchase of this very property—and for what purpose? It was for the purpose of planting upon it, and I say this is a matter of history, a colony. It was for the purpose of colonizing the colored people of the District of Columbia. The project was inaugurated; it was completed. It had met with the concurrence of both Houses of Congress. It received the approval and sanction of the President of the United States, and an address was distributed among the colored people in the District of Columbia communicating the facts to them. A steamer was procured and prepared to steam, everything was ready to embark in the enterprise of colonizing, when on a sudden the programme of our republican brethren then in charge of the Government was changed and nobody took passage upon the steamer, and the contract has never been fulfilled. But the contract is still in existence and claimed to be a binding one between the improvement company and the Government of the United States.

Now, what I do not want to see here is that this House shall blink the real question before it. We must look at the question squarely and meet the issue that is presented. Coaling stations are a small matter in connection with this subject, for while we are after these coaling stations we are also providing for the attempted control of two great foreign harbors upon the Gulf of Mexico and the Pacific coast.

Mr. Chairman, let the question come before us in the proper shape. Let us know what we are voting for. Let us understand exactly what the proposition is that is sought to be accomplished. Let us know what private claims, if any, are involved in this matter. I do not know. I will not assert, for I do not know, but I have a suspicion that it is not the commerce or the glory of the United States Government alone that is sought to be protected or that is at stake. I think there are other matters behind. And they have a right to be behind. I do not undertake to question their right. On the contrary, I admit it. All I ask is that they shall not be concealed, but that a close and intelligent statement of the proposition that is before us may be made with a view to a proper determination of the question presented in these two bills, with a full knowledge of results.

I maintain that the two propositions are practically and substantially the same thing, contemplate the same steps; and I think that while the language of the rule, of the old rule, required the bills to be identical, the new rule is clear and explicit that substantial identity is all that is needed to make the proposed amendment inadmissible. That this is in substance the same bill gentlemen cannot deny, and I hope that we will not be asked to whip the devil around the stump where the object if not the phraseology of both bills is the same.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair now submits to the committee the point of order made by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. GOODE.] And in order that the question may be fully understood, the Chair will cause the amendment to be again read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert at the end of line 834 as follows:

"To enable the Secretary of the Navy to establish at the Isthmus of Panama naval stations and depots of coal for supplies of steamships of war $200,000, to be available for expenditure as soon as suitable arrangements can be made to the proposed end."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on sustaining the point of order made by the gentleman from Georgia.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 65, noes 66.

Mr. BLOUNT. I call for tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. A quorum not having voted, the Chair will order tellers, and appoints the gentleman from Virginia, Mr. GOODE, and the gentleman from Georgia, Mr. BLOUNT.

Mr. FORT. I should like to have the question again stated.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will again cause the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia to be read.

The amendment was again read.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia made the point of order on that amendment and that question is submitted by the Chair to the committee. Those who consider the point of order is well taken will vote in the affirmative, and those who consider it is not well taken will vote in the negative.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 79, noes 99.

The CHAIRMAN. The "noes" have it, and the point of order is overruled. The question recurs on the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. BLOUNT addressed the Chair.

Mr. KEIFER. I make the point of order that debate is not in order while the committee is dividing.

Mr. BLOUNT. I came from where I was acting as teller directly to my seat, with the view of addressing the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Chairman, I trust that this appropriation is not to be added to this bill; and for the reason that there has been no opportunity for the discussion of it. The joint resolution which has been read from the Clerk's desk shows, and the speeches of the gentleman from Virginia show, that this amendment means something more than the establishment of coaling stations; that it is connected with public works across the Isthmus of Panama; that it relates to great questions of commerce. These are the arguments upon which it is claimed that this appropriation should be passed, passed upon this bill, passed in a debate of five minutes, passed when there is no opportunity of discussing so great a question as gentlemen claim this to be.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will remind the gentleman from Georgia that the amendment is now open to debate.

Mr. BLOUNT. Has the Chair or myself the floor?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has the floor; but the Chair reminded him that debate on the amendment had not been interfered with.

Mr. BLOUNT. I yield to the Chair if he desires to address the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman was complaining no opportunity had been given for debating the merits of this proposition. The Chair desired to inform the gentleman that there has been no limitation put upon this debate beyond what is provided for in the rule.

Mr. BLOUNT. Either the wit of the Chair is at fault or he has entirely misunderstood me. I simply referred to what is provided by the rules of this House, that in Committee of the Whole, when an amendment to a paragraph is proposed, we have only five minutes on each side for debate; and I hardly expected the Chair to take that reference as an offense to himself.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will proceed if he is satisfied.

Mr. BLOUNT. I will, sir. I am satisfied, and I trust the Chair will not interrupt me further, as I have but five minutes.

Now, Mr. Chairman, as I was stating when interfered with by the Chair, there has been no opportunity for the discussion of this question except in the paltry debate under the five-minute rule. I say that this House—this democratic House—which has for years preserved its good name against any intimation of scandal, will well weigh the proposition to load this on an appropriation bill, or to attach it to an appropriation bill, in view of the statement made by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. MCMAHON] that this very proposition is being urged by a land company on this isthmus, represented by its counsel in all of these committee-rooms making their specious argument, with no opportunity for meeting it save in this way.

How did it get here? It comes here, sir, on the idea of establishing a coaling station. It comes before this House on the subtle idea of our needing coal stations and saving $250,000 in the item of coal annually. Why, sir, I have one report of the Secretary of the Navy in which it appears the expenditures for that year were $75,000 for coal. I have another report of the Secretary in which the coal purchased in one year is said to amount to $329,000. The average of these appropriations would not exceed $300,000 a year for the item of coal. And yet the gentleman told us it is estimated there will be a saving of $250,000 each year in the expense of coal. You are asked to give $200,000 to establish coaling stations on that isthmus, about the value of which you know nothing, on the idea you are to save $250,000 for coal annually, when your aggregate expenditures for that article will scarcely more than equal that sum. I ask this committee, in view of the reasons which have been urged, in view of the inducements which have been held out—which I believe are visionary and false—in view of all the circumstances surrounding this transaction, that they will not attempt to fasten this appropriation on this bill.

Other committees considered this question during the last session. Why have we not their report? Why have they not recommended it with the opportunities of information they have had? Why have we not their opinion? And yet we are to place in this bill this sum for the purchase of these lands in this shape. I trust, sir, that the committee, after admitting the amendment on the point of order, will refuse to authorize this contract for this purchase on the slight information which has thus far been given to it.

Mr. KEIFER rose.

Mr. ATHERTON. Before the gentleman from Ohio proceeds I desire to ask a single question about one matter. I understand the gentleman from Georgia has thrown out some intimation that persons who are interested in this bill have attempted to corrupt members of this House. I think he should either not make any such intimation or give us distinct information on that subject.

Mr. BLOUNT. I made no such intimation, and I reckon no one else but the gentleman inferred it from anything that I said. If any one did, I utterly disclaim any such intention, and especially toward gentlemen who have been urging it and who are my political and personal friends.

Mr. KEIFER. It is, perhaps, well for this committee, in deciding what legislation we wish to put on this bill, to pay some attention to the estimates and reports of the heads of Departments. We learn only now from the gentleman who has charge of this bill that there is no sort of economy in making the appropriation proposed by the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. GOODE.] I beg the attention of that gentleman to the significance of his own remark. I want to know what justifies him in making the statement that the Secretary of the Navy did not know anything about this subject at the time he said there would be large gains and great economy in making this specific appropriation?

Mr. BLOUNT. The reports for years and years have repudiated the idea, and there is not an element of detail in any of them. Will the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER] while on the floor state wherein the saving will consist?

Mr. KEIFER. We are to be told that the opinion of a gentleman holding the high position of chairman of a sub-committee of the Committee on Appropriations is to be taken against the estimate of the Secretary of the Navy made with great care, not by the present Secretary alone, but by the preceding Secretary as well. This estimate was so carefully made that when it was submitted to the President, in his judgment it was of sufficient importance to warrant him in sending a special message upon the subject to Congress as recently as the second day of this month. The gentleman says there is no proof of such saving in this report of the Secretary of the Navy. Let me read one clause of it:

To obtain at either or both of those points facilities for economical, convenient, and ample supply of suitable coal for our naval and commercial marine, in the Caribbean Sea, the South Atlantic and the Pacific Oceans, is most desirable, and the consummation of this will result in large economy in the expenses of the Navy Department.

And then is added:

It is estimated that our expenses could thus be reduced upwards of a quarter of a million of dollars per annum.

The official documentary evidence on file in Congress and in the Navy Department shows that the location of the harbors selected on the Atlantic and Pacific shores of the Isthmian lands includes extraordinary advantages to the United States.

The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] undertakes to say, on the authority, I believe, of some gentleman on this floor from the State of Ohio, that this proposition to establish a depot for coal is entirely in the interest of some corporation. Sir, that is an old cut-and-dried expression which comes in before us all the time, that whatever is proposed is 'n the interest of a corporation.

Now, if the gentleman had learned what was in the amendment as offered, he would have found that it was for the purpose of providing naval stations or depots for coal for the purpose of supplying steamships of war; not to supply any other kinds of vessels, but to supply steamships of war. Now, why should he state that such a proposition was in the interest of some monopoly, or some corporation, unless he found that old argument a convenient one to use against a proper appropriation?

One thing more. The gentleman undertakes to say that we have had coal down there at this station, or had purchased it to the amount of only a few thousand dollars a year. The gentleman forgets that coal is purchased elsewhere and carried there at great cost of transportation, and in that sense it is not purchased there. It is economy to purchase it and furnish it to coal depots in that particular locality. That is all I desire to say.

Mr. MCMAHON. It is a very surprising fact to me, if it be a fact, as my colleague from the State of Ohio [Mr. KEIFER] seems to intimate, that there are rich coal mines in this neighborhood——

Mr. KEIFER. I did not say anything of the kind.

Mr. MCMAHON. It is surprising, Mr. Chairman, if there is certain coaling property, the use of which for furnishing coal——

Mr. KEIFER. They are to be placed there.

Mr. MCMAHON. If there are rich coal mines there and the location of stations would save to the Government annually $250,000, I do not see how it is that some cute Yankee or some of the owners of the land who are American citizens, or some capitalists outside of them, have not mined this coal and disposed of it to the United States. How is this "$250,000 annually" to be saved? Is there coal there? If so, why does not the Chiriqui Land Improvement Company open the mines and sell the coal to the Government? If the coal is to be transported there, why cannot we for a small price get the right to land the coal there? How many acres would it take to establish a coal depot there?

I repeat what I said before, that the American Congress ought to be slow in making appropriations for these purposes without more definite information. I speak it to my democratic associates who are now going out of the control of this House. I do not expect anything better from gentlemen on the other side, for they have a political interest in making our record as bad as it is possible to make it.

Mr. BROWNE. You do not need any help.

Mr. MCMAHON. I say we ought to be careful, we ought to scan closely, not only the present expenditure of money, but all propositions involving the possibility of future expenditures.

Let some gentleman on the other side, or some gentleman on this side, who must of course have investigated this question, and must have some intelligent opinion upon it, give in the facts and figures, the why and wherefore, in support of the proposition, that by this project we are to save $200,000 or $250,000 a year. When I am satisfied of that I will vote for the measure. But what are we to get for our money? How many acres or square miles or feet front? What mines, privileges, &c.?

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, there are two committees of this House having charge of subjects concerning the Navy. That committee which is specially charged with the investigation of this subject is denied the power or the right ever to come into this House and ask an appropriation for the benefit of the Navy. Yet, sir, that committee has investigated this subject calmly and dispassionately, with the recommendation of the President and the Secretary of the Navy before them; and there has been no "land jobber" in the presence of that committee. If any gentleman connected with either of these committees has been assailed or pursued by any agent of a land company, that agent knew too much to come to the Committee on Naval Affairs. He must have sought the Committee on Appropriations; and I certainly do not know his name.

Mr. MCMAHON. The difference, however, is that he got from the Naval Committee what he wanted, and did not get it from the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. GOODE. No representative of any job was ever before the Naval Committee.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, when the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. MCMAHON] rose here in his place, and in a speech of five minutes threw out intimations and insinuations without ever making a single statement of fact, I felt he was dealing unfairly with this subject. When the gentleman wishes to make a charge he should make it boldly in the presence of the House and the country, and not make a sly insinuation affecting the honor and integrity of the Naval Committee, or the Committee on Appropriations, or of any person who may have come before those committees to represent the facts.

Mr. Chairman, it is believed by the Executive and by the Secretary of the Navy that in view of complications which may arise in the future, it is the dictate of wisdom that we should have coaling and naval stations upon the Atlantic and Pacific sides of the Isthmus; and we could not have such stations without money. Is this House unwilling to intrust to the Executive and to an honest Secretary of the Navy, such as I believe every gentleman will concede we have, the power to fix those locations? Are gentlemen unwilling to place at the disposal of these officers the necessary appropriations to accomplish so desirable an end? There may be some men on the Panama Isthmus who own land and want to sell it; there may be men who own coal and want to dispose of it, for aught I know, although I never heard of it until to-day. Yet, if that be so, and the country requires coal, I say let these men have the opportunity to sell it to us, so that we may supply the coaling stations which our Navy requires.

Mr. Chairman, I did not intend or expect to participate in this debate. I was not upon the sub-committee that investigated this subject. I can say that we, as a committee, took the facts and the figures, with no testimony before us except that which we received in print, and as it was communicated to us by the chairman of the sub-committee. On such information we settled the question calmly and without prejudice, and I believe we settled it rightly.

Mr. MCMAHON. Will the gentleman, before he sits down, permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. Certainly.

Mr. MCMAHON. Will the gentleman please state to the committee, in some detailed form or in some general form, how the Government of the United States is to save $250,000 by adopting this proposition?

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. I do not know that it is to save a dollar; I have made no such statement; I do not know the fact. I do know that we need those coaling stations there; and I can conceive that if a vessel of the United States upon the Pacific should be able to get a supply of coal within a couple of hundred miles, it would be a vast saving as compared with having to take a tender along with it, or having to make a voyage of one thousand miles to supply itself. I can conceive of a saving to a very large extent by having a supply at hand at the points where it is needed.

Mr. KING. It was not my intention to take any part in this debate; but as the gentleman in charge of this bill has seen proper to refer to the committees which have made some recommendations on this subject, and has stated, as I understood, that jobbers appeared before those committees, (or used language to that effect,) and as I have the honor to represent one of those committees——

Mr. BLOUNT. The gentleman is certainly mistaken.

Mr. KING. The words are upon the record. In behalf of the Committee on the Interoceanic Canal, and speaking as its chairman, I repel those words with the spirit in which they deserve to be repelled. The recommendation of that committee, as embodied in the resolution already presented to this House, was based simply upon information obtained from the highest sources of this Government. A new commerce drawing upon us in the Caribbean, vast interests to be developed in two continents by the interoceanic canal, discovered to that committee the fact that this Government has no control over one spot of land south of the mouth of the Rio Grande whereon to deposit any coal supplies.

The British and other Governments possess such advantages in those waters for their steam naval and commercial marine; but this great power, the American Government, dominating as it does this entire continent, possesses no such facilities. It was alone with that motive the committee acted when it asked the Secretary of the Navy to establish these coaling stations. The further they have gone into the subject the more convinced has the committee become of the righteousness of its action.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. Mr. Chairman, from what has been said I deem it proper to call the attention of my friend from Ohio and my friend from Georgia who talk about democracy to the fact that I was born in the faith. I do not have to go, therefore, to either one of those gentlemen to learn what democracy is. And when it comes to the question of economy, I can present a record personal to myself, as well as of the committee with which I am associated, which will justify a comparison with any other individual or any other committee upon this floor. And allow me to say to these gentlemen that it is because they are not democrats and do not understand the true signification of democracy and its mission that I find them opposed to this amendment to-day. Sir, the leaders of the democratic party from Jefferson down to the days of Douglas and Cass have shown that the spirit of democracy always looked beyond the mere little territory by which we were surrounded. They were expansive in their ideas. If you please, underneath this proposition here and which leads me to advocate it is the fact that it carries out the ideas once entertained by the democratic party of this country of the manifest destiny of this great Republic.

No pent-up Utica contracts our powers;
The whole boundless continent is ours.

Ideas like these have inspired my democracy. The gentlemen are neophytes in democracy.

One word now as to the intimation there lies under this proposition any job. When it came before this Committee on Naval Affairs, I referred the matter to my honorable friend from Virginia [Mr. GOODE] as a sub-committee. If anybody appeared before him or before the committee as a jobber, neither he nor the committee knew anything of it. And the intimation is uncharitable and false.

Mr. McMAHON. I never made it.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. That is satisfactory, then. Again, Mr. Chairman, the entire committee looked at this proposition. My friend from Virginia, [Mr. GOODE,] of the sub-committee, in reporting it seemed to have the acumen to know that if there was any one down in that country who supposed he was master of the situation instead of compelling the Executive to buy from the Chiriqui company or any other company, the Executive was simply clothed with the power to buy these stations on these two coasts.

It has been industriously circulated on this floor as coming from high authority that this is squandering $200,000; that you could get these things for nothing. Sir, there is nothing in this legislation which compels the President of the United States to pay $200,000 for the property if he can get it for $5,000 or $1,000. Be just to the committee and be just to common sense. Here is a proposition simply authorizing the President to do this thing, and you give him a limited sum of money with which to do it.

And there is beyond all this, Mr. Chairman, the motive which operated with the Committee on Naval Affairs that the honor and interest of this country might be involved in the great work contemplated by a distinguished French citizen or French company; and if I were uncharitable, if I were as some gentlemen on this floor, I could make the intimation that the managers of the French scheme were here to defeat a great American idea and project. But I do not believe that, nor do I indulge in any intimations of that kind. I believe the committee and the country will be animated with the same spirit as the Naval Committee, that the future interests of our country, that our future commerce, that our future honor demanded this work and this appropriation to meet these possible emergencies.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. ROBESON rose.

Mr. McMAHON. Do you rise to speak in opposition?

Mr. ROBESON. Not in favor of it.

Mr. McMAHON. Then the gentleman had better follow me. Now, Mr. Chairman, the last remark of my distinguished friend is a little unfortunate when he considers that the Secretary of the Navy who recommended these matters happens to be the president, as I understand it, of the French canal company, and was at one time in some way interested in it.

Mr. GOODE. No; the gentleman is mistaken. This recommendation is made by the present Secretary of the Navy, Mr. Goff, and was sent here indorsed by the President.

Mr. McMAHON. Did not I hear my colleague from Ohio, [Mr. KEIFER,] when he had the floor, state the present Secretary had concurred in the recommendation of the previous Secretary?

Mr. GOODE. Here is a recommendation, if the gentleman will have it read.

Mr. KEIFER. A similar one prior to that.

Mr. McMAHON. The gentleman is unfortunate in his reference. I happen to be well acquainted with the late honorable Secretary, R. W. Thompson. He never spoke to me upon the question. If he had, it would probably have been in favor of the measure. The original grant was to Ambrose Thompson, whose connection with the late Secretary I do not know.

Mr. KING. But the gentleman from Ohio is attacking——

Mr. McMAHON. Well, the gentleman is not in a position now to discuss that point with me. I have attacked nobody. I want to say to the gentleman and to the members of the Naval or other committee, who have the right to speak earnestly upon the question, because certain matters which we have developed have given them information they never had as a committee, that I have never made a charge nor an intimation even as to the members of the Naval Committee or as to the Interoceanic Committee that there was any ground or basis or belief of improper motives in their action.

Mr. KING. The language of the gentleman is of record.

Mr. McMAHON. Of course it is of record.

Mr. KING. It will show what it is.

Mr. McMAHON. I know that will, and I invite careful attention to it; and, Mr. Chairman, if I have made an unjust insinuation, or if my language will bear that construction, I am manly enough to make the proper correction right here. Gentlemen must not be too sensitive. I am only stating facts, as well as I know them, and not reflecting upon gentlemen's motives.

Mr. GOODE. I did not understand the gentleman from Ohio as alluding in any personal manner to myself as a member of that committee, nor did I regard the insinuation as having a bearing in that direction, because if I had I should have promptly met the insinuation.

Mr. McMAHON. Exactly; and I would have had more respect for the gentleman if he had done so. But I say such was not the fact nor my intention.

But, Mr. Chairman, there are facts in connection with this matter that the two committees of this House charged with investigating and reporting such bills do not seem to have discovered. Facts have been stated and developed in this discussion by another committee which are new to them, as gentlemen admit. And when in the examination of such measures these committees, where careful investigation ought to have taken place, when they come upon the floor of this House and claim that they have made a full examination, as the gentleman from Massachusetts does, and as other gentlemen do, and yet have discovered for the first time on the floor of the House that this Chiriqui Land Improvement Company are the owners of 2,000,000 of acres of land here; that they propose to sell only a small portion——

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. If you mean to say that the Naval Committee have had any such information, I hope you will state it frankly.

Mr. McMAHON. That is exactly what I complain of. I say that you did not have such information. You admit that you learned it here for the first time.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. You say it, or intimate that the committees have not acted in the matter as they should have acted. Now, if you have a charge against the Committee on Naval Affairs make it distinctly.

Mr. McMAHON. I have no charge against the committee. I was going on to say, sir, when interrupted, it is only because outside of the Executive influences leading up to this scheme.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. Then it is a complaint against the Executive and not against the committee?

Mr. McMAHON. I will repeat—"outside of the Executive influences."

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. Put the responsibility somewhere when you make the assertion. What executive do you refer to?

Mr. McMAHON. I want to know if there is more than one Executive——

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. You have made a statement that there were Executive influences; now will you state to whom you referred?

Mr. McMAHON. I am about to state what I mean. If the gentleman knows of any more executives than one in this country, or any other executive influences that I could refer to, he has information that I am not in possession of. I want to say to the gentleman from Massachusetts now, and repeat it, that outside of the Executive influences that were slyly cast around the sub-committee of the Appropriations Committee——

Mr. HISCOCK. Whom do you refer to?

Mr. McMAHON. And a gentleman came before us—I do not call him a "land jobber," as gentlemen say——

Mr. HISCOCK. Will the gentleman indicate the "sly influences" of the Executive Department that surrounded the members of the sub-committee?

Mr. McMAHON. Do I understand that a friend of the President calls for that information?

Mr. HISCOCK. I call for an answer to the insinuation that the gentleman has made. I ask him what are the "sly influences" to which he refers.

Mr. McMAHON. Does the gentleman want the House to know? Do I understand that a friend of the President wants that information? Does he wish me to be more specific?

Mr. BURROWS. No, but a friend of honesty and fair dealing asks it.

Mr. HISCOCK. If the gentleman has any such information, I want him to give it to the House.

Mr. McMAHON. Very well, you shall have it. Private Secretary Rogers is his first and last name, [applause on the democratic side,] who represented the executive influence to which I refer. Now, Mr. Chairman, that I did not want to say. I preferred to state this fact in my own way, without calling names, that the Executive took great interest in these stations, but when gentlemen have compelled me in this manner, I say that it is right that I should name him, and I cannot help it. It is true.

Mr. HASKELL. May I ask the gentleman from Ohio a question?

Mr. McMAHON. Not at this moment.

Mr. CALKINS. Give us the whole thing.

Mr. McMAHON. I will go a little further. When I made my opening statement I said that a gentleman appeared before the sub-committee. I knew him to be an attorney for some parties, and put questions to him. I wanted to get at the bottom of the thing, and asked him, after he had urged the matter on public grounds, whom he represented? He then frankly answered. And if the other committees which are now so sensitive had gone further than act on the recommendation of the executive officers of the Government, and had pushed their inquiries with the same anxiety to probe the matter to the bottom, they might have discovered what was so easily discovered by our sub-committee by a few simple questions. I said to him, "Whom do you represent?" He answered, "I represent a private individual and the Chiriqui Improvement Company." That private individual's name I do not certainly remember. I think it was Thompson.

Mr. GOODE. If the gentleman will allow me, I want to say for the information of the House that this matter was referred by the House to the Naval Committee. It was discussed on two or three different occasions in the Naval Committee. All the information we have had on the subject was derived from executive documents, from two messages of the President, and two reports of the Secretary of the Navy, and no representative of any private job whatever has ever in any manner, shape, or form, so far as I know, approached that committee.

Mr. SPARKS. That is, your committee?

Mr. FRYE. They only went to the sub-committee of the Committee on Appropriations. They never went to the Interoceanic Canal Committee, either. They knew better where to go.

Mr. McMAHON. I will say to the gentleman from Maine we knew our business as an appropriating committee. We were not caught by mere Executive recommendations. As to the insinuation of the gentleman, he must understand that only an argument was heard. And I say further to him that his remark is singularly out of place; for the Chiriqui Land Improvement and Executive influences and recommendations failed with the Appropriation sub-committee, whatever fortune they may have had elsewhere. If the gentleman from Maine can find any jobs in this or any other we are connected with, let him point them out, and where he can find one, if there be one, I can show him ten in the infamous history of his jobbing party.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HISCOCK rose.

Mr. McMAHON. I would like to complete my statement.

Mr. HISCOCK. I will yield the gentleman a portion of my time.

Mr. BLACKBURN. The gentleman has been interrupted and half his time has been occupied by other gentlemen. If I am recognized, I will yield him my five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection to the gentleman proceeding.

Mr. McMAHON. Now, for what is this $200,000 to be given? Do we know how much land we are to get? Do we know what rights we are to have? Are we to establish forts there as well? What do we know about the matter now? When the proposition of the Electric Light Company came to this House its promoters filed definite and specific proposals with the Secretary of the Treasury; and if we choose to vote for the experiment we certainly know what we are to get for our money. But do we know what we are to get for the proposed expenditure of this $200,000? My friend [Mr. WHITTHORNE] talks about democracy and doubts my adherence to the old faith. He says it was olden-time democracy to take in foreign countries. He is right. But how much of an empire will our $200,000 buy? The olden democracy, to which I belong, bought empires, rich and populous States, added Louisiana, Texas, California, and every other valuable domain that was added to this country.

Mr. FRYE. Because there was slavery to take care of them.

Mr. McMAHON. In olden times, when we had power, we bought States or conquered them. We added millions of acres to the public domain. We dug out millions from the valuable mines we acquired; we bought prosperous homes for an immense surplus population. This was ancient democracy. When my friend from Tennessee, [Mr. WHITTHORNE,] whom I recognize as an honest and true democrat, twits me with want of fealty to old party traditions, let me ask him if the proposed measure bears any relation to those great achievements? Let me ask him if the unanimity with which the republican side rallies to his support does not cause a twinge in his conscience? I never knew sound democracy to draw with such unlimited credit upon republican support.

Mr. WILLETS. Give us the facts.

Mr. McMAHON. I have given you the facts. It was through this gentleman who appeared before us, an attorney for the Chiriqui Land Improvement Company, that we learned all I have stated. If I understood him, $200,000 was to give us a thousand feet front on the bays, just sufficient for a coaling station, or something of that sort. It may have been a thousand acres. Now, if I am approached with an appeal to add glory to my country, I say, give me a domain such as we were used to buy in the days of old, a domain extending from sea to sea. Do not let us be content with locating a coaling station or two merely to gratify Executive vanity or improve the property of private individuals. That is my democracy; and when a proposition comes to me in that tangible shape, then I may give it favorable consideration. For, if we are to assert the Monroe doctrine, let it be done openly, boldly, and effectively.

Mr. HISCOCK. We were told at the outset of this discussion that this question had not been investigated. The chairman of the sub-committee that has charge of this bill told us this question was thrust before the committee without its having had a chance for investigation. And yet, it turns out the Committee on Naval Affairs have given it the fullest consideration, and, as I understand, have come to a nearly unanimous conclusion with reference to it.

Mr. GOODE. Entirely unanimous.

Mr. HISCOCK. A committee of this House, I am told, is entirely unanimous in its opinion upon this subject, and no gentleman here will seek to attack or impeach the integrity of that committee. And yet another honorable committee of this House has investigated the same subject and, as I understand, have come nearly if not entirely to a unanimous conclusion upon it.

This subject, then, having been investigated by two committees of this House, comes here where it can have full and ample discussion under the five-minute rule. And it is within the power of the gentleman who has charge of this bill to allow still more ample discussion even than that upon this proposition.

Now, on the other hand, he attempts to—I will not say he; but one of his associates attempts to insinuate that there is a job concealed somewhere between the lines of this resolution.

Mr. BLOUNT. Let me understand the gentleman. Does he say that I intimated any such thing?

Mr. HISCOCK. No; you did not intrude that question upon the House. But the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. McMAHON] has said that the sly influences of the Executive have been felt, or at least that the sub-committee having charge of this bill was approached by the sly influences of the Executive of this great Government to lobby through this scheme.

Now, who of us have been approached? Who has been talked to slyly by the private secretary of the President of the United States? I see before me the honorable gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. MONROE.] Is he a gentleman that can be approached slyly or in any other manner by any person for any scheme that is dishonorable and which may be intruded before this House?

I see across the aisle from him the chairman of the sub-committee on appropriations, [Mr. BLOUNT,] who has made a reputation in this House. Whatever that reputation may be, it certainly is not such as to reflect upon his honesty and upon his high character as a man. Does he tell us that the President of the United States sent his private secretary to him to slyly influence his action on this question?

It comes down then to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. McMAHON,] from the same State that the President of the United States comes from. They certainly have never been political friends. The gentleman from Ohio on this floor has always been in antagonism to the Administration. Does he charge that sly influences have been attempted to be exercised upon him to influence his action on this question? Does he say that the President of the United States has sought to bribe, has sought to unduly influence by means of his private secretary the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. McMAHON. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question right there?

Mr. HISCOCK. Certainly.

Mr. McMAHON. Do I understand the gentleman to say that I was the only member of that sub-committee who was approached in that manner?

Mr. HISCOCK. I am entirely willing to submit that question——

Mr. McMAHON. Please answer my question. Does the gentleman say that I was the only member of that sub-committee who was approached in that way? There is a member of that sub-committee sitting over on the gentleman's side of the House.

Mr. HISCOCK. I will say this in response to the gentleman, that he is the only member of that sub-committee who has charged that the Executive of these United States has attempted by sly influences to control the action of that sub-committee. And I will say further in reference to that matter, and I say it in all kindness to the gentleman from Ohio, that the character of his colleague from Ohio, [Mr. MONROE,] the character of the gentleman from Georgia, [Mr. BLOUNT,] is sufficient proof that nothing of the kind would be attempted upon them.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. McMAHON. The gentleman still does not answer my question.

Mr. HISCOCK. I would like to have my time extended.

Mr. McMAHON. I want the gentleman to answer the question whether I am the only person on that sub-committee——

Mr. PAGE. I will take the floor and yield my time to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. HISCOCK. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. McMAHON. I will put the question to the gentleman again. Does he say to this House that I was the only member of that sub-committee, composed of Mr. BLOUNT, Mr. MONROE, and myself, who was approached by the private secretary of the President?

Mr. HISCOCK. You are the only one who has said he was so approached.

Mr. McMAHON. I shall probably be compelled to call upon a gentleman who sits upon your side of the House.

Mr. HISCOCK. And I think he was the only one who was "slyly" approached.

An argument has been made here against this appropriation, on the ground that we do not need these coaling stations. I am in favor of this appropriation upon broader grounds than that. We all understand what is contemplated in that part of the world. Shall an American Congress, after the recommendation of the President of the United States, after the favorable consideration of two committees of this House, refuse to give to the Chief Executive of the United States the sum of $200,000, to be used by him in such direction and after such methods as he may see fit in connection with this matter?

The question is now fairly before this House for consideration. Upon the purely economical grounds on which the gentleman from Georgia has discussed it, I might be unwilling to announce that I should certainly be in favor of the proposition; but it is upon broader grounds that I advocate this appropriation; and notwithstanding the "sly approaches" which have been made to the sub-committee in charge of the measure, I trust that the appropriation will be made.

Mr. ROBESON. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of this appropriation upon the ground intimated by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. HISCOCK.] Under ordinary circumstances no expenditure of $200,000 would be required to establish coaling stations sufficient for the needs of the American Navy on the shores of the Gulf and the Pacific Ocean, washing the isthmus between North and South America. But at this time the attention of the House is directed toward that portion of America lying between the two continents; and all the commercial energies of the world are directed toward the enterprise of cutting a great ship-canal or making some other communication between the waters that wash either shore of that isthmus.

Under these circumstances existing to-day and which must exist for twenty years to come, if not for all time, it will be the bounden patriotic duty of every Executive of the United States to gather at that point, on both shores, whatever of power in the American Navy can be spared for the purpose. We cannot allow the nations of the world to take possession of that isthmus and control its relation to international commerce, without our being at least present there to see that it is not done in violation of our treaties and in disregard of our interests. Therefore I say that it will be incumbent upon every Executive in the future, as long as this question shall be agitated, to gather there whatever of naval strength there may be at his command, to represent there our flag and the destinies and interests of our Government.

If that be so, $200,000 committed to the discretion, not of the present Executive, not of the present Navy Department, but the incoming Executive, the new Department that is to be installed this spring—$200,000 to be applied at the discretion of the Executive along that stretch of a thousand miles, wherever it may be best for the Government to set down its stakes, is not too much for the interests of commerce, for the strength of the Navy, and for the patriotism of this country.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HOOKER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say a single word in support of the amendment of my friend from Virginia. Something has been said by the gentleman from Ohio and by other gentlemen who have spoken in reference to particular places where this appropriation is to be expended. It is well understood that there are now three great routes proposed by which the commerce flowing from the great Father of Waters, with its thousand tributaries, is to find transit between the Atlantic and the Pacific Ocean. I do not know, sir, that I am particularly wedded to its location at any one point. But it is inevitable that across the Isthmus somewhere, either at Panama, at Nicaragua, or at Tehuantepec the great impulse of the commerce of the country will force an inter-oceanic communication. The necessity is urgent that this Government shall be prepared, wherever that transit from ocean to ocean may be made, to protect its great commercial interests flowing from one ocean to the other.

The amount proposed by my friend from Virginia, whether it shall be appropriated at one point or at another, is insignificant in comparison with the great interests involved. It is proposed to give to the Executive the power to expend this appropriation, or so much thereof as may be necessary, in the interest of this interoceanic communication. Whether it shall be accomplished by railway across the continent on the one plan proposed, or by water-ways on the two other plans proposed, the great commercial interests of this country will be advantaged (so says your present Secretary of the Navy) to an extent that may save you at least a quarter of a million of dollars in a single year. The great commercial interests to be subserved cannot be subserved unless you are prepared to maintain American interests on either ocean; and the sum proposed by my friend from Virginia is a bagatelle in comparison with the great commercial interests at stake.

Gentlemen may talk about private interests being favored by this, that, or the other route; but I say to you, Mr. Chairman, and to this committee, that this great commercial confluence between the two oceans will force itself somewhere, and when it does so the Government of the United States ought to be prepared to maintain itself by the possession of suitable coaling stations and facilities for the reception of vessels equal to those of any other nation.

I say, therefore, Mr. Chairman, the amount proposed is a bagatelle in comparison with this great matter. This interoceanic commerce will go through somewhere, and wherever it goes through it ought to be protected by the American Government and by the money of the American people, judiciously expended.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BLOUNT. I desire to say the reporters and clerks, who have been on duty all night and all day yesterday and all day to-day, are worn out and need rest; and, therefore, in justice to them I move the committee rise.

Mr. GOODE. Let us settle this first.

Mr. HASKELL. I should like to ask a question concerning this matter.

Mr. BLOUNT. No; I move the committee rise, and, if necessary, shall demand a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 72, noes 69.

So the motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia, reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had, according to order, had under consideration the bill (H. R. No. 7203) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. BLOUNT. I move the House adjourn, and shall insist upon the regular order of business.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at four o'clock p. m.) the House adjourned.

IN SENATE.

SATURDAY, February 26, 1881.

The Senate met at eleven o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. J. BULLOCK, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a communication from the Superintendent of the United States Military Academy calling attention to the omission in the Military Academy appropriation bill of the item of $12,500 for construction of barracks for the cavalry detachment at West Point, and recommending that the same be inserted in the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in compliance with a resolution of the 19th instant, a report of January 15, 1881, from the board of engineers for the Pacific coast; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. PENDLETON presented the memorial of Thomas Brooks and 38 others, citizens of Ohio, and the memorial of Jehu Marris and 26 others, citizens of Pennsville, Ohio, surviving soldiers of the war for the Union, remonstrating against the passage of the bill (S. No. 496) providing for the examination and adjudication of pension claims; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. LOGAN presented resolutions of Forsyth Post, of Toledo, Ohio, Grand Army of the Republic, favoring the passage of a law granting a pension to Hannah S. Commager, widow of the late General Henry S. Commager; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. KERNAN, from the Committee on Patents, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 5066) to provide for the preparation of classified abridgments of all letters-patent of the United States, reported it without amendment.

Mr. GROVER, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1066) to grant certain public lands in Alabama in aid of the Warrior and Tennessee Rivers Railroad, reported it with amendments.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I reported yesterday from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads a bill (S. No. 2190) for the relief of John H. Templeton. Since that time a bill (H. R. No. 7160) for the relief of John H. Templeton, in precisely the same words, has come to the Senate and been referred to that Committee, and I am now instructed to report it back with the amendment that was offered to the Senate bill yesterday.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. FERRY, from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 5832) for the relief of David W. Bell, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. PLATT, from the Committee on Patents, to whom was referred the petition of Timothy Earle, of Valley Falls, Rhode Island, praying for the extension of the patent on his egg-beater, submitted a report thereon, accompanied by a bill (S. No. 2219) for the relief of Timothy Earle.

The bill was read twice by its title, and the report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. BALDWIN, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 2084) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to issue an American register to the steam-barge Tecumseh, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. KERNAN, from the Committee on Patents, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 2036) for the relief of C. Theodor Burchardt, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3477) for the relief of Carlile Boyd, to report it favorably and without amendment.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is not a unanimous report of the committee. In behalf of myself and another member of the committee, I desire to state that we wish to submit an adverse report. That report was not submitted to a full committee in committee meeting, but simply to the members on the floor here. There was an adverse report by the committee unanimously adopted in the same case on a former bill in this same Congress, and we will submit that as an adverse report in this case.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair hears no objection to leave being granted to the minority to submit their views.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. In reply to the Senator from Missouri I will state that by authority of the committee this report was submitted to each and every member of the committee. I did not state it was a unanimous report; but it is the report of a majority of the committee.

Mr. COCKRELL. It was submitted to them, not in committee meeting, where it could be discussed, but on the floor of the Senate. There is no question about that.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. By authority of the committee.

Mr. BAYARD, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 2197) to amend section 3368 of the Revised Statutes, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. BURNSIDE, from the Committee on Military Affairs, submitted the views of the minority on the bill (S. No. 129) authorizing the restoration of the name of Thomas H. Carpenter, late captain Seventeenth United States Infantry, to the rolls of the Army, and providing that he be placed on the list of retired officers; which were ordered to be printed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. VANCE asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 2220) to authorize the Secretary of War to purchase certain papers relating to the late war; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. LAMAR asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 2221) granting the right of way to the New Orleans and Northeastern Railroad Company through the public lands along their route between New Orleans, Louisiana, and Meridian, Mississippi; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Railroads.

Mr. VOORHEES asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 2222) for the relief of Flora A. Skinner, widow of Gilbert A. Skinner, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

UNITED STATES MARSHAL FOR SOUTH CAROLINA.

Mr. BUTLER submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary of the Senate be, and they are hereby, instructed to inquire and report by what authority and under whose appointment R. M. Wallace is exercising the duties of the office of United States marshal for South Carolina.

ISTHMUS SHIP-CANALS.

Mr. EATON. I desire to give notice that on the conclusion of the morning business, or rather just after half past one o'clock, I will ask the Senate to take up the concurrent resolution I had the honor to submit, as the organ of the Committee on Foreign Relations, on the 16th instant, in relation to the isthmus ship-canal, on which my friend from Rhode Island [Mr. BURNSIDE] desires to submit a few remarks; and then without further discussion of the question, unless some Senator wishes to be heard, I shall ask for a vote.

CHARGES AGAINST FORMER CHIEF CLERK OF INDIAN BUREAU.

Mr. TELLER submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to furnish for the Senate Library two copies, and to each member of the Senate one copy, if there be so many in his Department, of the printed testimony and the report of the board of inquiry convened by the letter of the Secretary June 7, 1877, to investigate certain charges preferred by John B. Wolff and others against S. A. Galpin, former chief clerk of the Indian Bureau, and concerning irregularities in said bureau, and dated December 31, 1877.

CALENDAR OF HOUSE BILLS.

Mr. RANSOM. I gave notice yesterday that at the expiration of the morning business this morning I should ask the Senate to take up the river and harbor bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there further business for the morning hour?

Mr. HARRIS. I ask the Senate to consider at this time the resolution I had the honor to offer on the 25th of January last.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. In the morning hour the Senator from Tennessee calls from the Calendar for consideration a resolution, which will be reported.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That at the conclusion of the morning business for each day, unless upon motion the Senate shall otherwise order, the Senate will proceed to the consideration of House bills which have been favorably reported, and continue such consideration until half past one o'clock; bills to be taken up in their order upon the Calendar; and this order shall commence immediately after the call for "concurrent and other resolutions," subject to the rules governing the business of the morning hour.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Will the Senate agree to the resolution?

Mr. RANSOM. I am very willing that that shall be adopted if it does not take effect to-day.

Mr. TELLER. Let it take effect to-day.

Mr. ANTHONY. It only goes on to half past one.

Mr. HARRIS. There are now sixty-odd bills which have passed the House and been favorably reported by Senate committees and which are upon the Calendar. If the Senate proposes to devote its time to the practical work of legislation, to the accomplishment of legislative results, there being but four days remaining of this session——

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. Five.

Mr. HARRIS. Five including this day—it would seem absolutely necessary that we devote our time to the consideration of these House bills; and while I shall very cheerfully aid the Senator from North Carolina in getting up his bill for consideration after the morning hour, I am inclined to think that the two hours remaining of the morning hour of to-day had better be devoted to the consideration of these House bills. I will then aid the Senator, so far as I am able, to get up his bill and I am willing to stay here to any hour, day or night, to complete the consideration of it.

Mr. RANSOM. Anxious as I am to take up the river and harbor bill at this moment, after the statement of the Senator from Tennessee I feel that I should be doing myself injustice if I were to insist upon it; and with the understanding he has just given utterance to that we shall finish the river and harbor bill to-day, I will interpose no objection to the resolution.

Mr. TELLER. I do not give my consent to that proposition. I do not propose to be precluded by a statement that we are to "sit out" the river and harbor bill to-day.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There is no motion of that kind before the Senate.

Mr. TELLER. There was such a statement made, and I thought it was due to say that I do not assent to it.

Mr. McDONALD. I desire to know the scope of this resolution. Is it intended to consider all House bills, or only the House bills now on the Calendar?

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. House bills on the Calendar reported favorably.

Mr. HARRIS. The scope of the resolution evidently applies to all the House bills favorably reported now on the Calendar and as they come upon the Calendar.

Mr. McDONALD. Then I am opposed to it if that is giving up the rest of this session of the Senate to the work of the House, and nothing else. I understand that there are at least one hundred and fifty bills of the Senate on the House Calendar which have not been reached, and there seems to be no purpose of reaching them. If we are to become from this time until the end of the session simply a registering body to register House bills and pass them——

Mr. HARRIS. Will the Senator from Indiana allow me to ask him, if there be one hundred and fifty Senate bills now on the table of the House, if he thinks it is wise for us to continue to send these Senate bills at this late hour of the session to increase that number which lies upon that table unacted upon, when there are sixty bills that have passed the House and that have met the approval of committees of the Senate that remain unacted upon and unconsidered in this body? Is it not more practical and proper that we should devote our time to the consideration of those bills thus advanced in the line of legislation?

Mr. McDONALD. Those bills thus advanced I am willing to consider, but I am not willing to adopt a resolution that not only embraces them but all that may hereafter be reported and placed on the Calendar.

Mr. HARRIS. I shall not object to an amendment, if the Senator sees proper to offer it, to exclude those which may come hereafter.

Mr. McDONALD. Therefore I move to amend this resolution by limiting it to the House bills now on the Calendar.

Mr. HARRIS. I will modify the resolution so as to make it read "House bills now on the Calendar."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There is an amendment pending, proposed by the Senator from Maryland, [Mr. WHYTE,] which will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out of the resolution the words "which have been favorably reported."

Mr. JOHNSTON. Does that resolution apply to bills on the Calendar with unfavorable reports?

Mr. ALLISON. All bills, favorably or unfavorably reported, will be included if we adopt this amendment.

Mr. HARRIS. The resolution itself provides for the consideration of House bill favorably reported. The amendment of the Senator from Maryland proposes to strike out "which have been favorably reported," and make it apply to all House bills whether favorably or adversely reported. I hope the amendment will not be adopted.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. McDONALD. I desire to amend the amendment by saying "House bills now on the Calendar." I want it to apply to those which committees have adversely reported upon as well as those they have reported upon favorably. I desire, if we go to the House bills, an opportunity of giving my own judgment on the question of whether we ought or ought not to pass them. I am opposed to limiting the resolution to those which have been reported favorably.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. To the amendment of the Senator from Maryland the Senator from Indiana proposes an amendment; which will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. After the word "bills" it is proposed to insert "now on the Calendar;" so as to read:

That at the conclusion of the morning business for each day, unless upon motion the Senate shall otherwise order, the Senate will proceed to the consideration of House bills now on the Calendar, and continue such consideration until half past one o'clock, &c.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Indiana to the amendment of the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. FERRY. I desire to ask the Senator from Indiana why he discriminates against other bills of the House which may be reported to the Senate between this time and the end of the session? Certainly such bills are just as meritorious as those which are now on the Calendar. It seems to me if the resolution is confined to House bills, that will cover the object all Senators have, and will not exclude those which may be reported between this and the close of the session.

Mr. HOAR. Allow me to call the attention of Senators to the fact that this is a totally immaterial matter, because the House bills now on the Calendar will occupy a good many days, and probably no new ones will ever be reached, and if any new ones ever are reached it will be in the power of a majority of the Senate to continue their consideration or set this order aside as it pleases. There is no sort of practical importance in the question.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question recurs on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Maryland.

The amendment was rejected.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question now is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. GARLAND. I believe from what has been stated by the Senator from Tennessee and others that with the exception of the appropriation bills this will give us as much as we ought to do during the remainder of this session. I propose now an amendment that we also devote in the same way the sessions we shall hold after the recess in the evening, under the resolution which was offered on the 16th instant by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] and adopted by the Senate. I propose to amend the resolution by saying that the sessions that we hold in the evening, after the recess, shall be devoted to a like purpose.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. "Except the appropriation bills" at all times.

Mr. GARLAND. I have said that.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I want that understood.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment of the Senator from Arkansas will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. At the end of the resolution it is proposed to add:

And this resolution shall apply to the evening sessions provided for by the resolution adopted February 16, 1881.

Mr. HARRIS. I have no objection to that. It ought to be so.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment is accepted. The question is on the resolution as amended.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. It is understood that this is not to interfere with the appropriation bills.

Mr. HARRIS. Of course nobody would undertake to antagonize an appropriation bill with any of this legislation.

Mr. HOAR. Now let the resolution be reported as it stands amended.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That at the conclusion of the morning business for each day, unless upon motion the Senate shall otherwise order, the Senate will proceed to the consideration of House bills which have been favorably reported, and continue such consideration until half-past one o'clock; bills to be taken up in their order upon the Calendar; and this order shall commence immediately after the call for "concurrent and other resolutions," subject to the rules governing the business of the morning hour. And this resolution shall apply to the evening sessions provided for by resolution adopted February 16, 1881.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. I ask that the Senate consider the bill (S. No. 129) authorizing the restoration of the name of Thomas H. Carpenter, late captain Seventeenth Infantry, to the rolls of the Army, and providing that he be placed on the list of retired officers.

Mr. TELLER. I thought we were to go to the Calendar under the resolution just adopted.

Mr. HARRIS. What is the motion of the Senator from Pennsylvania?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Pennsylvania asks the Senate to consider at this time the bill named by him.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I take this occasion to say that after the morning business each day, until we have gone through with the House bills favorably reported upon the Calendar, I hope no Senator will regard it as in any possible sense personal to him that I shall object to the consideration of everything that interferes with the rule; and I object now to the consideration of any other than the business we have determined to consider.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there further business for the morning hour? If not, the Senate proceeds to the consideration of the Calendar of House bills under the order just adopted. The Secretary will report the first House bill on the Calendar.

The bill (H. R. No. 4412) to regulate practice in suits brought to recover damages for infringement of patents was announced by the Chief Clerk as first in order.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The order was to commence with the Calendar and take the House bills on the Calendar.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Certainly. It applies to the beginning of the Calendar.

Mr. INGALLS. This is the first House bill on the Calendar.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. No; House joint resolution No. 116 is the first favorably reported.

Mr. ALLISON. There was a bill under consideration yesterday on the Calendar.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. When we come to it in its order it will be taken up.

Mr. ALLISON. It is the unfinished business.

Mr. TELLER. The resolution was to commence the Calendar, as I understood, where we left off, not to go back to the head of the Calendar.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution goes back to the head of the Calendar. Wherever a House bill is favorably reported, it is to be considered.

Mr. HARRIS. The resolution was to begin at the beginning of the Calendar.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. GEORGE M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills and joint resolutions; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 1560) granting a pension to James B. White;

A bill (H. R. No. 6860) for the relief of William H. Davis;

A bill (H. R. No. 7111) restoring the name of Andrew J. Pennel to the pension-roll;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 402) to provide for the publication of the memorial addresses on Evarts W. Farr;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 401) in relation to the barge W. J. Spicer;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 405) to print reports of the tenth census of the United States;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 413) authorizing the Secretary of War to turn over to Governor Roberts, of Texas, such tents, poles, and pins as he may require for the use of the volunteers of the State for their encampment for the year 1881; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 414) relating to loaning tents for soldiers' reunions in Indiana and Iowa.

The message also announced that the House had passed the joint resolution (S. R. No. 156) in relation to the international exhibition of 1883.

GEOLOGICAL SURVEY.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will report the first House bill on the Calendar favorably reported.

The Chief Clerk read the title of the joint resolution (H. R. No. 116) to amend the act entitled "An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes."

Mr. HOAR. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. When the Calendar is taken up and a bill upon it is considered under the Anthony rule and it goes over to the following day, does not that bill take its place again, provided it be a bill within the description of the new resolution just passed?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair does not quite hear the Senator but he thinks he apprehends the point.

Mr. HOAR. My question is this: If a House bill be taken up in the morning hour under the Anthony rule when the Calendar is under consideration and we proceed with its consideration under that rule, and it is unfinished at the expiration of the morning hour, does it not keep its place on the Calendar provided it be a bill within the description of the resolution just passed?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks the resolution just passed supersedes the Anthony rule so far as House bills are concerned. The resolution will be again read.

Mr. HOAR. I reserve the point of order. The patent bill was taken up yesterday in its place upon the Calendar and was considered under the rule then in force and has not been disposed of. Although there was debate upon it in which Senators took very much more than five minutes' length, yet the attention of the occupant of the chair, the Senator from Missouri, [Mr. COCKRELL,] being called to it, he ruled that we were still going on under the Anthony rule yesterday. Now comes in a new provision saying that House bills upon the Calendar shall be taken up in their order under the rules affecting the morning hour, one of which is the Anthony rule to that extent. In other words this bill is entitled to its place under both rules, under the rule under which it was taken up yesterday and under the rule which is in operation to-day. That is a House bill favorably reported by a Senate committee and it stands the first bill on the Calendar.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will report the resolution just adopted.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That at the conclusion of the morning business for each day, unless upon motion the Senate shall otherwise order, the Senate will proceed to the consideration of House bills which have been favorably reported, and continue such consideration until half past one o'clock; bills to be taken up in their order upon the Calendar; and this order shall commence immediately after the call for "concurrent and other resolutions," subject to the rules governing the business of the morning hour. And this resolution shall apply to the evening sessions provided for by the resolution adopted February 16, 1881.

Mr. HOAR. Now, as I understand the effect of this resolution with the words "bills to be taken up in their order upon the Calendar," we go back to the beginning of the Calendar without regard to the point where the Senate was. I think the Chair is right.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks that this, so far as House bills are concerned, supersedes the Anthony rule.

Mr. INGALLS. I rise to another question of order. The measure called for by the Senator from West Virginia is not a House bill, and it cannot be considered under the terms of the order as adopted by the Senate, and on that I ask the ruling of the Chair. That order last adopted must be construed strictly. Being in derogation of the common law of the Senate, it must be construed strictly, and the language here employed is "House bills," and this is not a House bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks that that is a little critical, but will submit the question to the Senate.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. One word before it is submitted. This is a House joint resolution which requires the same process exactly, three readings, as a bill. It is put upon the Calendar as a bill; it is treated as a bill; it comes from the Committee on Appropriations regularly reported, and is the oldest bill upon the Calendar, and probably the only one that has stood here a year or more.

Mr. LOGAN. What is it?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. It relates to the geological survey in the States. The manner of the passage of this joint resolution is exactly the same as that of a bill; it is treated as a bill, and if the Senator prefers it can be made a bill, but the effect is just the same. The Chief Clerk believed it to be the same as a bill, because it is placed on the Calendar as a bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair agrees with the Senator from West Virginia, but he will submit the question to the Senate. Is a House joint resolution a bill within the meaning of the resolution just adopted?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I am glad the Chair agrees with me.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will put the question, [putting the question.] The ayes have it by the sound.

Mr. INGALLS. One moment.

Mr. LOGAN. I desire to call the attention of the Senator from West Virginia to the fact that if this is in reference to geological surveys in the States I do not think it would have any effect whatever. So far as making a survey of unoccupied land is concerned, it can be done just as well now as if you passed four hundred resolutions. You cannot provide by joint resolution that the geological survey shall enter upon private lands unless by consent of the owner.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Certainly not.

Mr. LOGAN. The occupied lands in the State are subject to geological survey now by direction of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Oh, no.

Mr. LOGAN. Why not?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Kansas desire a further count upon the question submitted?

Mr. INGALLS. No, Mr. President. I propose, if I have a right to do so under the rule just adopted, as I am convinced that this measure will lead to a debate that may be very protracted, to object to the consideration of the joint resolution at this time.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. No objection can be made under the resolution we have passed, as I understand. The resolution does not allow one objection, as I understand, to have effect.

Mr. INGALLS. I ask for the ruling of the Chair on that subject. I understand we are proceeding under the Anthony rule as modified by the subsequent order of the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair has indicated his opinion, or, rather, given it decidedly, that the Anthony rule is wholly superseded, and the Chair thinks that a solitary objection will not postpone a House bill under the resolution under which the Senate is now acting.

Mr. BECK. Is it understood that this joint resolution is now before the Senate?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is. It will be read.

Mr. BECK. Is it in a shape where it is to go to the final reading, or is it subject to objection?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. One objection does not obviate its present consideration; it is subject to any motion for its disposition temporarily or finally.

Mr. TELLER. If that is the understanding of the resolution, I will move to reconsider the resolution that has just been passed. I do not believe that the Senate understood that they were to take up these bills and dispose of them no matter what might be the debate upon them; I did not, and I do not believe anybody did.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I rise to a point of order.

Mr. TELLER. I enter the motion to reconsider the resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator desire the question put at this time.

Mr. TELLER. I do, unless somebody wants to say something.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. That is not in order while the bill is pending.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill has not been read to the Senate yet.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I thought it had been.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Colorado moves to reconsider the vote by which the resolution introduced by the Senator from Tennessee was agreed to.

Mr. HARRIS. I move to lay that motion to reconsider on the table.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Tennessee moves to lay on the table the motion to reconsider. The question is on that motion.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. BLAIR. I should like to hear the resolution offered by the Senator from Tennessee read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be read again for information.

The Chief Clerk again read the resolution adopted this morning.

Mr. BLAIR. Does the Chair rule that under that resolution there is no limitation of the length of debate?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair has made no ruling on that point. That point has not been stated before.

Mr. BLAIR. I understood that was the ruling of the Chair.

Mr. FERRY. I wish to call the attention of the Chair to the clause "subject to the rules of the Senate." The Senate having adopted the Anthony rule within the morning hour, which confines debate to five minutes, I desire the special attention of the Chair to that feature which modifies the resolution of the Senator from Tennessee. Certainly it is subject to the rules of the Senate, and the Anthony rule has been adopted by the Senate. The resolution of the Senator from Tennessee is simply directing the kind of business which the Senate will enter upon within the morning hour and the evening session, but at all times subject to the former rules of the Senate.

Mr. HARRIS. "Subject to the rules governing the business of the morning hour" is the language as it appears in the resolution; and that refers, I apprehend, and was certainly intended to refer, to the morning business proper. I should be glad to have the Senate confine debate to five minutes, but it was not the intention of the resolution; nor do I think it is the meaning of the resolution that by its terms it does limit debate to five minutes.

Mr. FERRY. It is subject, not to the business of the Senate, but to the rules of the Senate; and the Anthony rule having been adopted, it certainly is applicable.

Mr. HARRIS. In respect to morning business proper is the application of that language, as I think.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The language is "the business of the morning hour."

Mr. FERRY. I suggest to the Chair that what it applies to is within the morning hour, because that is the only force the Anthony rule has, but so far as the morning hour is concerned it seems to me this resolution is subject to the rule adopted heretofore known as the Anthony rule.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair agrees with the Senator so far as the limits of debate are concerned, the Senate having held on several occasions that the Anthony rule was the prolongation of the morning hour; but the Chair would much prefer that the Senate should put its own construction on the rule.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, I wish——

Mr. TELLER. I ask the Senator to allow me to offer a resolution as to limiting debate.

Mr. BECK. It is on that question that I desire to say a word.

Mr. TELLER. I will wait.

Mr. BECK. In the ordinary cases that I supposed would come up under these rules, I was anxious to have the five-minute limitation apply to debate; but we are met at the very threshold with a bill now the effect of which is to establish a new department of the Government, and one of the most costly and one I think interfering more materially with the business of this country than any that has ever been attempted. We are asked in the Book of Estimates for the current fiscal year to give Mr. Clarence King and his assistants $340,000.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. May I ask whether the bill is before the Senate or not?

Mr. BECK. I am on the floor and have five minutes. I hope the bill will never get through.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I inquire whether the joint resolution is now before the Senate? This inquiry will not be taken out of my friend's time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The joint resolution is not properly before the Senate. The Chair thinks business would be very much facilitated by a proper understanding of the matter at this time.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to say that when this resolution was passed I listened to it to see whether it was liable to the objection of an amendment offered by the Senator from Maryland, [Mr. WHYTE,] which provided that it should take five objections to carry over a bill, and that was proposed to be added as an amendment to a resolution limiting debate to five minutes, the result of which would have been the adoption of the previous question by the Senate for the first time in its history. I understood the clause which said this should be under the rules applicable to morning business to mean, and to be intended by the honorable Senator from Tennessee to mean, that it was subject in that respect to the Anthony rule. Otherwise I never should have given my assent to it, and I should desire to move its reconsideration immediately. Upon discussion the Senate voted down the amendment of the honorable Senator from Maryland, with but two dissenting voices, one of them being his own; and the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] made, as the Senate will recollect, the statement that it would be better to have a dozen extra sessions of Congress and to remain here discussing the question for some long time that he stated rather than to have free speech in the Senate limited or curtailed by its rules. I suppose I am violating no propriety in saying that in conversation with the Senator from Maryland afterwards he said that when he moved his amendment he did not see the effect of it, and that he thought the majority of the Senate were entirely right. If there be any opinion in which the Senate is unanimous it is that the previous question ought not to be introduced here. This is the only place in the Government of the United States where free and unlimited discussion of public questions is established as the prevailing law.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair stated a little while ago that he had not examined the resolution carefully but he thought one objection would not throw a bill over under its operation. The Chair thinks he was wrong in that opinion. It has been held by the Senate repeatedly that the Anthony rule is but a prolongation of the morning hour until half past one o'clock. The morning-hour rule proper does not provide for the consideration of any legislative measure. The words "morning hour" are meaningless unless they cover the Anthony rule. The Chair, therefore, is of the opinion that the Anthony rule controls, so far as debate and objections are concerned.

Mr. INGALLS. Under that ruling of the Chair, I offer an objection to the consideration of the joint resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair, however, prefers that the Senate shall place its own construction on its rules.

Mr. FERRY. Before the Chair passes from the ruling I wish to say that I concur fully with him and am glad the Chair has settled the question; but I desire to call the attention of the Chair to the evening sessions. Does the rule apply to an evening session? I think the rule does not cover an evening session, but it is simply confined to the morning hour until half past one o'clock.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks that it would apply to the evening session also made under this resolution.

Mr. FERRY. It applies to the evening session?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It applies to the evening session.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I understand the Chair now thinks that one objection carries any bill over that may be called up?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair is of that opinion, under the Anthony rule. Otherwise the resolution is meaningless in its reference to the rules governing morning business.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Would it be in order under the resolution of this morning to move to lay aside the pending order and take up the joint resolution?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Always.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I will make a statement and then I will give way.

This joint resolution passed the House more than a year ago, was referred to the Senate Appropriations Committee, and reported back favorably with an amendment. The act of March 5, 1879, created a "Director of Geological Surveys." Professor Clarence King was appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate and now has charge of the Bureau of Geological Surveys. The act as construed by the Secretary of the Interior confines the surveys to public land. The resolution under consideration proposes to give authority to make geological surveys within the States. The President in his recent message, the Secretary of the Interior, and the Director of Surveys, in their annual reports to Congress for 1880, all recommend a general and complete geological survey of the whole country, including States. The President-elect, when this resolution was under consideration in the House, gave it his influence and vote. All will agree that our vast mineral and other resources ought to be known to ourselves and the world. We have a country perhaps richer in minerals than the rest of the world, yet it is not fully or officially known and cannot be unless we make a complete geological survey and report of the entire country. If we wish our country developed, made rich and prosperous by enterprise and capital, from at home and abroad, we should give reliable information upon its unknown and vast resources. Some few States have made geological surveys which are more or less imperfect. The adjoining States perhaps have made no survey. A national survey will fill the gap and give great value to both or all. No State even if able and disposed to do so can make as valuable and perfect a survey as the United States can. If a general survey is made by the National Government all would come under one head or chief of the highest order. The Government now supports and pays the Director of Surveys and those connected with him, and this will continue whether the resolution becomes a law or not.

What we need is a good, perfect, full, and complete survey and report of the country as a whole, not in thirty-eight parts. If it is done by States, when you come to a State line the survey and comparison must stop, and perhaps adjoining States cannot or will not commence where the other ended. The coal or ore in one State or section may be worthless unless mixed or worked with another from a different section or State, which makes both or all valuable. If the surveys are confined to the "national domain," they will be small and of little practical use or value, for all work mines are owned by individuals or corporations, and are excluded from "national domain."

Why tax the States to sustain a geological bureau, and say the mineral resources of the States shall not be surveyed and known? The mineral worth of this country can never be known as a whole until a national geological survey is made and reported. It is said and believed that West Virginia has more coal and Virginia more iron-ore than Great Britain. Yet England produces more than a hundred times as much coal and iron as the two Virginias, and more than twice as much as our entire country. The mineral resources of no section of our country is fully known. According to the best authority I can find we may make the following comparisons:

Comparison of coal area and production.

Coal Section.	Area.	Production in 1877.
	Sq. miles.	Tons.
Great Britain	11,900	134,179,368
United States	192,000	50,000,000
Pennsylvania	12,774	36,119,911
Kentucky	12,871	850,000
Ohio	10,000	5,250,000
West Virginia	16,000	1,000,000
Maryland	550	1,500,000

Great Britain in 1877 produced 7,300,000 tons of steel and iron; the United States, 2,636,000 tons. The United States in the last ten years paid Great Britain for iron and steel about $340,000,000, an average of, say, $34,000,000 per annum. In 1872–'73 we imported iron and steel to about $115,000,000. In September, 1873, our financial distress came and staid until 1879 or 1880. In 1878 and 1879 our imports of iron and steel were less than $10,000,000 per annum. The year ending June 30, 1880, our import of iron and steel was $53,714,008, which is five times as much as in 1878 or 1879. We imported and exported more during the fiscal year 1880 than any year in our history—

Exports	$835,638,658
Imports	667,954,746
Total	1,503,593,404
Excess of exports	167,683,912

The above figures are worthy of careful thought, and indicate that we should be careful, or the first year our crops are bad and Europe's good the balance of trade will be against us and the panic of September, 1873, may repeat itself.

I am reliably informed that every progressive government of the Old World has made or is at work making full and complete geological surveys, and that much of the great wealth and prosperity of England, Germany, and France comes from that source.

It was supposed a few years ago that Germany had little coal worth mining. A geological survey developed a large quantity of coal. Now about fifty million tons per annum is produced in Germany. Russia has more than doubled her production of coal in the last few years. Ours is supposed to be the richest country in the world in mineral resources, especially in iron and coal, yet this is not officially and fully known or improved.

During last year we imported from Great Britain alone about fifty million dollars' worth of iron and steel; also about two million dollars' worth of coal. Think of it. With our vast resources of iron-ore and coal, that a country three thousand miles from us should send us in a single year between fifty and sixty million dollars of iron, steel, and coal.

Great Britain produces more than five hundred million dollars and exports more than one hundred million dollars' worth of steel, iron, and coal per annum. Give our States and country a good and complete natural geological survey and we may do as Britain does. Some have objected to this resolution on State-rights principles. The committee's amendment removes that objection, and requires consent of States before survey is made. Some may say the expenses of the surveys will be considerable. In my judgment the return will be a thousand for one, and the expense will not be great. We have had in progress for years a Coast Survey and a Fish Commission and an Agricultural Department which is subject to the same objection, both as to cost and State rights, as this resolution.

This resolution appropriates no money. Congress must from year to year appropriate money or none will be spent. The act of 1879, creating a "director of geological survey," says:

> The director and members of the geological survey shall have no personal or private interest in the lands or mineral wealth of the region under survey, and shall execute no survey or examination for private parties or corporations.

Why survey the public domain at the expense and neglect of the States, when next year or day the "public domain" may belong to a private party or corporation, and in a State I take it all will agree we ought to have a general geological survey, to the end that our great mineral resources and wealth shall be known and developed. The question is, ought the survey be made as a whole by the National Government or by thirty-eight States and eight Territories, in forty or fifty parts, at different times, and under different heads or chiefs?

Many of the States cannot afford to make complete geological surveys and to furnish the necessary machinery or apparatus for properly testing the different coals, ores, &c. If a national survey of the entire country be made, one set of men, machinery, and apparatus will answer for all.

A United States survey of the whole country will give a high national character and value to it, and will be accepted at home and abroad as valuable and reliable. Mineral resources and their development, like agriculture, manufactures, and commerce, add to the substantial wealth of a nation and the people. Neglect either, and the people or country cannot long prosper.

I submit a—

* Other estimates make the coal-fields of the United States, reckoning the Permian and tertiary coals, to embrace an area of over six hundred thousand square miles. But all estimates of their extent are as yet conjectural, and a very large portion of their actual area contains no workable coal.

It will be seen that Great Britain produces about three times as much coal, iron, and steel as we do. Yet we have many times more mineral resources than Britain, and more than the rest of the world.

The American Mail and Export Journal of November, 1879, gives the following table of the area of square miles of coal in the different countries named:

Countries.	Square miles.	Per cent.
United States	192,000	73.85
Nova Scotia	18,000	6.00
Great Britain	11,900	4.60
Spain	3,000	1.10
France	1,800	.70
Prussia	1,800	.70
Austria	1,700	.70
Belgium	900	.35
Chili, Australia, India, China, &c.	28,000	11.00

This table shows that we have 73.85 per cent. of all the coal known, and we produce about 50,000,000 tons per annum; Great Britain has but 4.60 per cent. of coal, and produces 134,000,000 tons per annum.

I regret to say Great Britain and other nations not only greatly excel us in producing mining resources, but are fast taking our ocean commerce from us. In 1825 our vessels carried of our imports and exports 92.3 per cent.; in 1855, 75.6 per cent.; in 1875, 26.2 per cent.: in 1880, 17.6 per cent. At this rate of decrease the American flag will soon seldom be seen upon the ocean.

Mr. President, I hope to see and intend to aid our whole country, and especially the South, to take an advanced position in agriculture, commerce, and manufacturing; also in developing their mineral resources.

The country or man who stands still while the world moves on will be left behind, or, as the railroad men say, standing upon the side-track, while the go-ahead or express train, with live, active men and freight upon it, moves on and takes the prize.

It is believed a good, careful, and complete geological survey of Virginia and West Virginia will show more mineral resources than all Europe. I feel sure this great country of ours, especially Virginia and West Virginia, has a great future; information, enterprise, and capital are essential to development and prosperity. A country or State, like a corporation, a firm, or an individual, to prosper must be progressive. I would respect and protect with equal care State and national Government. I cannot believe with some democrats in extreme State rights, nor can I follow many republicans in centering nearly all power in the national Government. I am for letting the dead issues rest and for cultivating the living ones. I favor a fair, just, and living tariff, that will protect equally the people and manufacturing interests. I am for an effort to regain our ocean carrying trade; we formerly had 75, now 17 per cent. I am for a proper degree of economy in all expenditures of public money, and for progress and prosperity of our entire country and people. I would encourage and foster education, agriculture, manufactures, and commerce, and do whatever else will make our whole people and country intelligent, prosperous, rich, happy, and great. We should recognize this is 1881, and not 1860.

I hope the time is not very distant when the Senate will allow me to get up the joint resolution and have it disposed of. My friend from Kentucky is opposed to it, and earnestly opposed to it, as he has a right to be; but I think that he and other Senators ought not to object to its being considered.

Mr. BECK. I have only to say in reply that I shall help to take up the joint resolution on any proper occasion after these House bills are through, and I shall then object to any limitation of debate to five minutes. I regard it as a measure simply in the interest of the men who are running great mines and other organizations of that sort, and of no good to the country, interfering with all the rights of the States. Clarence King, the director of the geological survey, closes his remarks by saying:

> Briefly and finally, in my belief the question of the passage or defeat of the resolution under consideration is the question whether it is or is not desirable and needful for the people of the United States to thoroughly know the nature, extent, and uses of their mineral possessions.

The corporations of the country would simply use him as an advertising medium of all their great mineral possessions at the cost of half a million dollars.

Mr. HEREFORD. Mr. President——

Mr. TELLER. I call for the regular order. I do not think it is worth while to discuss this question.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The regular order is the report of the next House bill on the Calendar, which will be stated.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

The bill (H. R. No. 2377) for the relief of Catherine I. Gillis was announced as next in order on the Calendar.

Mr. ROLLINS. That bill is reported adversely.

Mr. TELLER. Let it go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The next House bill on the Calendar will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. "A bill (H. R. No. 385) to amend the act entitled 'An act for the relief of Robert Erwin.'"

Mr. WITHERS. That bill is reported adversely.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go over, and the next House bill on the Calendar will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. "A bill (H. R. No. 1493) defining the duties of Reporter of the Supreme Court of the United States, fixing his compensation, and providing for the publishing and distributing of said reports."

Mr. WITHERS. That bill was reported adversely.

Mr. COCKRELL. I object to its consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill goes over, and the next House bill on the Calendar will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. "A bill (H. R. No. 2262) for the relief of Juliet Leef, widow, and the heirs of Henry Leef, deceased, owner of the bark Mary Teresa, illegally seized by Alexander H. Tyler, consul of the United States at Bahia, Brazil."

Mr. COCKRELL. There is an adverse report in that case, and I object to its consideration.

Mr. HARRIS. I suggest that under the resolution the Clerk should read nothing but bills favorably reported. The resolution provides for that.

SUITS FOR PATENT INFRINGEMENTS.

Mr. WITHERS. Order of business No. 642 is the next House bill on the Calendar favorably reported.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be stated.

The bill (H. R. No. 4412) to regulate practice in suits brought to recover damages for infringement of patent was announced as being the next in order upon the Calendar.

Mr. TELLER. This bill will take a long time, and if we have not any limit on the discussion I propose to enter an objection to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. WINDOM. I move, if in order, to lay aside the pending and all prior orders, that the Senate may proceed to the consideration of this bill.

Mr. HARRIS. I hope the Senator from Colorado will not object to the consideration of the bill. I suppose it cannot take very much time now to complete the consideration of the bill.

Mr. WINDOM. The bill has been discussed two morning hours, and I think will take but a few moments. All I ask is a vote on it; but I am not willing that a single objection shall now lay it aside before the sense of the Senate is tested on it, if I have a right to test it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Minnesota moves that the pending order, being the order of this morning, be set aside pending its consideration, and, should that motion prevail, that the Senate shall then proceed to the consideration of the bill just reported by its title. The question is, Will the Senate agree to the motion of the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. TELLER. If this bill can be treated as it ought to be treated, discussed in five-minute speeches as it was yesterday, I shall not object; but if under the construction given to the rule there is unlimited debate, it will take up this morning hour and to-morrow's morning hour and every other morning hour; and the bill is not of sufficient importance, in my judgment, to crowd out a great many other proper subjects of legislation.

Mr. McMILLAN. I understand the Chair to have ruled that the five-minute rule does apply to debate on the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair has indicated his opinion; he did not rule that it applied.

Mr. TELLER. If Senators will confine themselves to five minutes, and we can vote on the bill pretty soon, I shall withhold my objection. I reserve the right to renew it, however.

Mr. WINDOM. I am very unwilling that this bill should crowd out other business, and I do not want to press it to that extent. If it leads to further debate I shall try to secure an arrangement with the Senate to fix some time for its consideration, but I think we can try it for a few moments and perhaps get rid of it.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill, the pending question being on the amendment reported by the Committee on Patents, in line 19, after the word "patent," to insert "or unless the defendant puts in issue the plaintiff's right to recover anything in the action."

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 27, noes 19.

Mr. VOORHEES. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. McDONALD. Will it be in order for me now to move at this point to amend the amendment?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will.

Mr. BLAIR. I desire to raise the question of order, whether the amendment is open to amendment now after the yeas and nays have been ordered?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is.

Mr. McDONALD. I move to strike out of the proposed amendment the words "the plaintiff's right to recover anything in the action," and insert "the validity of the patent;" so as to read "or unless the defendant puts in issue the validity of the patent."

Mr. BECK. I desire only to say that while I prefer the bill tendered by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] to any proposition now pending, I believe, having only five days of the session remaining, the only chance is to pass the bill just as it came from the House, and I shall vote against every amendment and every substitute, believing the House bill to be the best we can get at this Congress.

Mr. KERNAN. A single word in answer to the Senator from Kentucky. I, for one, shall vote against the bill as it came from the House. The Constitution provides that we may grant to inventors the exclusive right to the enjoyment of their inventions. We have granted patents to thousands; and now when we have given them the right we should not say that we will not let them go into court to vindicate the right except they pay the penalty of the costs of the defendant for coming in to make him pay for a violation of the right. That is the bill as it passed the House: that the plaintiff shall pay the costs on both sides unless he recovers beyond a certain sum. We say you shall secure a specific right, and if you do we say we will punish you for coming in to make the violator of your rights pay. The amendment of the committee strikes out the provision that the plaintiff must pay the costs on both sides, even when he shows that his rights have been violated and he sues for damages. The Senate amendment is fair and will discourage that litigation. It says if a man, buying of a dealer for his own use, is sued, the plaintiff shall not recover costs against the defendant unless he recovers $20 damages. It does not say we will make him pay the defendant's costs, although he does recover and shows that the defendant has violated the right. The bill as proposed to be amended by the Committee on Patents provides that the plaintiff shall not recover costs against the defendant unless he recovers damages to the amount of $20, or unless the defendant puts in issue the plaintiff's right to recover anything in the action. I think that is a fair distinction; but to say that we will pass the bill as it came from the House, as my friend from Kentucky thinks we should do, is to say to a man, "We will mulct you in favor of the wrong-doer if you dare to bring your suit to vindicate the right which we have granted to you, the exclusive right to use your own invention."

Mr. BECK. I do not regard the bill as it passed the House as having the effect suggested by the Senator from New York except in that class of cases where men in good faith and for their own use have bought a patented article without notice. I have been over Minnesota and Nebraska in the last five years a good deal, and I have seen those little driven wells which never ought to have been patented, (there is not a thing in it that ought to be patented at all,) where men have bought them in absolute good faith, paid their money for them, put them down in their own wells, and the manufacturer who sold them to those people living on those prairies——

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I rise to a point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. INGALLS in the chair.) The Senator from Illinois will state his point of order.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I think the five-minute rule requires that debate shall be limited to one speech.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kentucky had not spoken before, nor has he spoken five minutes.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. But he did speak before.

Mr. BECK. I merely objected to the amendment.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. The Senator objected and stated the reason for his objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The present occupant of the chair was not in the chair at the time and is not aware of the fact.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator from Kentucky spoke before the Senator from Indiana offered a new amendment, and he is entitled to speak again on the amendment.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. Then he spoke again, and the Senator from New York replied to him. I have no objection to his speaking in this case, but after he has made a one or two-minute speech he is replied to, and then he gets up again to speak; and that it seems to me is a violation of the rule.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the Senate desires the rule to be enforced that upon any bill which comes up between this and half past one each Senator may speak but once, and for but five minutes, the Chair will so order, and will see that the rule is strictly enforced. Shall that be the order of the Senate? The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. FERRY. What is that decision?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That the rule requiring that a Senator shall speak but once and for five minutes on any question shall be enforced.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I was not aware that the rule applies to a bill and all amendments generally, or to any new amendment.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. It applies to each amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The language of the rule applies to bills.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I wish to make an inquiry. I understand a Senator has a right to speak to each amendment five minutes, and not to the bill of itself; that is, if a Senator thinks proper to do so, he can speak five minutes upon each amendment. That has always been the ruling of the Chair, and it has always been the ruling of the Senate, in my recollection. If it were not so, then a Senator who had spoken on a bill could not express himself upon any amendment that was afterward offered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The language of the order is:

> And bills that are not objected to shall be taken up in their order, and each Senator shall be entitled to speak once, and for five minutes only.

The Chair will hold that under the language of the rule, a Senator who has spoken once will not be allowed to speak again unless the Senate shall permit.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. On an amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On an amendment. The Senator who has spoken once on a bill, in the language of the order will be ruled not to be entitled to the floor again.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I submit that that is a change of the standing rule of the Senate. For instance, I might speak five minutes on a bill and a substitute might be offered on which I could not address the Senate.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I rise to another point of order. Without taking an appeal from the decision of the Chair, has the Senator from West Virginia any right to speak?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The interrogatory of the Senator from West Virginia is one that he has a right to address to the Chair upon the interpretation of the ruling. The Chair will listen to him.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I believe it has been uniformly the rule since I have been here that under the Anthony rule a Senator could speak to an amendment at all times, and it certainly has been the rule that a Senator could move to indefinitely postpone a bill and speak on that motion. It does not cut off anybody. Of course each Senator for himself must be the judge of that. I hope it will not be understood in the Senate that if a substitute for a whole bill is offered, the Senator who has charge of the bill even, who has spoken five minutes previously, cannot express himself. I hope the Chair will at least not enforce that rule, for I think the Chair must see himself that it would be a very injurious one. I have not spoken on this bill, nor do I expect to speak upon it, but if there were fifty amendments offered a Senator could not say a word after he had spoken five minutes under the ruling of the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state to the Senator from West Virginia that the Senator from Illinois asked a ruling of the Chair upon the phraseology of this rule, which the Chair stated would be as has been heretofore indicated unless the Senate otherwise desired. The Chair asked whether the interpretation placed upon the rule was the desire of the Senate, and no objection was made. The Senator from West Virginia has a right to object, and the Chair will then submit the question to the Senate.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I have no wish to object to the ruling of the Chair. The Chair knows that I have no desire to object to his ruling.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The whole matter rests with the Senate.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I think if Senators understand the question they will certainly want to express themselves upon amendments, and I think it has been always usual to allow that.

Mr. McDONALD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator rise to the point of order submitted to the Senate?

Mr. McDONALD. I do not. I rise to the amendment to the bill. Is there a question of order before the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has ruled upon the point of order. The Senator from Indiana is entitled to the floor.

Mr. McDONALD. The Senate has already accepted and adopted the amendment of the committee immediately preceding the amendment now under consideration; and that provides that in suits for the infringement of a patent against any person who has purchased an article in good faith, and for his own use, either from some vender or manufacturer, unless the plaintiff recover $20 or over he shall recover no costs against the defendant, unless it shall appear that the defendant at the time of such purchase had knowledge or actual notice of the existence of such patent; and then the committee propose to amend by saying "or unless the defendant puts in issue the plaintiff's right to recover anything in the action." That is, to entitle him to the benefit of this provision, he must be an innocent purchaser without notice, and if sued he must confess that plaintiff is entitled to recover damages, and that necessarily confesses that the instrument that he has used is an infringement of the plaintiff's patent. He is not allowed, under the provisions of this bill as the committee propose to amend it, to defend on the ground that he has an instrument that is no infringement, unless he does it at the peril of having full costs recovered against him.

The object of my amendment is simply to enable him, admitting the validity of the patent, to put in any other defense that would defeat the plaintiff's right of recovery, as, for instance, that the plow or whatever it is was not an infringement of the plaintiff's patent.

Mr. KERNAN. Or that the defendant has a previous valid patent for the same thing.

Mr. McDONALD. Yes, sir; my amendment would allow any defense that would not put in issue the validity of the plaintiff's patent, without subjecting the defendant to costs. That is all. In my opinion it is but right and just, and would give defendants-litigant some relief; whereas the measure as proposed by the Committee on Patents would tie their hands, and, so far from being a measure of relief, it would simply be an intimidation, a standing threat against a party sued, either to come up and confess judgment for something under $20 or run the responsibility of full costs if the suit went against him for any sum.

Mr. PLATT. I do not want to have it considered a speech on this bill, but I want to ask this question: Suppose the defendant should put in issue the question whether he had used the article or not, and contest that?

Mr. McDONALD. He could not do it under the amendment proposed by the committee, and claim the benefit of the provisions of the act in reference to costs. He must confess that the plaintiff is entitled to recover something; it must be, in effect, an offer to confess judgment for some sum under $20; and when he puts that offer in, then, if the plaintiff does not recover more than $20, he cannot recover costs; and that is all there is of it. There is not one particle of relief to purchasers in good faith of patented instruments under the provisions of this bill as it will be if the amendment of the committee is agreed to.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, the objection to the amendment of the honorable Senator from Indiana is this: A man who undertakes to use another's patent, which is his property, may go under it with a long litigation denying the validity of the assignment to the plaintiff, if the patent has been assigned to him, claiming that he has himself a right to use the article when he has no such right, putting in issue and destroying while the lawsuit lasts the entire value of property which may be worth hundreds of thousands of dollars to the patentee, and the particular damage of the use he has made is very slight, although he has tried all these questions, indirectly, as everybody knows is the operation of it, destroying the value of the patent for years until the right to the title is settled, and he is not to be put to the expense of the litigation he has made himself.

We have in the Patent Committee day after day and week after week these cases; they are coming from the North, they are coming from the West, and they are beginning to come, I am rejoiced to see, from the South. "We invented something which has been to the American people in direct saving worth hundreds of thousands of dollars; the moment the value of our invention was discovered men began to harass us by these lawsuits." The patentee who has been a great benefactor to his country, to its commerce, to its manufactures, and to its agriculture is impoverished and broken-hearted, while everybody else about him whom his patent enriches is growing rich and prosperous.

This Patent Committee appreciate the complaint which has been so eloquently stated by the honorable Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] yesterday and by the honorable Senator from Minnesota [Mr. WINDOM] more than once. We have got a measure which we honestly believe will cut up by the roots this evil, and the committee have given it very great consideration, and I think it is their unanimous judgment; and we have gone as far, in my opinion as a lawyer—which is not, perhaps, worth much—in the opinion of the honorable chairman of the Patent Committee, [Mr. KERNAN,] which everybody will agree with me is worth much, as we can constitutionally go. And if Senators insist on the amendments which are proposed, or on adhering to the House bill, it is my deliberate judgment that the evil which they seek to cure will remain, because they have got a bill which, if it becomes nominally a law by the assent of the three bodies whose assent is necessary, never will be held to be law by the courts. Now, is it not best to try, for six or eight months at least, the operation of the measure which the committee have devised, which is free from constitutional difficulty, which is free from doubt, rather than, against the unanimous judgment of the committee which the Senate has honored by committing to them this subject, force upon the statute-book a bill which is liable at least, as these gentlemen must say, to grave constitutional objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has spoken five minutes.

Mr. McDONALD. I want to make a suggestion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Indiana has previously spoken on the amendment.

Mr. McDONALD. I do not propose to speak. I want to amend my amendment to meet the objection the Senator from Massachusetts has made, "or the plaintiff's title to it," so as to include the validity of the patent or the plaintiff's title to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment offered by the Senator from Indiana will be read.

Mr. HOAR. Now, Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. One moment. Let the amendment be reported by the Clerk.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out in the amendment reported by the committee, in line 19, the words "the plaintiff's right to recover anything in the action" and to insert "the validity of the patent or the plaintiff's title to it."

Mr. HOAR. You do not cover the difficulty where the defendant may say "I have got an assignment of this thing from you."

Mr. McDONALD. All I ask is that the defendant may be allowed to set up any defense he has to show that he has not infringed the plaintiff's patent.

Mr. HOAR. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. HOAR. There was some confusion in the Senate and I am not sure whether the Chair has held that under the rule a Senator's right to speak is limited to five minutes on the entire bill, or extends to five minutes on any pending question under the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On the bill, if no subsequent question arises under the bill; but on amendments a Senator would have a right to speak five minutes, it being a question which arises on the consideration of the bill.

Mr. HOAR. I desire, then, to speak to the new amendment offered by the Senator from Indiana.

Let me repeat the constitutional proposition: Congress has a right to reward inventors and discoverers by giving them the exclusive title to their inventions or discoveries for a limited term of time. That is the only right that it has; it cannot give them anything else under this clause. The exclusive right vesting in the inventor by law, having vested in previous inventors who have got their patents already by law, you cannot constitutionally say that if the man brings a suit and recovers but $18 as the value of the infringement of his right, he shall be held as a condition for that recovery to pay $1,000, or $5,000, or anything else.

It is true that in some of the States where there are several courts having jurisdiction of the same subject, you may impose on a plaintiff who goes to the Supreme Court with a little case instead of going to a magistrate the condition of compelling him to pay costs, because you have left open to him one tribunal where he can go without this onerous condition; but where you have but one constitutional tribunal to which a plaintiff can lawfully go, it is the limit of your power when you say he shall not recover costs; that is within your control always, but you cannot say to a man who has got a constitutional right worth $18, and who sues in the only court provided by the Constitution and laws, that he shall do so only at the cost of paying $500 to somebody else. That is my proposition. Whether I am right or wrong, is not that a grave enough doubt to justify a wise constitutional lawyer and a wise statesman in giving a trial to this remedy as we have framed it, and see whether it will not satisfy your people and destroy this evil, which I agree justifies all the indignation which you express, rather than to send this bill, as the House propose it, to its fate elsewhere?

Mr. WINDOM. I rise merely to say a word, and that is to express the hope that we may accept the amendment proposed by the Senate Committee on Patents. As I said yesterday, it does not go as far as I should like to go; but I am perfectly satisfied from the expressions I hear all about me and from the temper of the Senate that if the amendments of the committee are voted down to-day this session will close before any bill on this subject will be passed. I therefore myself, and for myself only, accept the proposition of the Senator from Massachusetts to test this bill. It will remove many of the evils, if it does not cure them all; and I say, in conclusion, that it is to the interest of those who advocate the rights of the patentee that some such bill as this shall be passed, for just so certainly as these abuses go on a few years longer as they have for the last few years, you will find action upon this subject that will injure the patentees, if there be any such power under the Constitution of the United States. These abuses must be cured, or more radical legislation than that proposed by the House bill will follow.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. Mr. President, I had at one time intended to say something in regard to this bill. I have some very well settled convictions in regard to what should be done in relation to this subject of patents; but I have refrained and intend to refrain, so that I shall not interfere at least with the transaction of other business before the Senate. If the Senate shall see fit to put upon the bill the amendment reported by its Committee on Patents, I shall still vote for the bill; but I prefer the bill as it came from the House, and I do hope the gentlemen who have a desire to have some bill passed at this session and gentlemen who desire to have some other business done besides that involved in this bill will allow the vote to be taken. I restrain myself very much when I refrain from endeavoring to argue this question in my way, and I think that if other Senators would place the same restraint upon themselves we may pass along somewhat rapidly with this and other business besides.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. MCDONALD] to the amendment of the Committee on Patents.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the amendment of the committee, upon which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I really think this is a much better provision than the one that the Senator from Indiana has suggested, and I hope it will be adopted.

The yeas and nays were taken.

Mr. MORRILL, (after having voted in the affirmative.) I desire to withdraw my vote. I for the moment forgot that I was paired with the Senator from Virginia, [Mr. WITHERS.] If present, he would vote against the amendment and I should vote for it.

The result was announced—yeas 27, nays 30; as follows:

YEAS—27.

Allison,	Cameron of Pa.,	Hoar,	Rollins,
Anthony,	Davis of Illinois,	Johnston,	Saunders,
Baldwin,	Dawes,	Jones of Nevada,	Slater,
Bayard,	Eaton,	Kernan,	Teller,
Booth,	Ferry,	Logan,	Wallace,
Brown,	Hamlin,	McMillan,	Windom.
Burnside,	Hill of Colorado,	Platt,

NAYS—30.

Bailey,	Groome,	Lamar,	Saulsbury,
Beck,	Grover,	McDonald,	Vance,
Blair,	Hampton,	Maxey,	Vest,
Butler,	Harris,	Morgan,	Voorhees,
Coke,	Hereford,	Pendleton,	Walker,
Davis of W. Va.,	Ingalls,	Plumb,	Williams.
Farley,	Jonas,	Pugh,
Garland,	Jones of Florida,	Ransom,

ABSENT—18.

Blaine,	Conkling,	McPherson,	Thurman,
Bruce,	Edmunds,	Morrill,	Whyte,
Call,	Hill of Georgia,	Paddock,	Withers.
Cameron of Wis.,	Kellogg,	Randolph,
Cockrell,	Kirkwood,	Sharon,

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I object to the further consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts objects to the further consideration of this bill. Under the ruling of the Chair it goes over.

Mr. WINDOM. I should move to postpone all prior orders and proceed with this bill; but when I suggested that motion awhile ago I distinctly said to the Senate that if it was found to be impossible to pass the bill to-day, I would not press it to the exclusion of other business. I am satisfied, now that this amendment is voted down, that this bill is to meet with such opposition that it will be impossible to pass it to-day or at any other time during this session; and therefore, while I shall vote for the bill on all occasions, I shall not myself thrust it in the face of the Senate to the exclusion of other business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next House bill on the Calendar will be reported.

CONSTRUCTION FUND FOR THE NAVY.

The bill (H. R. No. 3983) to provide a construction fund for the Navy, and for other purposes, was announced as the next in order.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. This bill will lead undoubtedly to a great deal of discussion, and the chairman of the Naval Committee is not in his seat. I do not want to object to anything, but I think we had better pass the bill over until some other time.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I hope the Senator from Illinois will allow this bill to be acted on.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I do not object to it.

Mr. BURNSIDE. There are other members of the Naval Committee here who can take charge of the bill; and any one who has opposition can express it in five minutes. There is no reason why it should not be acted upon at any rate.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I do not object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. ALLISON. I want to hear it read first.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be read.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the bill, but before concluding,

Mr. TELLER. I think we have heard enough. I will enter an objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next House bill on the Calendar will be read.

Mr. ANTHONY. I suggest to the Senator from Colorado to allow this bill to be laid over without prejudice.

Mr. TELLER. I will not object to that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Shall the bill retain its place on the Calendar? The Chair hears no objection. The next House bill favorably reported will be read.

HIRAM JOHNSON AND OTHERS.

The Chief Clerk read the title of the bill (H. R. No. 6033) to pay Hiram Johnson and other persons herein named the several sums of money herein specified, being the surplus of a military assessment paid by them and accounted for to the United States in excess of the amount required for the indemnity for which it was levied and collected.

Mr. PLUMB. I object to that, Mr. President.

Mr. COCKRELL. I hope the objection will not be made until the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] is in his seat. He will be here in a moment.

Mr. PLUMB. I have no objection to its being laid over without prejudice.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Senator from Tennessee has charge of the bill. He is engaged in a conference, and will be here in a moment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. TELLER and others. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is objected to and will go over, retaining its place on the Calendar.

Mr. COCKRELL. I requested that that might be detained just one moment. The Senator from Tennessee is on a conference committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It was passed over without prejudice.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. It can be taken up when he comes in.

Mr. COCKRELL. But it loses its place if it is passed over, and the Senator from Tennessee has no chance.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has no option except to enforce the rule. The bill was objected to, and went over under the rule.

Mr. PLUMB. I did not know that the Senator from Missouri expected the Senate to sit here waiting for some Senator to come into his seat and postpone all business until he came back. I am willing this bill shall remain on the Calendar to be called up when he comes in.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I ask consent that when the Senator from Tennessee comes in this bill may be taken up.

Mr. PLUMB. Reserving the right to object.

Mr. BAILEY. My colleague does not ask the Senate to wait for him. If the Senate will take up the bill the report made by the committee can be read and my colleague will be here in his seat by the time that is through and ready to attend to business. I trust the objection will be withdrawn and the bill be considered and the report read.

Mr. TELLER. I suggest that it is not in order to discuss this. Let us go on.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has ruled that under the objection made the bill goes over, retaining its place on the Calendar.

Mr. HARRIS. I hope the Senator from Kansas will not interpose an objection to the consideration of the bill. It has been on the Calendar since some time last summer and I think we shall have no difficulty in satisfying the Senate that it is meritorious. Whether it is so or not I hope the Senator will not cut us off from an opportunity of invoking the judgment of the Senate as to the question.

Mr. PLUMB. I withdraw the objection for the present, reserving the right to interpose it at another stage. I am satisfied that the bill should not pass.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the bill.

Mr. HARRIS. Now if the Secretary will read the report of the committee it will develop the material facts respecting the case.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the report, submitted by Mr. HAMPTON from the Committee on Military Affairs, June 15, 1880, but before concluding was interrupted by Mr. MORRILL. I think this is a bill in which my colleague [Mr. EDMUNDS] has taken a considerable interest, and therefore in his behalf I will make an objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont objects to the further consideration of the bill.

Mr. HARRIS. I beg to say to the Senator from Vermont that upon a former occasion when this bill was for a short time under discussion, I do not think his colleague took any part in the discussion of it or made a single suggestion. If he takes any special interest in it, I certainly have no evidence of that fact, and I am very anxious that the Senate should consider the bill.

Mr. MORRILL. I believe that this was a bill that was under discussion at the close of the last session and I am informed that my colleague does take an interest in the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator insists on the objection.

Mr. MORRILL. I shall be compelled to do it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill goes over, and the next House bill favorably reported on the Calendar will be laid before the Senate.

Mr. HARRIS. Will the Senator consent to let this go over without prejudice, so that if his colleague shall appear I may call it up?

Mr. MORRILL. I prefer to leave it so that my colleague can act his pleasure about it when he is here. I expect he will be here on Monday.

Mr. HOAR. I suggest to the Senator from Vermont that if the bill goes over in consequence of the absence of a Senator, which is a matter of courtesy and not of strict right, it is no more than fair that what the Senator from Tennessee suggests should be done, that it go over without prejudice. One objection will send it over then just as much as it does now.

Mr. MORRILL. I accept the suggestion proposed by the Senator from Tennessee that it may go over without prejudice.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will retain its place on the Calendar without prejudice.

EIGHT-HOUR LAW.

The joint resolution (H. R. No. 239) to provide for the enforcement of the eight-hour law was announced to be the next in order on the Calendar.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Does that come from a committee?

Mr. MORRILL. It is adversely reported and therefore it should not be considered.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. If adversely reported it does not come up under the rule.

Mr. VOORHEES. It has not been adversely reported.

Mr. BUTLER. I object to its present consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would state that the resolution has not been adversely reported, the fact being that it has not been before any committee and it lies on the table for a second reading.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Then it does not come under the rule.

Mr. BAILEY. The bill was indefinitely postponed, I think.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Is not this a House bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is a House joint resolution, considered by a vote of the Senate as equivalent to a House bill. The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER] objects to the present consideration of this joint resolution, and it goes over under the rule.

ABSENTEE SHAWNEE LANDS.

The bill (H. R. No. 1197) for the relief of settlers upon the absentee Shawnee lands in Kansas, and for other purposes, was announced as being the next House bill upon the Calendar in order, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

Mr. COCKRELL. Is there a report with that bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is a House report setting forth the facts in the case.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let it be read.

Mr. INGALLS. I can state to the Senator from Missouri the condition of this bill, so as I think to obviate the necessity of reading the report.

Mr. COCKRELL. That will be more satisfactory.

Mr. INGALLS. It is a measure to provide for carrying out the provisions of previous treaties and existing laws and joint resolutions for the disposition of the lands of the absentee Shawnee Indians. Under the provisions of the joint resolution of April, 1869, there were some three or four tracts, not exceeding in the aggregate four hundred acres in all, that by some casualty escaped; and this bill is merely to provide that the provisions of those previous laws shall apply to these few tracts. The bill has been carefully examined by the committees of both Houses. The report of the House committee contains communications from the Commissioner of the General Land Office and the Secretary of the Interior approving the provisions of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. GARLAND in the chair.) The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, and subject to amendment.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HEIRS OF CORNELIUS BOYLE.

The bill (H. R. No. 4646) for the relief of the heirs of Cornelius Boyle was announced as next in order on the Calendar; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

Mr. McMILLAN. Let the report accompanying that bill be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. HARRIS December 20, 1880:

The Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred the bill (H. R. No. 4646) for the relief of the heirs of Cornelius Boyle, has considered the same, and submits the following report:

In 1863 Cornelius Boyle was the owner in fee of lot No. 10, in square No. 40, in the city of Washington, District of Columbia. In that year said lot was libeled and condemned under the provisions of the act of July 17, 1862. And under the orders of the United States district court for the District of Columbia, the life estate of the said Cornelius Boyle was, by the marshal of the United States for the District of Columbia, sold and conveyed to one Shepherd, who held the same during the life of said Boyle. That said Boyle died in March, 1878, and soon thereafter the possession of said lot was restored to the heirs of the said Boyle, but encumbered by the accumulation of taxes, general and special, which had accrued between the years 1863 and 1878, while said Shepherd held the property under the deed of the marshal, amounting to $3,432.39, which is more than the present market value of the lot.

If the heirs are compelled to pay this accumulation of taxes, it amounts to practical confiscation of the remainder as well as the life estate.

The committee is of opinion that it was the duty of the District government to have compelled the tenant for life to have paid the taxes as they accrued; and having failed to do so, it is unjust to enforce the lien as against these heirs, some of whom are minors, and all of whom were, by the sale of the life estate, deprived of the power to make the property yield such income as would have paid the taxes as they accrued.

Therefore, the committee recommends that the taxes be remitted for the time said property was held and enjoyed by the vendee of the Government, and report the bill back with the recommendation that it pass.

Mr. McMILLAN. This is another instance of an application for the remission of taxes upon real estate in this District because the property happened to be confiscated during the war, and it has now gone into the possession of those entitled to it, the taxes in the mean time remaining unpaid.

There is no reason whatever for the remission of these taxes except the fact that they are unpaid, and that the authorities of the District have not enforced their collection heretofore. Precisely the same facts were presented in the case yesterday, except that this case is not quite so strong in some of its features as perhaps that one was. If we are to remit taxes merely because the authorities have not enforced their collection, we may set about supporting the government of this District ourselves. The tenant of property is not responsible for the taxes so far as the Government is concerned in this first instance. The taxes are levied upon the real estate itself, and all proceedings for their collection are proceedings against the land itself, and no government ever looks to the tenant or to the occupant of the land for the payment of taxes. The revenue is raised by taxation upon the real estate of the District.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. How is it as to personal property?

Mr. McMILLAN. Personal property in some respects may be different; this is real estate, and that question does not arise here. The personal property, of course, is subject to taxation also, and the personal property can be sold for the taxes as real estate can be. But this is real estate; the property is here in the District; the taxes have been regularly levied and assessed, and there is no complaint whatever in regard to their regularity, as I understand. The only claim made for the remission of the taxes is the fact that they have remained uncollected heretofore. If you take any real estate and add the aggregate of taxes for many years, of course the amount will be large. That is no reason why the taxes should not be paid.

I do not feel at liberty to interpose an objection to the consideration of this bill, because it comes from a committee of which I am a member, and in the committee, of course, my action was the same as it is now in the Senate.

Mr. HARRIS. That is quite true; the Senator from Minnesota voted against the report of the committee in committee, if it is proper for me to say so. The Senator is quite right in his statement that this is precisely the same question that was presented to the Senate yesterday when the measure was objected to and argued against by the Senator from Minnesota on the bill for the relief of the heirs of Edward B. Clark, a case where taxes were assessed as against property that had been sold under the confiscation act, where the authorities remained silent and failed to make the confiscation tenant pay the taxes year by year for a dozen or so years; and when the confiscation title ceased, the life estate terminated, the accumulation of taxes amounts to a sum equal to if not greater than the actual value of the property. The only question is whether the property shall be confiscated in the hands of the heirs as it was in the hands of the ancestor. The Senate yesterday decided by a vote of two or three to one that they would not so confiscate it; and as the Senate have pronounced that judgment so recently, I will not take up the time of the Senate in further discussion of the bill, but ask for a vote upon its passage.

Mr. McMILLAN. I shall ask for the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, and read the third time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On the passage of the bill the Senator from Minnesota calls for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 31, nays 17; as follows:

YEAS—31.

Bailey,	Davis of W. Va.,	Hereford,	Randolph,
Bayard,	Eaton,	Jonas,	Saulsbury,
Beck,	Farley,	Jones of Florida,	Slater,
Booth,	Garland,	Kernan,	Vest,
Brown,	Groome,	Lamar,	Voorhees,
Call,	Grover,	Maxey,	Walker,
Cockrell,	Hampton,	Morgan,	Williams.
Coke,	Harris,	Pugh,

NAYS—17.

Anthony,	Ferry,	McMillan,	Saunders,
Baldwin,	Hill of Colorado,	Morrill,	Teller.
Blair,	Kellogg,	Paddock,
Burnside,	Kirkwood,	Platt,
Dawes,	Logan,	Rollins,

ABSENT—27.

Allison,	Davis of Illinois,	Jones of Nevada,	Thurman,
Blaine,	Edmunds,	McDonald,	Vance,

Cameron of Pa.,	Hoar,	Plumb,	Windom,
Cameron of Wis.,	Ingalls,	Ransom,	Withers.
Conkling,	Johnston,	Sharon,

So the bill was passed.

CONVERSION OF BULLION INTO COIN.

The next House bill on the Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 6545) to amend section 3524 of the Revised Statutes, so as to authorize a charge for melting or refining bullion when at or above standard; which was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DISTRICT MUNICIPAL CODE.

The next House bill on the Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 5541) to establish a municipal code for the District of Columbia.

Mr. HARRIS. That bill is one of three hundred and thirty-five pages. Two weeks ago I was exceedingly anxious to obtain consideration for it. It is now too late for the Senate to take action upon the bill, and it might as well go over. It is impossible to consider the bill at this stage of the session.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

J. M. MICOU.

The bill (H. R. No. 4002) for the relief of the estate of J. M. Micou, deceased, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay $685.67, without interest, to the estate of J. M. Micou, deceased, for rent of storehouse in Montgomery, Alabama, from August 1, 1865, to April 2, 1866, used for storing quartermasters' stores, under contract with him, at a monthly rental of $85 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of half past one has arrived. The Chair will lay before the Senate——

Mr. RANSOM. I move that all pending and prior orders be postponed until to-morrow, and that the river and harbor bill be taken up. I have been informed by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. EATON] that the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. BURNSIDE] had already given notice that he desired at this moment to occupy a very short time in some remarks that he wishes to submit, and I will give way for those remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Before the Chair submits that question to the Senate he will lay several bills and joint resolutions from the House of Representatives before the Senate for reference.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills of the House of Representatives were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (H. R. No. 1560) granting a pension to James B. White; and

A bill (H. R. No. 7111) restoring the name of Andrew J. Pennel to the pension-roll.

The following bill and joint resolutions from the House of Representatives were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs:

A bill (H. R. No. 6860) for the relief of William H. Davis;

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 413) authorizing the Secretary of War to turn over to Governor Roberts, of Texas, such tents, poles, and pins as he may require for the use of the volunteers of the State for their encampment for the year 1881; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 414) relating to loaning tents for soldiers' reunions in Indiana and Iowa.

The following joint resolutions from the House of Representatives were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Printing:

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 402) to provide for the publication of the memorial addresses of Evarts W. Farr; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 405) to print the report of the tenth census of the United States.

BARGE W. J. SPICER.

The joint resolution (H. R. No. 401) in relation to the barge W. J. Spicer was read the first time by its title.

Mr. FERRY. I ask for the present consideration of the joint resolution. The Committee on Commerce have considered a joint resolution in its precise form, and it was reported unanimously by that committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be read at length for information.

The joint resolution was read the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved, &c., That the barge W. J. Spicer, built in Canada but bought by an American citizen and brought into the United States, on payment of duties on the materials entering into her construction, be admitted to the privileges extended to barges of American build and ownership by "An act relating to vessels not propelled by sail or internal motive power of their own, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1879.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. FERRY. I ask that Senate joint resolution No. 159, in relation to the barge W. I. Spicer, be indefinitely postponed, so as to relieve the Calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Such will be the order, if there be no objection.

OBSEQUIES OF THE LATE SENATOR CARPENTER.

The VICE-PRESIDENT appointed as the committee on the part of the Senate under the resolution of the 24th instant, for superintending the funeral of the late Senator MATTHEW H. CARPENTER, Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, Mr. CONKLING, Mr. LOGAN, Mr. PENDLETON, and Mr. COCKRELL.

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

Mr. WALLACE. I desire to appeal to the Senator from Rhode Island to yield the floor to me temporarily, that I may have passed a Senate bill which affects important interests in my State. As I am about to leave the Senate, I trust the Senate will do me the courtesy to take up and pass the bill.

Mr. BURNSIDE. In point of fact the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. RANSOM] has the floor for the consideration of the river and harbor bill.

Mr. RANSOM. I have yielded under the circumstances to the Senator from Rhode Island to make some remarks which he has prepared. I have gone very far in doing that, and I hope no other Senator will ask for any indulgence, as I shall be obliged to refuse it. I ask now that the river and harbor bill be taken up so as to be pending before the Senate, and then I will give the floor for ten minutes to the Senator from Rhode Island.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. GARLAND.) Is there objection to the river and harbor bill being brought before the Senate for present consideration? The Chair hears none, and the bill is before the Senate.

Mr. RANSOM. I ask that the bill be laid aside temporarily informally, in order that the Senator from Rhode Island may address the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hears no objection to the course suggested by the Senator from North Carolina, and the Senator from Rhode Island is entitled to the floor.

ALLEGED ELECTION FRAUDS.

Mr. HOAR. I ask leave to dispose of a matter which was brought up yesterday which will take but one moment. I think it is a privileged motion. Yesterday I moved to reconsider the vote accepting and ordering to be printed a report made by the honorable Senator from Pennsylvania, [Mr. WALLACE.] It is now agreed that the first thirty-three pages of that portion of the document entitled "Part 3," shall be stricken from the document as having been reported inadvertently, and that my motion to reconsider shall be withdrawn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Such will be the order if there be no objection.

Mr. WALLACE. The order is that those pages be not printed with the document or circulated with the document?

Mr. HOAR. That is it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion to reconsider is withdrawn?

Mr. HOAR. The motion to reconsider is withdrawn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Such is the order.

THE BRIG GENERAL ARMSTRONG.

Mr. PENDLETON. The unfinished business of yesterday is Senate bill No. 1441. I desire that that bill shall be laid before the Senate in order that it may retain its place, and then I will give way.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the bill by its title, for the purpose indicated by the Senator from Ohio.

The CHIEF CLERK. "A bill (S. No. 1441) for the relief of the captain, owners, officers, and crew of the late United States private-armed brig General Armstrong, their heirs, executors, administrators, or assigns."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is before the Senate, and will be laid aside for the purpose of considering the river and harbor bill.

Mr. PENDLETON. Without losing its place.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without losing its place.

ISTHMUS SHIP-CANALS.

Mr. EATON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. BURNSIDE] has the floor.

Mr. EATON. I understand he has, and it is for the further pleasure of the Senator from Rhode Island that I now move to temporarily lay aside the river and harbor bill.

Mr. RANSOM. If my friend will pardon me, I had already agreed that the river and harbor bill should be temporarily laid aside so that the Senator from Rhode Island might address the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. So the Chair understood the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. EATON. I now move that the resolution which I had the honor of reporting from the Committee on Foreign Relations be taken up in order that the Senator from Rhode Island may address the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is no objection, such will be the order. The resolution will be reported.

The Chief Clerk read the following resolution reported by Mr. EATON from the Committee on Foreign Relations February 16, 1881:

Resolved by the Senate, (the House of Representatives concurring,) That the interests of the people of the United States of America and the welfare and security of their Government are so involved in the subject of the construction of ship-canals and other ways for the transportation of sea-going vessels across the isthmus connecting North and South America that the Government of the United States, with the frankness which is due to all other peoples and governments, hereby asserts that it will insist that its consent is a necessary condition-precedent to the execution of any such project; and also as to the rules and regulations under which other nations shall participate in the use of such canals or other ways, either in peace or in war.

Mr. BURNSIDE. Mr. President, I heartily congratulate the Committee on Foreign Relations, and especially its honored chairman, [Mr. EATON,] upon reporting the resolution which has just been read at the desk. It is both terse and comprehensive in its declarations, and, in my opinion, fully embodies the sentiment of the American people as to the non-interference of foreign powers with the affairs of our continent. I am very glad that the committee has reported this resolution, instead of the one that I had the honor to introduce on the 25th day of June, 1879, as it is much broader in its scope and spirit, and is much more satisfactory to me.

Some of our most eminent citizens claim that the so-called Monroe doctrine has answered its purpose; and that the construction of a ship-canal across the Isthmus by any foreign power, or any corporation organized under the authority of any foreign power, has no relation or connection with this doctrine.

The ablest papers that I have yet seen expressing this view are the one read by one of the most distinguished citizens of the State which I have the honor to in part represent, Professor Gammell, before the Rhode Island Historical Society, and the one prepared by the late Secretary of the Navy, Hon. R. W. Thompson.

No time can be allotted to me at this late day of the session to go into a long argument in answer to these most able papers, but I will say that the principal error which their authors and others who hold the same views have fallen into is this: they fail to see that President Monroe went just as far as it was necessary to meet the exigency which then presented itself, and that the same principle which governed him in his celebrated declaration should govern us in meeting the present condition of affairs by declaring that no ship-canal or ship-railway shall be established upon the Isthmus without our approval.

The principle governing both declarations is a living principle, which lies at the very foundation of public safety. Sir, the safety of the Republic should be the controlling idea with all public men in the exercise of their official duties. President Monroe was actuated in the enunciation which he made by a desire to promote the welfare and safety of the Republic; and we should feel that we are carrying out, or rather continuing his doctrine by meeting the present emergency in precisely the same spirit. It is an easy matter for us to say at this period of great national prosperity that we do not care to impede the progress of commerce and trade by standing in the way of a great improvement like the construction of the Isthmus canal, no matter by whom the work is to be prosecuted; and it is also easy for us to make ourselves believe that no complications can arise in the present generation from its construction; but when we deliberately cast our thoughts into the future, and contemplate the great trouble which may come upon the Republic from the construction of such a thoroughfare should it be under the control of any other power than our own, we should hesitate to leave to our posterity a question fraught with so much danger as this would be. It is our duty to meet the emergency now, and to say to the civilized world that under no circumstances will we allow anything to be done on this continent which in the slightest degree jeopardizes our safety or questions the fact that there is here no "Balance of Power." We should say, in language unmistakable in its meaning, that we are the rulers on this continent; that our wishes are to be consulted, and that we are absolutely and distinctly in the majority; that we will not allow any retrograde steps on the part of any government existing on this continent; that we will encourage every advance toward republican form of government, and will at all times seek to make government on this continent homogeneous.

People who claim that the enunciation of this principle means war with foreign powers are, in my opinion, greatly mistaken. It means peace with foreign powers. Should a faltering policy at this time be adopted to meet the present demands of commerce and trade, it will entail upon our posterity complications and wars which will cost the Republic tenfold or more the price of building a canal across the Isthmus on any one of the proposed routes. Let Congress pass this resolution, and peace upon this question will be secured during our generation and for all time.

I am perfectly aware of the existence of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, but do not think it necessary to discuss its provisions now. My remarks relate to the public safety, which we are bound as a first duty to protect.

Mr. President, let us do our duty at this time and declare to the world that under no circumstances will we allow a thoroughfare to be established across the Isthmus without our consent. I have had no reason to change my views in the slightest degree upon this subject since I had the honor of addressing this body more at large on the 2d of December, 1879, although there has been considerable discussion throughout the country pro and con.

The Senator from Connecticut during the six years that he has graced this Senate has rendered most honest, faithful, efficient, and distinguished services not only to this body, but to the country, but none of these services, in my opinion, will shine with more brilliancy in our history than this last great service which he has rendered in reporting this resolution. He will be long held in kind remembrance by all patriotic people.

It is time, Mr. President, that we should begin to look to our foreign relations, and I am glad to congratulate the present Administration upon the high and manly stand which it has taken upon matters of an international character which have come before it. When Lord Salisbury curtly refused to consider our claim for reparation for the Fortune Bay outrage, the Executive sent to the two Houses of Congress a message declaring that the honor and interest of the country should be vindicated by the restoration of the duties on fish from the Dominion until the wrong is righted. Congress in my judgment very unwisely adjourned without taking any action upon that recommendation.

The executive department has taken the strongest possible ground with reference to this Isthmus canal question, and yet Congress made no move in that direction until the introduction of this resolution and the resolution of the House, of which I will not speak, because I have no right to refer to the action of that body.

As to the Samoan Islands, all Europe is striving to gain a foothold in the south seas, maintaining costly consulates and fleets, and yet we have refused to give our consul at Apia more than a thousand dollars a year. Japan offered to give us a building lot for our legation, and the Executive recommended its acceptance and also a small appropriation for a fire-proof building to save our records from the destructive conflagrations so frequent there. We failed to respond to this recommendation.

The diplomatic agents of Europe are busy in all the republics of Central America. We who are more interested than any other nation send one man to represent us at Guatemala, Costa Rica, Honduras, Salvador, and Nicaragua. Any person at all conversant with the lines of communication and travel in those countries will readily see that he cannot visit those capitals more than once a year, if as often as that, and neither he nor our representative in Colombia—the most important place in my estimation in our diplomatic service—is allowed to employ a secretary. I need not comment upon these facts. They speak for themselves, and show to our people that their representatives should proceed to the enunciation of the principles which ought to govern our foreign relations.

Mr. President, I hope this resolution will pass the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be laid aside, and the consideration of the river and harbor bill resumed.

Mr. EATON. As my friend from North Carolina is not here at this moment, unless some Senator desires to discuss the principles involved in the resolution I shall be willing to put it to a vote. The resolution is an argument in itself, clean cut, asserting the determination of the United States with regard to the questions involved, and therefore I should be glad to see a vote taken by yeas and nays on the resolution without further discussion, and let it go to the world.

Mr. HOAR. I hope the Senator from Connecticut——

Mr. RANSOM. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield?

Mr. RANSOM. I do not like to interrupt the Senator from Massachusetts, but this was the limit of my courtesy.

Mr. HOAR. I shall take but about two minutes.

Mr. EATON. I do not propose to discuss it.

Mr. HOAR. I was about to say to the honorable Senator from Connecticut, in furtherance of what I understand to be the desire of the Senator from North Carolina, that the Senator from Minnesota, [Mr. WINDOM,] who is not now in his seat, desires, I believe, to address the Senate in support of the doctrine enunciated by this resolution. He certainly announced to the Senate that he desired to take the earliest possible opportunity to make some remarks upon the subject. It would be, I am sure, not the desire of the Senator from Connecticut to deprive the Senator from Minnesota of that right.

Mr. EATON. Not at all.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to say that while the doctrine of the resolution and the doctrine of my friend from Rhode Island, I trust, will meet the unanimous approbation of Congress, yet it is possible that in one particular the expression of the resolution may require modification or consideration. I hope the Senator will not press it to a vote this morning.

Mr. EATON. Certainly not.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will go over.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. ALLISON, Mr. CALL, Mr. CAMERON of Pennsylvania, Mr. COCKRELL, Mr. JOHNSTON, Mr. JONES of Florida, Mr. MAXEY, Mr. MORGAN, Mr. PENDLETON, Mr. PLUMB, Mr. RANSOM, Mr. SLATER, Mr. VANCE, Mr. VOORHEES, and Mr. WALKER submitted amendments intended to be proposed by them respectively to the bill (H. Mr. MORGAN, from the Committee on Rules, reported an amendment intended to be proposed to the bill (H. R. Mr. MAXEY, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported an amendment intended to be proposed to the bill (H. R. Mr. INGALLS, from the committee on the District of Columbia, reported an amendment intended to be proposed to the bill (H. R. No. 7203) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 2220) to authorize the Secretary of War to purchase certain papers relating to the late war, reported it without amendment.

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

Mr. RANSOM. I now move that the Senate proceed with the consideration of the river and harbor bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 7104) making appropriations for the construction, completion, repair, and preservation of certain works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

Mr. RANSOM. I hope the bill will be read, not formally, but for action upon the amendments of the Committee on Commerce as they are reached in the reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the bill, and the amendments of the Committee on Commerce will be acted upon as they are reached in order in the reading.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill. The first amendment reported by the Committee on Commerce was to strike out the following clause, from line 10 to line 20:

The Secretary of War shall cause to be let by contract all public works authorized under this act except for surveys and estimates. Such contracts shall be made, after sufficient public advertisement for proposals, in such manner and form as the Secretary of War shall prescribe; and such contracts shall be made with the lowest responsible bidders, accompanied by such securities as the Secretary of War shall require, conditioned for the faithful prosecution of the work according to such contract; and for the proper payment of all liabilities incurred in the prosecution thereof for labor and material: Provided, That in the opinion of the Secretary of War the interests of the Government shall not be actually injured thereby.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 62, after "United States," to strike out "to the bed of the estuary and training walls of this work is secured, free of expense to the Government, in a manner satisfactory to the Secretary of War" and in lieu thereof to insert "to make such improvements as are herein provided shall be secured free of expense to the United States, in a manner satisfactory to the Secretary of War;" so as to make the clause read:

Improving Oakland Harbor, California, $60,000; and the sums of money heretofore appropriated for this improvement and unexpended are hereby reappropriated; but the sums so appropriated and reappropriated shall not be available until the right of the United States to make such improvements as are herein provided shall be secured free of expense to the United States, in a manner satisfactory to the Secretary of War.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 85, to increase the appropriation "for improving harbor at Little Sodus Bay, New York," from $7,500 to $20,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 88, to insert:

Deepening and widening the channel in Gowanus Bay and the Harbor of New York, $40,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 92, to insert:

Improving harbor of New Rochelle, New York, $20,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 130, after the words "Greenbrier River," to strike out "twenty" and insert "twenty-four;" in line 131, after the word "sum," to strike out "twelve" and insert "fifteen;" and in line 133, after the word "and," to strike out "eight" and insert "nine;" so as to make the clause read:

Improving New River from lead mines in Wythe County, Virginia, to mouth of Greenbrier River, $24,000; of which sum $15,000 shall be expended in the continuation of the work from the mouth of Greenbrier up, and $9,000 in the continuation of the work from the lead mines in Wythe County down.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after the word "Georgia," in line 140, to strike out "twenty-five" and insert "sixty-five;" in line 142, before the word "thousand," to strike out "one" and insert "five;" and in line 143, after the word "land," to insert "taken for widening the channel opposite Savannah;" so as to make the clause read:

Improving Savannah Harbor and River, Georgia, $65,000; of which sum $5,000 may be applied to payment of damages for land taken for widening the channel opposite Savannah.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 150, to increase the appropriation "for improving harbor at Mobile, Alabama," from $90,000 to $100,000.

Mr. MORGAN. At the proper time I propose to amend this item so as to add $25,000 to the $100,000 reported by the committee.

Mr. RANSOM. The question is upon the adoption of the amendment of the committee now.

Mr. MORGAN. Of course I am for concurring in the amendment, but I simply say that I desire to offer an additional amendment. Agreeing to this amendment will not cut me off from the privilege of offering it hereafter?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will have an opportunity afterward to offer his amendment.

Mr. BROWN. Is it necessary for us to give notice of amendments to which we desire to move amendments?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is not necessary. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, in line 153, to increase the appropriation "for improving the Mississippi River at and near Vicksburgh, and protection of harbor of Vicksburgh, Mississippi," from $50,000 to $75,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 182, after the word "harbor," to strike out "ten" and insert "twenty-five;" so as to make the clause read:

Improving harbor at Michigan City, Indiana: Continuing operations at outside harbor, $20,000; for continuing improvement on the inner harbor, $25,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LOGAN. Will the Clerk tell me on what page of the bill he is reading?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Page 9, line 186.

Mr. RANSOM. If the Senator from Illinois will pardon me, I should like to suggest to him that there is no amendment of the committee there. I should be glad if the amendments of the committee could be first acted upon, and then he can move any amendment he desires.

Mr. LOGAN. I have no objection to that course. I desire to offer an amendment to line 184, the item of appropriation for improving the harbor at Calumet, Illinois.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois will have an opportunity.

Mr. RANSOM. I will remind the Senator from Illinois of it myself.

Mr. LOGAN. Will that apply to all the amendments that may be offered by individual Senators?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is the rule adopted by the Senate.

Mr. LOGAN. Very well; I will not offer the amendment until after the amendments of the committee shall have been acted on.

The Secretary resumed and continued the reading of the bill. The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, in line 213, to increase the appropriation for "improving harbor and river at Au Sable, Michigan," from $4,000 to $6,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 238, to increase the appropriation for "improving harbor at Muskegon, Michigan," from $10,000 to $20,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 242, to increase the appropriation for "improving harbor at Pentwater, Michigan," from $6,000 to $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 247, to increase the appropriation for "improving river and harbor at Saint Joseph, and water-channel leading up to Benton Harbor, Michigan," from $8,000 to $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 254, to insert

Improving Grand River from its mouth to the city of Grand Rapids, Michigan, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 256, to insert:

Continuing improvement of Clinton River, Michigan, $8,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 258, to insert:

Removing bar at ice-harbor of refuge at Belle River, Michigan, $7,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 289, to increase the appropriation for "improving Superior Bay, Wisconsin: dredging for improvement of natural entrance and for repairing existing works," from $5,000 to $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 291, to increase the appropriation for "harbor of refuge at Sturgeon Bay Canal, Wisconsin," from $10,000 to $15,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 293, to insert:

Improving harbor at Oconto, Wisconsin, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 300, to increase the appropriation for "improving harbor at Grand Marais, Minnesota," from $10,000 to $20,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 302, to increase the appropriation for "improving harbor at Duluth, Minnesota," from $25,000 to $40,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 304, to increase the appropriation for "improving the harbor at Wilmington, California," from $12,000 to $33,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 305, to insert:

Improving Humboldt Harbor and Bay, $40,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read to line 315.

Mr. HAMLIN. I offer an amendment at that point, because it is one that virtually comes from the committee. It was omitted inadvertently.

Mr. RANSOM. The Committee would have reported the amendment, but the Senator from Maine was not here.

Mr. HAMLIN. In line 314 I move to strike out "$20,000" and insert "$66,000," so as to read:

Improving Lubec Channel, Maine, $66,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary resumed and continued the reading of the bill. The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, in line 316, after the word "New Hampshire," to strike out "five" and insert "ten;" and in line 317, after the word "dollars," to insert "of which sum an amount not exceeding $750 shall be available immediately, to be used in acquiring title to land used in the cut-off at 'Ox Bow;'" so as to make the clause read:

Improving Exeter River, New Hampshire, $10,000; of which sum an amount not exceeding $750 shall be available immediately, to be used in acquiring title to land used in the cut-off at "Ox Bow."

Mr. ROLLINS. That is an error; the appropriation should be $15,000. It was so agreed to by the committee. I move to amend by striking out $5,000 and inserting $15,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is that the report of the committee?

Mr. RANSOM. That should have been the report of the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment increasing the appropriation for improving Exeter River, New Hampshire, from $5,000 to $15,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, after line 320, to insert:

Improving New Lamprey River, New Hampshire, below New Market, $10,000.

Mr. ROLLINS. The word "New" should be stricken out before "Lamprey." It is the wrong name.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The Secretary resumed and continued the reading of the bill. The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, in line 335, to increase the appropriation for improving "Providence River and Narragansett Bay, Rhode Island," from $40,000 to $60,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 335, to insert:

Improving Potonomut River, Rhode Island, $5,000.

Mr. ANTHONY. There is a typographical error there. It should be "Potonowut"—"w" instead of "m."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The correction will be made. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, in line 342, before the word "thousand," to strike out "fifty" and insert "eighty-five;" and in line 344, after the word "river," to strike out "forty-five," and insert "eighty;" so as to read:

Improving Mississippi, Missouri, and Arkansas Rivers: Removing snags, wrecks, and other obstructions, $185,000; of which sum $80,000 shall be expended on the Mississippi River, $80,000 on the Missouri River, and $25,000 on the Arkansas River. And the work herein provided for shall be prosecuted at all seasons of the year, especially between the 1st day of July and the 1st day of November of each year.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after the word "year," in line 349, to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That so much of said sum of $80,000 hereby appropriated to the Missouri River as may be necessary shall be expended in the construction of a snag and dredge boat to be used in said river, the balance of said $80,000 to be expended in operating said boat.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 374, to increase the appropriation for "improving Buttermilk Channel, New York," from $40,000 to $60,000.

This amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 450, to insert:

Improving Chester River from Spry's Landing to Crumpton, Maryland, $6,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 452, to insert:

Improving water-passage between Deal's Island and Little Deal's Island, Maryland, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 455, after the word "Virginia," to strike out "ten" and insert "twenty;" and in line 456, after the word "dollars," to insert "to be expended on the improvement of the river and harbor at Petersburgh, Virginia;" so as to make the clause read:

Improving Appomattox River, Virginia, $20,000, to be expended in the improvement of the river and harbor at Petersburgh, Virginia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after the word "Virginia," in line 499, to strike out "twenty" and insert "forty;" so as to make the clause read:

Improving Little Kanawha River, West Virginia, $40,000: Provided, That no tolls shall be collected by the Little Kanawha Navigator Company for that part of the river improved by the General Government.

Mr. HEREFORD. At line 501 there is a misprint. It should read "Navigation Company."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The correction will be made.

Mr. SAULSBURY. In that connection I should like to ask the Senator from West Virginia if the navigation of that river is not under the control of a company?

Mr. HEREFORD. There is a provision here that no tolls shall be collected by the company for that portion of the river improved by the General Government.

Mr. TELLER. I cannot hear the Senator. What part of the river does he say is under the control of this navigation company?

Mr. HEREFORD. The lower part, toward the mouth. This is for the improvement above.

Mr. TELLER. Then we are improving, as I understand, the upper part of the river for the benefit of this navigation company below?

Mr. HEREFORD. No, sir; it is for the benefit of the commerce of the people.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I do not know anything about the commercial importance of the river, but if the navigation of the stream is obstructed by a corporation which charges toll, I do not think it wise for Congress to be appropriating money for the benefit of a company that controls the navigation of the stream.

Mr. HEREFORD. The Senator from Delaware must know as well as any gentleman that we cannot insert any other provision in this bill to control the company. The appropriation is for the purpose of improving the commerce of the people on the upper part of the river.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, in line 504, after the words "North Carolina," to strike out "ten" and insert "from the ocean to Wilmington, one hundred and forty;" so as to make the clause read:

Improving Cape Fear River, North Carolina, from the ocean to Wilmington, $140,000.

Mr. TELLER. That is such a large increase that I should like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Commerce what is the necessity for it?

Mr. RANSOM. I will not detain the Senate nor my friend from Colorado a minute. It is a very proper inquiry that he should make, for the increase is a large one. I shall not take up the time of the Senate unless my friend from Colorado desires it. If he will notice in the report of the Secretary of War, it is suggested that a further report should be made upon this matter, and since the general report has come in the engineer, a very able engineer, Colonel Craighill, of the Army, has made his supplemental report on that matter, and his estimate is for $400,000.

Mr. TELLER. That is, I suppose, a report that has come in that we have not had the benefit of. It has come in since the bill has been before the committee, I understand.

Mr. RANSOM. No, sir; it came in after the bill left the House.

Mr. TELLER. But it has not been printed.

Mr. RANSOM. It has not been printed. I will submit it to my friend to read at his leisure.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado desire to have the report read?

Mr. TELLER. No, sir; I will read it myself.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator desire to have the amendment passed over?

Mr. TELLER. No, sir.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, after line 506, to insert:

Improving the Cape Fear River from Wilmington to Fayetteville, North Carolina, $30,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 514, to increase the appropriation for improving "Neuse River from its mouth to head of navigation, North Carolina," from $15,000 to $30,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 516, to increase the appropriation for "improving Pamlico and Tar Rivers, North Carolina," from $3,000 to $8,000.

Mr. THURMAN. If I were not afraid of making the chairman of the Committee on Commerce mad with me, so that he will not vote for a little amendment that I have to propose, I would call attention to something rather curious about this bill.

Mr. RANSOM. I will answer the Senator with great pleasure.

Mr. THURMAN. The House passed an appropriation for improving Cape Fear River, North Carolina, $10,000. Our committee changes that "to improve the Cape Fear River from the ocean to Wilmington, $140,000," and then "for improving Cape Fear River from Wilmington to Fayetteville, $30,000." That is, instead of $10,000 as the appropriation was made in the bill as it came from the House, the committee report $170,000, seventeen times as large as the House gave. Then going down we come to Neuse River. The House thought $15,000 was enough for that, but our committee find it requires $30,000, and so they have reported an amendment making it $30,000. Then we come to Pamlico and Tar Rivers. The House thought $3,000 was enough, our committee increase it to $8,000. Then we come to Trent River, wherever that is. It is somewhere in North Carolina. The House thought that $2,000 would do, but our committee think $5,000 absolutely necessary. Then the House did not think anything was necessary for the Yadkin River, for Contentnia Creek, wherever that is, or Beaufort Harbor, or Lillington River, but our committee think $11,000 necessary for Yadkin River, $10,000 necessary for Contentnia Creek, $30,000 necessary for Beaufort Harbor, and $3,000 for Lillington River, but they could not give us $20,000 more to go on with the work of the ice-harbor on the Ohio River, at the mouth of the Muskingum, although both the local engineer and the Chief Engineer recommended an appropriation of $136,000.

I do not understand these amendments. Lillington River is much more important, it seems, than the navigation of the Ohio River and preserving its commerce from being destroyed by the out-going ice, and Contentnia Creek in North Carolina is far more important than the Ohio River. I only want to say to my friend that I do not propose any log-rolling to him at all, but I hope when I come to move my amendment the same liberal spirit that has taken care of his State will induce him to look across the Alleghanies in a kindly manner.

Mr. RANSOM. The Senator from Ohio did not hear the explanation that I made to the Senator from Colorado, which I think was satisfactory to him and to the Senate.

I dislike to take up the time of the Senate, but I will state again to my friend from Ohio—for I certainly call him my friend—that the report has since been made in reference to Cape Fear River. That report is now in the hands of my friend from Colorado, and is a very strong one in favor of the further improvement of the river, and recommends at the lowest estimate for the next year $400,000. For the Upper Cape Fear we have taken on half the estimate.

I do not like to say exactly what this proposed leap at North Carolina from my friend means. I know it means that he expects a little favor from me toward the ice-harbor at Muskingum. I wish I could grant what he desires in that regard; but the Senator says he is not for a bargain, and I certainly am not.

Let me say one word if it is proper to do so. This bill came from the House to the Senate with $65,000 only appropriated for the State of North Carolina, not as much for the whole of that State as the Senate last year gave the ice-harbor of Muskingum in the State of the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. THURMAN. No, $50,000 was given to it.

Mr. RANSOM. Sixty-five thousand dollars was given by the House to the State of North Carolina. I suppose it is not wrong for me to say to the Senate that we have a coast line in that State of between two hundred and fifty and three hundred miles; that North Carolina has within her borders more water surface than any State, perhaps more than any two States in the Republic; that she has four great rivers making up from her bays and sounds and from the ocean through the central part of the State, all of them large and all of them navigable; and that the harbor at Wilmington, of which my friend spoke, is the great harbor of refuge for all the vessels on the eastern coast which are wrecked or disabled in the perils of Hatteras.

I will simply say to the Senate, as Senators will not have time now to look over the estimates, and it is due from me that I should say so, that in each one of the appropriations with reference to North Carolina I have gone below, and in many of them far below, the estimates of the engineers.

Mr. THURMAN. What is the estimate for the French Broad?

Mr. RANSOM. The estimate of the engineers is about $10,000. My friend has gone at one grand leap from Currituck up to Cherokee. He has made a great stride, leaving the coast of North Carolina; but he has been disposed to be facetious, and if it was anybody else except the Senator from Ohio I would say that the innocence of geography of the Senator ought not to be taken by the Senate as an argument against the river and harbor bill; but I will not say that in reference to my friend. Here are all the estimates for North Carolina in this bill cut down, making but very little, if anything, beyond the appropriation that my friend has helped to make in that State for the many years he has been in the Senate.

Mr. VANCE. If my colleague will allow me a moment, I will say that the present appropriations for the whole of North Carolina lack $50,000 of the amount given by the bill to the Ohio River, to say nothing of the thousands and hundreds of thousands that have been heretofore given to the improvement of the Ohio, when several of these streams in North Carolina have never had one dollar before. If the Senator will allow me, the reason why we are anxious to have these small streams and tributaries improved is in consequence of the agitation going over the country by reason of high railroad charges. People are now unwilling to pay very heavy freights, and, to avoid being subject to those high charges, an improvement of small streams in the eastern part of North Carolina, with a very small amount of money on the part of the Government, will enable farmers to transport their cotton, their lumber, and heavy freight to the port where it is to be shipped abroad, without subjecting them to the high rates charged by rail.

Mr. MORGAN. I have no remark to make about the appropriations for North Carolina or any other State, except in reference to the principle that seems to be advanced here as a basis for the action of the committee and also of the House of Representatives; and that is that the appropriations must be made to States. I understand the theory of the river and harbor bill has always been that the appropriations were made for the benefit of the commerce of the country; that an appropriation could not be established except as contributing to the commerce of the United States, and that otherwise it is a matter which more properly belongs to the States.

This argument has been prevailing in the Senate now for two or three years, and I have endeavored always to combat it. I cannot admit that proposition as a sufficient basis of my action in the Senate upon one of these bills. I cannot vote to give the money of the people of the United States to any State to works of internal improvement, but will vote to contribute what is proper out of the general revenues of the country to the promotion of the commerce of the country at large.

The junior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE] referred to the fact that this bill, and I suppose in that remark he would include all bills of a similar character, was framed in relation to the preparation of other convenient channels of commerce by some competition with the present railroad system of the United States, so as to cheapen transportation to the seaboard. That is not a correct basis of action in the Senate, for if that be so, if we desire to get control of transportation to the seaboard or elsewhere through appropriations made by Congress out of the common Treasury of the United States, we have the same right to build other railroads to compete with those now existing as we have to open rivers for that purpose.

That is not a correct basis of action in the Senate. It is not a correct principle, and if these two ideas are followed in the appropriation bills for works of internal improvement, so-called river and harbor improvements, we shall find ourselves inside of five years voting $100,000,000 for these works of internal improvement, for that is the very reason that has superinduced the log-rolling system into these bills which is so pernicious and so odious. Members imagine that their States should receive appropriations whether they have got conveniences or water-course to furnish advantages to the commerce of the country, merely because they have so much population and so much political power, and they give their aid to these bills because of the amount of money that they receive under them. Members have been continually rising in the House and in the Senate and demanding that more money should be given to their States, and even to their districts. In reading the debates of the other body during the past few years, I have observed frequent demands made that money should be appropriated as a condition for a member giving his vote on the bill. It will be impossible for us ever to get this system of log-rolling out of these bills and to get down to a system of appropriation for these works consistent with our duty to the Constitution of the United States, unless we commence a proceeding on the correct principle. The principles stated by the Senators from North Carolina, in reply to the remarks of the Senator from Ohio, are not correct, in my judgment, and I felt it to be my duty to answer them.

Mr. THURMAN. My friend from North Carolina [Mr. RANSOM] with very great justice taunts me with my ignorance of geography. I plead guilty, provided a river and harbor bill is to be taken as an improved geography; but if the geographies that are in use in our schools and those we have in our libraries are books that we may rely upon, then I think I could make a good defense, for I am quite sure that no author of any geography in use in America or anywhere else ever heard of many of the places that are to be found in every river and harbor bill that has passed Congress for years past or in the bill which is now before us.

I ought to know something about the State of Virginia—old Virginia—but upon my honor I never heard of Nomoni Creek, Virginia, for which $2,000 are given in this bill. I never heard of Pagan Creek, in Virginia, for which $5,000 are given in this bill. I certainly never heard of Totuski River, Virginia, and I doubt now whether my learned friend from North Carolina, great geographer as he is, could tell on the spur of the moment where Totuski River is.

Mr. RANSOM. I have looked into it thoroughly.

Mr. THURMAN. Ah! The Senator has looked into it since he was appointed chairman of the Committee on Commerce. I venture to say that before he was on that committee he never heard of it. Now, coming to his own State, I really do not believe until he attained that position which he fills so gracefully and with so much ability that he knew all the places that are mentioned here in his own State. I do not think he ever heard of Contentnia Creek. I do not think he ever heard of Lillington River.

Mr. RANSOM. One of the first battles of the Revolution was fought on Lillington River—a most distinguished battle.

Mr. THURMAN. Upon my word, then, it was a very great mistake in all the people who wrote the history of the war of the Revolution that they never mentioned the river. It must have gone by some other name in those days.

Mr. RANSOM. No; it went by that name.

Mr. THURMAN. I must say it is the first I have ever heard of it.

Mr. RANSOM. The river was named after General Lillington, of the Revolution, one of the most distinguished men in the South in the Revolution.

Mr. THURMAN. Here is another place: "Improving Town Creek, in North Carolina, $1,000." I do not know what town it is that gives its name to this creek.

Mr. RANSOM. It was one of the earliest settlements in this country. When I spoke of the Senator's innocence of geography I had no idea that I should have to say something presently about his innocence of history. One of the very first settlements of the English people on this continent was on Town Creek.

Mr. THURMAN. And it has got along without an appropriation until my honorable friend got to be chairman of the Committee on Commerce, when, groping around in the far-distant annals of North Carolina, in the time past when some few white men settled there among the Indians, he has found that there is a place called Town Creek, and so he gives it $1,000, not because it needs it for navigation, but because of the historical connection of that place.

Mr. RANSOM. If my friend had looked at the report of the engineers on Town Creek he would have seen that this improvement is a proper and necessary one.

Mr. THURMAN. I should like to know what $1,000 can do to improve the town or creek.

Mr. RANSOM. In fact it should have been $10,000 or $20,000, but with a modesty for which North Carolina is proverbial I only ask for $1,000.

Mr. THURMAN. That is all true, but we have been voting ever since I have been in the Senate, year after year, to improve the French Broad in North Carolina so that catfish could navigate it, and I suppose we shall go on to the end of time, as long at least as there are catfish in the stream.

But, Mr. President, I do not want to take up the time of the Senate with this matter. I only want to appeal to my friend that while he is just and very generous to his own State he shall have a little favor to others.

Mr. RANSOM. I have one other amendment, to come in after line 765 of section 1:

Improving Missouri River at Plattsmouth, Nebraska, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to,

Mr. LOGAN. I desire to offer an amendment to section 1, line 184. My amendment is to strike out the word "twenty" and insert "forty;" so as to read:

Improving harbor at Calumet, Illinois, $40,000.

Mr. RANSOM. I am compelled, by instructions from the committee which I represent on this floor—I dislike very much to do it though to my friend from Illinois—to move to lay the amendment on the table. I will not submit the motion until he says what he has to say.

Mr. LOGAN. That is very generous to me. I desire to call the attention of the Senate to the recommendation of the engineers to this harbor, which is a harbor of safety, and a very important one too, some two miles on the lake below Chicago, where there are several large manufacturing establishments, and where vessels are taken for refuge. This harbor of Calumet has had appropriations for several years, and the engineer says now that $50,000 will complete it, will dredge it to the depth of fifteen feet, and extend the piers so as to complete the harbor. That is the recommendation of the engineer in charge for this year. The committee have given us the sum of $20,000.

I will say, for the benefit of the chairman of the committee, that taking all the appropriations for the harbor at Chicago, for Calumet Harbor, and for harbors on the lake in the vicinity of Chicago, where certainly very nearly as much commerce floats as does up the rivers of North Carolina, where $170,000 is appropriated, we have a reduction of the estimates of over one-half of every appropriation which is made for these harbors. Where the engineers recommend for the harbor of Calumet $50,000 the committee give us $20,000.

I do not wish to take the time of the Senate by reading to any extent, but I will call attention to one paragraph in the Engineer's Report:

Calumet Harbor, Illinois.—The present project for the improvement of this harbor was adopted to comply with the requirements of the act of July 11, 1870, the object being to construct a harbor of refuge and afford a channel of entrance to the Calumet River three hundred feet wide, and not less than fifteen feet deep. Before improvement the general depth of the river, after passing the bar at its mouth, was thirteen feet, the natural channel over the bar being narrow and shifting, with a varying depth of from four to seven feet. The amount expended to June 30, 1880, is $276,291.84, and has resulted in securing a navigable channel with a depth of not less than twelve and one half feet.

The appropriation of $50,000 asked for will complete the present project, and will be applied to deepening the channel to the depth of fifteen feet, and extending the piers for its protection to deep water.

That is the estimate made by the engineer, with the reason for it, and that amount of money will deepen and extend the piers so as to protect the harbor, and that harbor has been having important work done on it ever since 1870, and that amount, after expending two hundred thousand dollars and odd, is all that is required. The committee give us $20,000.

I hope, if this bill is to pass at all—and I have nothing to say on that point now—that the harbors that are in a condition nearing completion will at least receive the amounts of money which are necessary to aid in their completion. If this was merely the first appropriation for this harbor I would not insist upon it; but inasmuch as the engineers report that $50,000 will complete it, and as I only ask an additional $20,000 to what the committee report, I hope it will be granted, so that this harbor may be completed during this year, for it is very important to trade and commerce as a harbor of refuge, and it is considered of great importance by the engineers in charge of Chicago Harbor and of this harbor.

Mr. RANSOM. I ask that the amendment be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 184, of section 1, it is proposed to strike out "twenty" and insert "forty," so as to read:

Improving harbor at Calumet, Illinois, $40,000.

Mr. RANSOM. I ask the Senator from Illinois if he will add to his amendment "for the completion of the work?" The Senator from Illinois misunderstood me in the remark I made. I meant to give notice that it would be my duty to move to lay amendments generally on the table. I am very glad that I have heard what the Senator from Illinois had to say about this item, for it is due to the committee to say that as a very general rule where a sum of money which was at all reasonable would suffice to complete the work it has been the theory and policy of action of the committee to appropriate the amount necessary to complete the work.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I sincerely hope that the Senator from North Carolina will withdraw his motion to lay on the table.

Mr. RANSOM. I have not made that motion.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I thought the Senator had. This work is of very great importance to the city of Chicago. My colleague has well said that it is a harbor of refuge and the best harbor that there is in the vicinity of Chicago for that purpose. I do not know whether $40,000 will finish it or not, but it is the purpose of the Government to finish it if possible with that sum of money.

Mr. RANSOM. I feel satisfied that if the attention of the committee had been called particularly to the condition of this harbor, the committee would have reported this amendment, and therefore I will make no objection to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. GARLAND in the chair.) The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Illinois, [Mr. LOGAN.]

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I move to amend on page 31, line 726, of section 1, by striking out "ten" and inserting "twenty-five;" so as to make the item read:

Improving Quincy Bay, Illinois, $25,000.

I think I am in order because the amendment was sent to the Committee on Commerce. Quincy is one of the important places between Saint Paul and Saint Louis. In my opinion it is the best harbor between the two cities. There is a land-locked harbor at that place, and it is a harbor of safety and of refuge both. It seems to me that a ten-thousand-dollar appropriation is too small, especially when the engineers have recommended $50,000, as I understand.

My colleague in the House, General SINGLETON, who represents Quincy, told me—I have not myself examined it to see whether it is so—that the engineer in charge recommended $50,000. The sand-bar has accumulated at the mouth of the harbor, and it will take more than $10,000 to remove it and make the harbor what it was designed to be, one of the very best on the Mississippi River from Saint Paul to New Orleans. I cannot see any reason in the world why so many increases have been made in this bill and this harbor has been neglected altogether.

The argument that so much has been appropriated to the State of Illinois has nothing to do with the question. The Mississippi is a great navigable stream; everybody is concerned in it, and not the State of Illinois alone. This appropriation is needed for that harbor. We do not ask the $50,000 but we do ask $25,000. The engineers say:

Amount that can be profitably expended in fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, $50,000.

I am much obliged to my colleague for calling my attention to this and handing me the report. Here is what the officer in charge says:

The appropriation of $50,000 asked for is to be applied in continuing dredging in Quincy Bay, and in building brush and stone dams and shore protections with a view to carrying out the existing project.

The engineers have a project in reference to the improvement there and they ask for $50,000 to make that improvement. We have but $10,000 in the bill. It will not carry out the work; it will be money wasted. Twenty-five thousand dollars is what we have asked for, which is half the estimate, and it seems to me Congress ought to grant it.

Mr. RANSOM. Before the colleague of the Senator from Illinois offered his first amendment I stated that it would be my duty, acting for the Committee on Commerce, to move to lay amendments hereafter upon the table. I heard the Senator [Mr. LOGAN] because I had said I would. I beg leave now to say that the amendment suggested by the Senator from Illinois on my left [Mr. DAVIS] was considered by the committee, well considered, and we could not report it. I am obliged to move to lay the amendment on the table.

Mr. LOGAN. I hope the Senator will not move to lay the amendment on the table. Let the Senate take a vote upon it. It is an important matter; it is important to our constituents.

Mr. RANSOM. I feel obliged to insist on the motion. If I yield to the Senators from Illinois, I must yield to every Senator on the floor; and the time has come when in the discharge of my duty I must insist on the motion I indicated, however unpleasant the duty may be. I move to lay the amendment on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina moves to lay the amendment on the table.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 27, nays 20; as follows:

So the motion was agreed to.

Mr. SLATER. I ask that a verbal amendment be made in line 811 of section 1. After the word "Harbor" I move to insert "Oregon," so as to read:

Continuing improvement at the entrance of Coos Bay Harbor, Oregon, $30,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That amendment will be made if there is no objection.

Mr. RANSOM. No objection.

Mr. SLATER. Now, I move to strike out "forty-five" in line 818 of section 1, and insert "seventy;" so as to read:

Improving Lower Willamette and Columbia Rivers from Portland, Oregon, to the sea, including bar at mouth of Columbia River, Oregon, $70,000.

Mr. President, this improvement is one of the most important included in the bill for which appropriations are made. Within the eleven months ending the 31st of last May the foreign exports from that river were $6,000,000, and the coastwise and foreign trade together during the same period was $15,000,000. The Department recommended $150,000 for this work, of which the committee gives us only $45,000. I now ask that it be increased to $70,000, which is not above the average for appropriations of this character, as prorated on the recommendations of the Department. It seems to me that if national works ought to be taken into consideration, this is one which should be considered. I hope the committee will not move to lay this amendment on the table; but if that motion is made I hope the Senate will vote down the motion.

Mr. THURMAN. Mr. President, this bill proposes a very large expenditure of money. I do not know that I should object to it if the objects of that expenditure were such as in my judgment they ought to be. If the appropriations to improve insignificant streams, if the spreading out of this money over a vast number of objects until it becomes so thin that it benefits none of them, were abandoned, and the money were appropriated to the improvement of some great harbors or channels of commerce, I do not know but that I should cheerfully support the bill. But when a bill is brought in that expends money upon the most insignificant streams in the country, that utterly wastes money in an attempt to improve that which cannot be improved, which nature never meant to be a navigable stream, which nature never meant for a channel of commerce, which human ingenuity cannot convert into a channel of commerce, when money is expended upon such objects as those and those places which ought to be improved like the mouth of the Columbia River are neglected, I for one must say that I will vote against these small and insignificant and useless appropriations and in favor of expending money where it can do some good.

Is there on all the Pacific coast, with the exception of the harbor of San Francisco, any object more worthy of the consideration of Congress than the mouth of the Columbia River? Is there any man familiar with the history of the western coast of this country who does not know that the bar at the mouth of that river has presented one of the greatest and most dangerous obstacles to navigation and commerce that are presented on the whole of that coast? Is there any man who does not know how few are the great ports on the western coast of this continent; and is there any man here having a just and proper view of what ought to be done by Congress on the subject of the rivers and harbors of this country who would not be willing to expend five times the amount that the Senator from Oregon asks shall be expended for the improvement of the entrance into the Columbia River?

Mr. President, I shall vote for his amendment with the greatest pleasure, and I hope that the Senate having in view the real purpose of a river and harbor bill, the real purpose of promoting the commerce of the country, will sustain that amendment by a unanimous vote.

Mr. GROVER. I wish to say, Mr. President, that the Columbia River is the second river in the North American continent. It drains 300,000 square miles of the territory of the United States. It is the only river upon the American continent which will receive a deep sea-going vessel one hundred and twenty miles into the interior. That the Columbia River will do. We ask this small appropriation for the purpose of aiding the great interests concerned in that river.

Mr. RANSOM. Mr. President, the Committee on Commerce of the Senate considered this amendment with all the care that it could. It had every disposition to grant it, as it had to grant hundreds of other amendments increasing appropriations in this bill; but we found that it would be impossible to do it unless we appropriated an amount of money which the country would not bear. It is not improper for me to say to the Senators from Oregon that an amendment considered of more importance to their State than this was put on the bill by the Senate committee, for Coos Bay, though this was important. I am compelled again to move to lay the amendment on the table.

Mr. FARLEY. Mr. President——

Mr. RANSOM. The motion is not debatable. I have moved to lay the amendment on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is not debatable.

Mr. FARLEY. I hope the Senator from North Carolina will withdraw his motion for a moment.

Mr. RANSOM. The Senator from California is a member of the committee. If he asks me to do this, I am obliged to do it, but he ought to be careful how he makes such a request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion is withdrawn.

Mr. FARLEY. I have this to say in reference to the amendment moved by the Senator from Oregon: It is true, as has been stated by the chairman of the committee, that this amendment was considered and rejected by a majority of the committee; but I found on an examination of this whole question that the people of the Pacific coast are in favor of this appropriation, and more, if necessary, for this particular object. The Chamber of Commerce of the city of San Francisco has indirectly instructed me as to my action upon this matter. It is a matter in which the entire Pacific coast is interested, and the entire country to a very great extent. I have no disposition to go against the committee's report, but my position as a representative of that coast will compel me to vote against the report of the committee on this point. I simply make this explanation so that the vote I shall give in reference to this matter may be understood.

Mr. RANSOM. I appreciate and comprehend fully the reasons and motives that control the Senator from California; but they did not affect the judgment of the committee, and I hope they will not affect the judgment of the Senate. I renew the motion to lay the amendment on the table.

Mr. MORGAN called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 20, nays 25; as follows:

YEAS—20.

Anthony,	Cameron of Pa.,	Hill of Colorado,	Plumb,
Baldwin,	Cameron of Wis.,	Jonas,	Pugh,

Eaton,	Jones of Nevada,	Sharon,

So the motion was not agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Oregon, [Mr. SLATER.]

Mr. SAULSBURY. I dislike very much to differ with the committee, but having some knowledge of the character of the mouth of the Columbia River and the importance of that river to the general commerce of the country, I feel bound to say that the amendment offered by the Senator from Oregon is in my judgment a very proper amendment. Some three years ago I had the opportunity of being on the Pacific coast and seeing this river for myself. There is a very large amount of commerce on the Columbia River. While I was in Portland I found that in a brief space of time there had been seventy-two ships loaded at Portland with wheat for foreign markets, and all but nine were foreign bottoms, and yet the navigation of the mouth of that river was considered so dangerous and so uncertain in rough weather that many shipmasters determined not to attempt to enter the mouth of that river, and passed on one hundred miles further and landed their cargoes there, whence they came across Washington Territory to Oregon.

I am satisfied that there is great necessity for the improvement of the mouth of that river to the commerce that goes out of that great Columbia River. It is not only necessary for the commerce, but for the safety of the people that enter the mouth of that river going up the Columbia River from the ocean. I therefore am compelled to differ with the judgment of the committee and to vote for the appropriation moved by my friend, the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. KERNAN. This bill, as I am informed, appropriates now about eleven and a half million dollars, and yet I shall vote for this amendment to increase the amount for this particular improvement from forty to seventy thousand dollars. I think that the mouth of the Columbia River is an object which is properly to be taken care of by the Federal Government. It accommodates an immense amount of coastwise trade; it deals with foreign commerce largely, and, although I think this bill appropriates too much money in all, I do not think it appropriates too much money for the rivers and harbors that are properly within the jurisdiction of the United States. I think we should reduce the aggregate by striking out appropriations for what the Senator from Ohio justly said were mere inland streams, over which the United States and its courts have not maritime jurisdiction. Maritime jurisdiction does not reach these inland streams that are cleared out merely to float logs or things of that sort. I think the rule is that all that are merely local should be taken care of by the proper State; what is really national should be taken care of by the Federal Government. Here, however, you appropriate nothing for the real harbors of the country; nothing for the rivers which are of advantage to commerce. The Senator from Oregon says that here is a river up which sea-going vessels can go two hundred miles.

If we cannot appropriate on a proper scale for such works except by giving shares to other States simply on the ground that they must have a share of the appropriation, then this whole subject will have to be dealt with in a different way.

I shall vote to increase this item and I shall vote against the bill as it now stands. I should be faithless to my convictions of what is right, I should be inviting a distribution of money among the States on the theory of this river and harbor appropriation bill if I did not vote against it. Here I find eleven and a half million dollars appropriated, and a large amount of it for objects which I cannot think are proper objects to be cared for out of the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. HEREFORD. The Senator from New York will allow me. Why does not the Senator move to strike out some item of that kind for his own State?

Mr. KERNAN. I answer with the greatest pleasure, if my friend will point out an item for my State which is not for the commerce of the great lakes or the commerce of the ocean, I will vote with him to strike it out. Look them over, and I find no appropriations for any rivers in New York except rivers like the Hudson, where the tide ebbs and flows, and the appropriation does not reach above where the United States have a custom-house, at Albany. The Mohawk is a great stream compared with some that are in this bill; the Oswego River is a great stream compared with some in this bill; but the Mohawk and the Oswego are cared for by the State by its canals and by its improvements. The other appropriations are for the great harbor of New York, the East River, Long Island Sound, where sea-going vessels go in and out. Those are cared for, not for New York, but for the United States, who collected in that harbor $134,000,000 of duties on imports during the past year. Then there are a few little appropriations made for harbors on Lake Ontario. Why are they there? Because vessels load at Chicago, come down through the Welland Canal, and these harbors are where railroads come in and where vessels land their cargoes and where lake vessels take refuge in time of danger and storm. If there is one of them that any Senator will show does not come within the very purpose of protecting Federal national commerce, then I will vote to strike it out, because I know that local improvements are done cheaper and are done better by the States than when they are paid for out of the Federal Treasury.

But the system of bills of this kind seems to be "you must give my State some or I will not give yours any." New York has instructed, by her example in the past, her representatives to adhere to the old doctrine that the Federal Government should appropriate money only for Federal purposes, and that local purposes and local objects should be cared for by the State. Now, although this bill is loaded down with what I think are improper appropriations, I shall nevertheless vote for this amendment to increase the item for the mouth of the Columbia River; and, if I can get an opportunity, I will vote to strike out those items which I think do not come within the true province of the National Government to take care of, and thus reduce the appropriations, not giving good and bad a share, and refusing to give money that is needed for a national purpose because we have given much for objects which do not belong to the proper province of the Federal Government.

Mr. HEREFORD. It is very evident now that it is the object to load this bill down so as to kill it. There is no use in our deceiving ourselves on this subject. The Senator from New York talks about voting for streams that enter into the great lakes or enter the great harbors; he says those are the works he is going to vote for, and nothing else.

Mr. KERNAN. I spoke against giving money to streams that run into the lakes. I would vote against giving it to the Oswego River, that runs into Lake Ontario, where there is a great harbor and a great national commerce. I spoke of the harbors on the lakes for the care of shipping, the unloading of it, and the protecting of it. Those lakes are inland seas, where the maritime jurisdiction extends.

Mr. HEREFORD. And so it has been held by the Supreme Court time and again—I read the authority here last session in the presence of the Senate—that any stream in the United States that was susceptible of being made navigable was a national highway, and no one knows it better than the Senator from New York. The doctrine which he invokes here to-day is the doctrine that obtained in England, where they have scarcely a river more than a hundred miles long. He talks about improving the commerce that is to go into the great lakes and into the great harbors. Has the Senator from New York yet learned the fact that the mighty West has rivers that carry more commerce upon their bosoms than all the foreign commerce of the nation? The Ohio River alone, as is shown by the report made to us, carries upon its bosom more tonnage than all the foreign commerce that enters the harbors of New York and Boston and New Orleans and all the others combined. The Ohio is simply one of the tributaries of that great stream, the Mississippi, for which Calhoun invented an expression, in order to come to the doctrine we are now advocating on this floor, when he called it a great inland sea. That carries upon its bosom also infinitely more commerce than all your harbors in the United States together. Are you going to stop the improvement of the Mississippi River? Would the Senator appropriate for improvements for the Mississippi River and deny money to improving the tributaries of the Mississippi River? Then of what use would the Mississippi itself be? The doctrine contended for by the Senator to-day, as applied to these small streams, as he terms them, would stop their improvement, and the effect would be the same upon the Mississippi River as if you were to stop the flowing of the water into the Mississippi itself from the tributaries which make up that Father of Waters.

The people in the interior, in the West, have a right to an outlet for their wheat, their corn, and all their other vast products. They ask that the streams shall be improved so that they may get them to market and not have to pay the exorbitant prices that are fastened upon them by the great railroad monopolies of the country. It is the various small streams and streamlets that make up the mighty rivers, and the people upon these interior rivers have as much right to have cheap transportation as the people living around the harbor of New York or Boston or New Orleans or Galveston or anywhere else. They form an integral part of this great country of ours, and their commerce goes to make up the mighty internal commerce which we have in the United States.

I am accustomed to this talk about making appropriations for national works. I shall not take the time of the Senate to read—I read them last session—decision after decision made by the Supreme Court of the United States that all these streams, small as they may be, if they do not lie entirely within one State, come within the national jurisdiction, and that the Congress of the United States has the constitutional right and power to make appropriations for them. Where is the river named in this bill that lies wholly within one State? Can the Senator from New York point me to one such river, unless it empties into a lake or into a harbor? Will he point me to one river in the United States that is confined to only one State? These various small streams connect with other streams, and those with the great water highways of the United States. You have no right to say that any one of these streams is not a national one. A stream in West Virginia empties into the Ohio River, the Ohio empties into the Mississippi, and so it goes on down to the Gulf. Where shall you say that any one of these streams shall stop, if that stream enters into another, and that into another? So all the waters in the great interior flow on to the Gulf, and persons living on the Gulf have the right to come up with their boats of various kinds and go far into the interior, and those living in the interior have the right to go down to the Gulf by reason of these smaller channels until they get into the Father of Waters, and thence to the Gulf, and they—one and all, small though they be—are entitled to the consideration of the Congress of the United States, and their commerce is entitled to the protection of the United States.

Mr. PLUMB. I move that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on Commerce, with instructions to reduce the amount to be appropriated to $6,000,000, to be used for the improvement of rivers and harbors of national importance, and, so far as practicable, to the completion of improvements now under way, excluding all surveys for new improvements.

Mr. President, I do not desire to detain the Senate on this proposition. It expresses my views, whether it does those of any other member of the body or not. I think it is time we put some limit to these appropriations, not alone because the bill is $10,000,000, although that is a large sum, but because the system of expending the money is absolutely vicious. There is not a suggestion or hint anywhere in this bill that any sum appropriated is to complete any improvement.

Mr. HEREFORD. The Senator from Kansas is very much mistaken. If he will allow me to say so, without intending to be offensive—for I cannot be so to the Senator from Kansas—he is utterly mistaken when he says that there is no provision in this bill for the completion of the improvement on any one work. He has not read the bill.

Mr. PLUMB. It takes an exception to prove a rule. There may be exceptions enough to prove the rule I have stated; but I do not know that there are. There may be a half dozen cases where it is said to be to complete the improvement; there is one case I know where it is stated that the amount appropriated is to procure a certain depth of channel; but the fact is I do not believe there is an improvement of that kind in the United States that ever has been started that is not now under way. We put in this money, therefore, with recklessness because we do not expect returns; we throw it into the sand expecting it to be washed out. There is an absolute lack of responsibility, because there is nothing to be responsible for excepting the expenditure of the money. We do not attach any condition to the expenditure of this money, as, for instance, that any particular amount of work shall be done with it, that any improvement shall result from it, but we simply toss it over as we would a bauble to the Engineer Department and say, "Spend it, and then come back next year and ask for as much more as you have the assurance to put in your estimates."

I am in favor of appropriating money and appropriating money liberally for the improvement of rivers and harbors. If this bill were properly constructed according to my notion, I should not object to making the appropriation $20,000,000 in place of $10,000,000. If there was some system of expenditure whereby practical results could be obtained year by year, some improvement made which when made would remain permanent as a result of the expenditure, I should not object to that whatever the amount might be; but when it comes to putting insignificant sums into large improvements, appropriating $10,000 when the estimate of the engineers is that it will take a million to complete the improvement, with no system whereby any kind of responsibility attaches to the expenditure, whereby Congress ever knows or is expected to know whether any result has been attained or not, it looks to me like trifling with the people's money. I am therefore opposed to it.

If some one will show me that the harbor of New York, or of Boston, or of Baltimore, or of Charleston needs a million dollars to make them what they ought to be the entrepôts of the Atlantic shore line of this country, I will readily vote for that amount of money to have that done and finished; and so with reference to the Mississippi River and with reference to any other improvement; but when it comes to putting money into little creeks for push-raft navigation to carry the tar and the turpentine and rosin and cord-wood that is gathered in the eddies along the stream, to clear out the springs that are its source because, as my friend from West Virginia says, it is part of the great Mississippi River, then I respectfully dissent.

Six million dollars upon the plan that we are now operating is abundance of money to spend; but if we could have, as I said, some system whereby, once spent, it should answer a permanent purpose, I would be perfectly willing to make it $20,000,000, and it would not be too much; but this is an extravagance that breeds extravagance. It is simply a basis for further estimates, and since I have been here every river and harbor bill is a little larger than any one has been preceding, and at the ratio they are going on in the short time I expect to be here I have no doubt the amount will be double, and yet there will not be one single harbor in this country or one single improvement on any river that can be said to be finished—not one. They are like the daughters of the horse-leech; it is give, give, give; the more we give the more is asked to be given. I want to protest against it.

In the country in which I live we have streams which are a part of the great Mississippi, according to the theory here advanced; and if money enough can be put into them, if the Government will scoop out the bottom, or if it will jetty the entire streams from one end to the other, you will have not a push-raft navigation, not a navigation to carry turpentine and coon-skins, but a navigation which will carry the agricultural products of a million people, 40,000,000 bushels of wheat, 200,000,000 bushels of corn, and other things in proportion, and that is what cannot be said for three-quarters of the improvements that are appropriated for in this bill. The commerce which is tributary to these streams which in any way floats over them or ever will float over them is absolutely insignificant compared with that of the section of country of which I have spoken, and yet it is so insignificant, I will not say in extent but in the representation upon the committee in power in this body, that it receives no consideration whatever.

Mr. MORGAN. I am not, for one, willing to have a disposition imputed to me to kill the bill by voting for amendments, because I recognize my obligation to exercise some discretion in voting for objects in the bill.

The Senator from Delaware and the Senators from Oregon have spoken of the importance of the Columbia River, and have risen in their places and have stated the most urgent reasons why the appropriation for that work should be increased. The members of the committee, instead of undertaking to answer these facts or to show that they have formed a judgment in reference to that improvement in which they cannot be mistaken, undertake to charge other Senators with a desire to load the bill with a view to its defeat.

If I were going to give advice to the honorable Senators who compose that respected committee, I should say to them that the best way to secure the life of this bill is to unload it so that it may live and the country may live. The people will be in entire harmony and sympathy with them, if they will just assume a bold position and take the high ground stated in the resolution of the Senator from Kansas.

There must be some principle in legislation. There cannot be any proper legislation which is not based upon some principle that we can justify before the world, and there is not a principle running through the whole of this bill that will enable any Senator to rise on this floor and declare that every appropriation in the bill is necessary for the public welfare.

Mr. FARLEY. I should like to ask the Senator from Alabama if there is an appropriation in this bill that has not been estimated for by the engineers or the Department?

Mr. MORGAN. I believe there is not; and yet how easy it is for the engineers of this Government to make for themselves nice little civil employment all over the country by being connected with works of internal improvement. We direct them to make estimates, and they do estimate; and in making their estimates they provide for themselves pleasant places all around in the hills and mountains, where they can live out of the reach of malarial influences, and have the benefit of trout streams, and so on, for their own comfort. I have not a disrespectful word for the engineers; but I see behind their action some very powerful considerations.

Mr. TELLER. I sympathize with what the Senator has said, and I wish to call his attention to the fact that these estimates are made necessary by bills of this character. We instruct the engineers to make estimates; they send them here; and then we fall back behind the estimates and say because they have made them therefore they must be necessary. The third section of this bill requires them to make surveys and estimates of a great number of small streams.

Mr. MORGAN. Of course. I am not blaming the engineers for making the estimates, nor do I blame them for undertaking to provide for themselves comfortable places, and especially comfortable employment out of the field where they might otherwise be sent. I am not finding fault with the engineers. In the main I think they are a very honest and high-minded set of men. But because they have made estimates under our direction to reach works that are not advantageous to the general commerce and welfare of the people of the United States, there is no reason why the Senate should take the money out of the Treasury and make such appropriations.

Mr. BUTLER. May I ask my friend a question?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. BUTLER. I ask if he thinks the engineers of the Army in their estimates would recommend the improvement of streams unless there was some necessity for it in the interest of commerce?

Mr. MORGAN. If the engineers of the Army comprised the Senate they would have the right of final judgment on that question, but they do not.

Mr. BUTLER. The Senator has not answered my question. The engineers have nothing to do with the Senate except to make recommendations. I ask him if in his opinion the engineers of the Army would make recommendations for the improvement of streams which were not in the interest of commerce?

Mr. MORGAN. I think they have done it in many instances, estimated for the improvement of streams that are not in the interest of commerce. A great many, perhaps the majority, of the recommendations they make of that kind are upon streams which are not in the interest of commerce; but because they make their estimates, does that constitute them the judges of the necessity of the case, and are we obliged to follow them merely because we have given them the opportunity or made it their duty to look over certain streams that we designate and make their report upon them? No, sir; we must not abdicate our rights and duties to the country because engineers may be honest and may be able and may be capable when we may differ with them in reference to the general advantage to result from the proposed improvements to the commerce of the country.

I know that this subject has engaged the attention of the ablest men of the United States for a great many years, and there has been a great variety of opinions as to the constitutional boundaries of the authority of Congress in this connection. I do not propose to argue upon that point, but I wish to call the attention of the Senate to an act that was passed on the 18th of May, 1796, in relation to rivers in the public lands of the United States, now by far the largest portion of the area of the territory of the United States. That act, as embodied in section 2476 of the Revised Statutes, is:

> All navigable rivers, within the territory occupied by the public lands, shall remain and be deemed public highways; and, in all cases where the opposite banks of any streams not navigable belong to different persons, the stream and the bed thereof shall become common to both.

There was a declaration of the jurisdiction of the United States over that portion of the property then contained within its borders or since acquired, so far as the right of property is concerned. In 1796 Congress declared that streams which were then navigable should remain public highways. I do not doubt the power of Congress, constitutionally, to improve such public highways; but where they were not navigable the lands on the opposite borders of the stream go to the owners, with a right to the river and to the bed, says the statute, to be divided between them. Here, then, was a grant by Congress of the absolute property in these streams which were not then navigable, so that a man who entered a tract of land in the Land Office of the United States, and his neighbor who entered a tract on the opposite bank of a stream that was not navigable when that act passed, acquired the right, under the language of the statute, to the river and also to the bed of the stream.

We are pushing enterprise on this subject away beyond the line of original navigability of these streams. We are extending it as far as we choose to go, and in extending it we are obliged to intrude upon private property that we have granted under an act of Congress to the owners of the shore. I would like to know how a Senator can justify a vote of that kind until, in compliance with the Constitution, he has first condemned that river and the bed of it to public use? It is as much the private property of these men who occupy its different banks as any gentleman's private property about his house is his—granted to him by an act of Congress—an irrevocable grant, which no lawyer can dispute. We are ascending these streams day after day and year after year with our enterprises of improvement and deepening the river and the bed that we granted to the owners of the shore, and improving them for the public benefit without making the slightest allowance to the owners for the condemnation of their property to public use. It seems to make no difference where the constitutional boundary of our authority may be; we are fenced off by an act of Congress which has conferred private rights upon these people that under our Constitution are absolutely inviolable.

I do not know whether this honorable committee have taken into consideration this act or not; but I know that there are many streams now under improvement and many whose improvement is provided for in this bill, that at the time of the passage of the law of 1796 were a part of the public domain of the United States, and have passed by grant of Congress into the hands of private individuals.

But, sir, it seems now that because men claim the right to float their produce on streams that can be made navigable, we are to go to work and empty the Treasury of the United States to make them navigable; and what is the argument for it? They have as much right to float their produce and their commerce down these streams into the Ohio River, into the Mississippi River, as men who live upon the banks of those streams which are navigable; and from that is deduced the duty of Congress to provide transportation over private ways and private property in favor of the communities that are not blessed with the advantages of large streams.

Sir, if we can do that, we may go upon the shore and build turnpikes and macadamized roads and railroads, because the policy justifies the expenditure, and the policy is that the people must be enabled to get their produce to market cheap. Then it is the duty of Congress to provide all the facilities that the people may want for that purpose. There cannot be any answer to the logic of that proposition, it seems to me. Congress ought to put a boundary upon its line of action in this direction, and it is time that we had stopped and considered. The honorable Senator from Kansas, [Mr. PLUMB,] I fear, is too late with his motion. I will vote for it as a declaration of a principle, but that honorable Senator must know as well as the rest of us that these bills always reach our attention at the close of the session and when time enough is not allowed for their consideration; and now the committee come in and say that it is their order that they will move to lay on the table all amendments which increase an appropriation. The committee have not only assumed the right to declare for the country what works shall be improved and what amount of money shall be put upon this, that, and the other work, but they have said that they will put us under the necessity of taking a gag rather than they will let the merits of the subject be discussed, and rather than they will allow a direct vote to be taken upon each appropriation.

Sir, a truer remark was never made than that uttered by the honorable Senator from Kansas when he said that the distribution of money between these different objects of internal improvement was that which most of all was injurious to the country under the provisions of these bills. I regret that I cannot support this bill. I regret that it has not been brought in by the committee to the satisfaction of those members who desire to have the public money appropriated for the general welfare. I have had to encounter opposition here and elsewhere, and oftentimes severe censure, in my efforts to check this extravagant, wasteful, and injurious legislation. Every Senator on this floor knows—none can deny—that these bills are framed by combinations of different interests and different localities in the United States, not upon propositions that relate to their actual merits, but they are framed with reference to bargains that are entered into, so that "I shall get this and you get that." I do not state these facts with a view to censure this committee or the Senators who support this bill; but I state them as matters which have attended the history of this legislation at least for the last twenty years. Not only in Congress, but in State Legislatures, is this evil to be found; but I hope some day to find a committee of this body which will at least be willing to rise and announce a principle which shall control our action in reference to these matters of public expenditure.

These bills ought to be divided into three classes, one relating to harbors, one relating to rivers that connect two or more States or bound two or more States, and one relating to those rivers that are entirely within the territorial area of a particular State. Then we should have a chance to compare each part of each of the bills with its own provisions, and should not be compelled in order that we may have work done which is advantageous to the commerce of the entire country to find ourselves saddled with many appropriations, not one of which commends itself to our judgment or our conscience.

I desired, Mr. President, in this brief manner to define my position, if I could, upon this question, so that those who desire to criticise my conduct may understand the reasons for my action.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I do not intend to enter into any lengthy discussion of this bill, because, as suggested by the Senator from Alabama, I suppose it is a foregone conclusion that this bill is to pass, and to pass substantially in the way that it comes from the committee. Since I have been a member of the Senate I have noticed that these bills pass substantially as they come from the committee, and if the Senate takes the liberty of dealing with the subject by putting in amendments a committee of conference always drops out the amendments.

It is said with an air as though it was an entire answer to every objection made to the bill that Government engineers have recommended these appropriations and that we are to carry out the suggestions made by the officers of the Government in the interest of commerce; and one Senator asks another if he thinks the Government engineers would so far forget their obligations to the Government of the United States as to recommend an appropriation that was not just the thing. Why, Mr. President, in the third section of this bill there are eighty-four different objects for which the engineers of the United States are instructed through the Secretary of War to make an examination and report to the Senate; and that we have been doing every year since I have been a member of the Senate, and I suppose very many years before. They go out under our direction and send us reports saying that a little bayou, a little stream, a little rivulet, a little depression in the country somewhere, that flows into the sea or flows into some other stream can by the expenditure of money be made a navigable stream; and if it can be they come here and tell us about how much money they think can be expended upon that to make it a stream, and how much ought to be spent; and then the Committee on Commerce take that report and look it over; but they are never governed by that; they never make their appropriations in accordance with the recommendations of the engineer. They make them just in accordance with the interest of the various members of the respective committees consulting sufficiently with the interest of the Senate to see that they can manage to secure the adoption of the bill.

Since this bill has been under discussion I have been told by one Senator that the engineer in charge at the city of Charleston has said that $600,000 could be economically used in the completion of the work which the Government has undertaken at that harbor. We find in this bill $175,000 for that work. Why not appropriate $600,000 for that magnificent harbor? Simply because if they did that they must leave out Duck Creek in Delaware, or some other little stream of no importance; or else the bill would be so great that they could not pass it through the Senate.

It is said by the Senator from Alabama that there is no principle upon which this committee goes. I think he is mistaken about that. I think they go upon the principle—and I say it with all due deference to the committee—of securing a majority of the Senate, for unless it is for that purpose it is utterly incomprehensible why they should have inserted some of these streams and made appropriations of $1,500, of $2,500, and sums of that character for engineering operations which it is said by the engineers will cost ten, fifteen, twenty, and in some instances one hundred times what they have appropriated. A man with common, ordinary acquaintance with engineering work, a man who has ever given it any attention at all, knows that it is nonsense to start a work which is estimated to cost $50,000 with an appropriation of $4,000 or $5,000 or even $10,000; it is a waste of money; and yet they come here and put in this river $5,000 and on another river $2,500, and on another $3,500, and on another $1,500, and so on through the bill, until they have run up a sum so vast that the great harbors of the country and the great rivers of the country are left without appropriate and proper appropriations.

Mr. President, I find in this bill that we are entering upon a new system now. It is not enough that we are to dig out rivers where nature has put them, and if there is water use them, but now we are to proceed to build reservoirs, fitted to store the waters at the head of the Mississippi or the tributaries of the Mississippi, and money is appropriated in this bill for the first experiment of that character, and it is provided that we shall condemn the land and pay the damages that the people who own the land suffer in consequence of this appropriation by the Government.

Mr. MORRILL. And to build boats.

Mr. TELLER. And to build boats says the Senator from Vermont. There is an appropriation in several instances for the building of boats. I admit that the building of a snag-boat upon some of these great rivers, and its operation, would be perfectly legitimate, and that it ought to be done, but not upon all these rivers.

Then in this bill there is another feature. There is a million dollars appropriated for the purpose of leveeing the Mississippi River. Do Senators think how much that experiment, now started out, is going to cost?

Mr. McMILLAN. I do not understand that there is any such provision in this bill. It is expressly provided that there shall be no such appropriation.

Mr. TELLER. That appropriation is in the bill.

Mr. McMILLAN. If the Senator will refer to it, I shall be obliged to him.

Mr. TELLER. I do not need to refer to it; the Senator from Minnesota knows it is in the bill; everybody knows it is in the bill unless the Senate committee struck it out and they did not strike out anything, but they put in various things.

Mr. JONAS. Will the Senator——

Mr. McMILLAN. If the Senator will allow me to read him the provision with reference to that——

Mr. TELLER. I decline to be interrupted by a speech.

Mr. McMILLAN. I should like to read the language of the bill if the Senator desires information on the subject. This is the proviso:

Provided, That no portion of the sum hereby appropriated shall be used——

Mr. TELLER. I decline to be interrupted. I know what the Senator is going to read.

Mr. McMILLAN. I thought the Senator wanted to understand the facts in regard to this point.

Mr. TELLER. The bill provides that no portion of the money appropriated for the Mississippi shall be used for the purpose of preventing an overflow, or that is the meaning of the language; but the report of the Mississippi River commission and the reports of the Government engineers made for years past show that this is for the purpose, not of protecting the navigation on that river, and not for the purpose of keeping the water in the channel, but for the purpose of levees. That is the object, and that will be the effect.

In 1875 the Government engineers made an estimate for the commencement of this expenditure. They commenced with Cairo, at the mouth of the Ohio, on the Mississippi, and they went on to state what should be the size of the levees from that down a distance of several hundred miles, how many feet they should be, and all of these levees are forty or fifty feet above low water, and every man familiar with the Mississippi River knows that you do not need any assistance in high water upon that river. These engineers say in their report in 1875 that this expenditure for a portion of the river, and a portion of the river only, will be $50,000,000. Now, it will be many times more than $50,000,000. This effort, if it is carried out, of leveeing the Mississippi River in the pretended interest of commerce, will cost the people of the United States more than a thousand millions of dollars, and it may be said, as the Senator from Minnesota says, that to accomplish that is not in the interest of the property owners on the river, because the bill so alleges; and yet an examination of the report of the Mississippi River commission and the reports of the Government engineers will show that every one of these levees is from thirty to fifty feet above the low water of the river, and that none of them can, in the nature of things, confine the river to a channel that shall give vessels a sufficient amount of water during the low stage of water in that river, and nobody ought to know it better than the Senator from Minnesota, who is a member of this committee.

Mr. President, that is not enough, but the committee have provided in this bill that it shall be the duty of the Government engineers to go around and find where they can make and create more water. They are to examine all the head streams and see where ponds can be built and where dams can be erected for the purpose of increasing the water supply during a portion of the year; and for the Mississippi River we have $2,600,000 appropriated in this bill, a million of it not for the purpose of promoting commerce, but in the interest of the owners of the property on the banks of the great river. I do not object to the appropriation of two millions and a half or three millions and a half on the Mississippi River. It is a great highway from State to State and it carries upon its bosom the great commerce of the Northwest; but I do object to millions of money being expended in an effort that will not increase its capacity for commerce, but will eventually compel the people of the United States because of this great expenditure to abandon all efforts to protect the commerce on this great river, and the friends of the commerce of that river ought to be the last men to come here and propose such a wild and extravagant scheme as is contained in this bill, and is supported by this Mississippi River commission, not as they say, and they do not pretend to say, in the interest of commerce, but for the purpose of confining the waters of that river.

Mr. President, I went to the Library and I got a map, but I find in this bill stream after stream appropriated for which are upon no map in existence in this country. I am free to admit that there is no good hydrographic map of the United States; but it will be a remarkably good map, better than ever was made in any country that I know of, that shall be able to enumerate all of these little rivulets and streams by name. Appropriations are made for streams in this bill that the committee knew the engineers could not find if they did not provide in the bill that they were water-courses between certain named villages and cities and towns; and yet we are told if we attack this bill that we are not in favor of protecting the commerce of the country!

I think, Mr. President, that it is safe to say that more than half of this bill, now aggregating $11,600,000, is for streams the appropriation for which has no warrant under the Constitution. One-half these appropriations Congress has no right to make unless we adopt the theory that we may appropriate for any purpose if we will only label the appropriation as in the interest of commerce. Take the State of West Virginia. We heard one honorable Senator state, who is a member of the Committee on Commerce, that these rivers reached away out, and they had mouths that ran into some other river that reached to the sea. Now, take the Elk River and take the Little Kanawha River, and we find that there is an incorporated company which has fixed itself on the mouth of the latter river, and every vessel that goes up the river pays toll to it, and the committee come here and they guard the appropriation, as they guard the Mississippi levee matter, by saying that a vessel that goes up that river shall not pay any toll on that part of the river above the dam, above the locks, above the toll-gate, where the Government of the United States applies its money; but to get into the river, to get into its mouth, to get the advantage of the Government benefaction and beneficence that we are putting out in this bill, it must pay to that corporation a toll. Thus the Government is making a highway of that kind for the benefit of a corporation, and that is not the only one.

The Monongahela River is another. The Monongahela River has also a corporation that has fixed itself on the mouth of the river, and there they sit down and tax the commerce that comes into the river, and the Government of the United States makes the river above and then they get out of it in the same way by saying, "You need not pay for the use of that portion of the river that the Government is at work upon." Why, Mr. President, there are rivers here that every man who has traveled through the country knows can never be made navigable. You may put millions and millions upon the Allegheny, the Monongahela, the Little Kanawha, the Elk River, and other rivers of that character, and they never can be made navigable.

Since I have been in the Senate West Virginia has taken from the Treasury, I think, a million dollars for its rivers, and not one of them falls within the purview of the law which authorizes us to vote money to rivers, to clean them out, and to make them navigable—not a single stream in the State, in my judgment. I do not object to West Virginia having something; if the other States are to have it, then let West Virginia come in. I find in old Virginia the same thing; I find in North Carolina the same thing; I find the same thing all over the country where a stream is big enough, where they can find an engineer who has hope enough in his constitution to believe that the great Government of the United States, if it will only put itself to work at it, will be able to put in the money. Why, Mr. President, the Fox and Wisconsin Rivers are in here with $200,000. We have spent upon them, I have not any doubt, $5,000,000, and if the improvement was put up and sold to a corporation and it allowed to take toll, I doubt whether it would bring $500 in the market. It is a waste of money and it is a waste of opportunities, because the same money could be taken and put upon some streams and upon some harbors and they be thereby made available.

I will not object, as the Senator from Kansas said he would not, to $10,000,000 or $20,000,000 if you expended your money in the interest of commerce. I have never objected to the great expenditure of money at the mouth of the Mississippi River, and I am ready to vote for more in that direction. I should vote to take out the falls of the Ohio River; I should vote for canals around impassable falls in rivers of that character; but I object to voting for these little streams in Maryland, in South Carolina, in North Carolina, in Virginia, in New York, and in other sections of the country. I think it is a misapplication of Government money. I would vote money for the harbor of Charleston. If it was required by the engineers, I would vote $1,000,000 in a single year if it would answer the purpose for which it was to be expended, to complete that harbor. I have said before—and I say it with some knowledge, for in my early life I gave some attention to the question of engineering, and I know something about it—that it is a fundamental mistake we make in making these appropriations that we go on by piecemeal. I say we ought to look at the big rivers and say, "Here now is a stream; how much will it take," and appropriate just as much every year as can be used for that stream economically and properly; and not appropriate for the other streams if you are not able until you have accomplished that work, and then take up works of the next importance and carry them forward to completion. We do not do that. We fritter away the money in fruitless efforts to make a stream navigable with an amount of money that is not at all suitable.

Mr. President, I have said this much against this bill. I have said it without the slightest idea that it will cause a single vote in the Senate to be changed. I know that Senators come here anxious to secure something for their States. I know how difficult it is for them to escape. When the State of West Virginia gets $350,000, the Senators from Virginia cannot well sit by and not get something for their State. The States of South Carolina and Georgia get something, and then North Carolina must have something also for similar purposes. But when the great river of the West that floats more commerce than a hundred of these little streams asks an increase of appropriations, asks as much money to open its mouth as you waste every year on the Fox and Wisconsin Rivers, then the committee with the power that we have given committees (which I repeat as I have before said is used frequently to the abuse of legislation) stand up and call their friends to the rescue, and they say to the friends of the bill "Vote to lay the amendment on the table," and the friends of the bill, having got everything in that they think they need, are afraid to vote it down, and without any reference to the merits of the case the amendment goes upon the table. Thus the commerce of the country is suffering that a few small, insignificant streams may have the expenditure put upon them, and come out no better when they get through than they were before.

I will venture the assertion that there is not a respectable engineer in the United States who will stand up and declare that there is a river which is navigable in the United States that can be permanently benefited by the expenditure of $2,500, and yet you have given as low in this bill as $1,500 on some of them, unless it may be as I am told that some of this money is used to cut down the overhanging limbs that hang down on the water of some of these streams. In that way you might possibly get a little benefit that would last for a year or two until the limbs grew out again.

Mr. President, if this bill is to pass, I am for putting to it just as much as is necessary for the commerce of the country or to satisfactorily do the business of these great rivers. If this bill is to pass, I would rather it should pass with a million more, if that million is to be used for a proper and suitable purpose. I am in favor of $70,000 for the mouth of the Columbia River. I have taken some interest in it. I have been upon its headwaters, and I know it is not for the State of Oregon alone. Upon the head of that river are great communities, new States growing up, Idaho and Montana, and other regions of country are benefited as well as Oregon. I would rather expend enough on the mouth of that river to make it a good enterprise; that is to say, I would not put ten, fifteen, or twenty thousand there, but I would put $150,000 if $150,000 would make it a permanent waterway and enable the great vessels of the coast and the vessels that trade with foreign countries to go upon that river.

The honorable Senator from Oregon said to us that $6,000,000 of exports went out of this river's mouth last year. I can pick one hundred items out of this bill where $6,000 of exports never went out, in my judgment, in a single year. The other day somebody told me that in one of these great engineering feats, that doubled the water in a river down here, it was twice as deep as it was the year before, and I asked, "How deep is it?" He said, "Last year it was a foot; this year it is two feet;" and that is about the way it is. A little while ago the committee reported an amendment for the harbor of Wilmington, on a river in North Carolina, and my honorable friend, the chairman of the committee, said that it was a very proper and worthy object; and I looked over the report of the engineers and I came to the conclusion myself that it was a worthy object.

The engineer said it was a proper expenditure of money, and he could get eighteen or twenty feet of water. How much did he want? He says for twelve feet of water you want $200,000 this year, and for fourteen feet you want $400,000, and for eighteen feet you want $700,000, and for twenty feet you want $1,000,000. If you want that, you want it now. You do not want part of it this year and part of it the next. It belongs to that class of streams where an expenditure made in detail, in piecemeal, a little now and a little next year, will do no good. I presume the $100,000, or whatever it is that is added to the sum already put in by the House, may be available and may help it some; but if the chairman of the committee had sat down and said, "Here are the little streams in this State that ought not to be in;" and if he had stricken those out, and then had put the whole upon some port upon his coast, nobody would object; but I suppose the trouble would be when it went back to the House every member who lived in the districts where these streams are supposed to be would find fault with the bill, and probably would rather see it fail than become a law.

When I rose I did not intend to speak upon this bill at any length. I meant simply to enter my protest against the bill, and to give my reasons why it ought not to pass, and why in my judgment, anxious as I am that the great national harbors and great national rivers should be taken care of by proper appropriations, I believe it is better that we should sit down upon these things and beat this bill, and let them go another year, than that we should adopt a principle that is so pernicious and that is reaching so far.

A few years ago $5,000,000 was considered an outrageous sum for a river and harbor bill. To-day it is twice that and more, and by next year it will be more and more, until by and by the people who pay the taxes will declare that they do not intend to vote any more money at all, and men will come here instructed to vote against a river and harbor bill, and then the great river that my friend from Minnesota is so anxious about and the great harbors upon the sea-coast will be left without the appropriations that they ought to have in justice to the whole people of the country.

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. President, it is not my purpose to enter upon a general defense of the river and harbor bill. If any such defense is necessary, I shall leave that to the chairman of the committee, but some remarks have been made by Senators which I deem it proper to refer to briefly.

The Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] has said that under an act of Congress passed in 1796 the land upon the banks of the streams of this country which were not at that time navigable streams are the private property of the owners of the soil. I suppose that the Senator from Alabama has paid some attention to the decisions of the Supreme Court of this country, and if he has he will know that the owner of land upon the bands of the navigable streams of this country according to the last utterance of the Supreme Court do not take to the center thread of the stream. It is true the decisions of the Supreme Court are not uniform upon that subject; but the last decision of the Supreme Court settles that question adversely to the doctrine uttered by the Senator from Alabama upon the floor of the Senate.

With reference to the admiralty jurisdiction of the United States over the navigable streams of this country, the same high tribunal has determined that the Government of the United States has exclusive admiralty jurisdiction over any stream that is navigable to any extent, so that the several States of this Union can pass no law affecting the rights of their citizens in regard to steamboats navigating these streams. No attachments can be issued by a State court; all these claims must be enforced through the Federal tribunals, and the jurisdiction of the United States courts, as I have said, is exclusive. Then, with reference to the character of the appropriations made in this bill, it comes to us from the House of Representatives, and we are to act upon it as it is presented to us. At the first session of this Congress the Senate and the House of Representatives passed an act of Congress organizing a commission to examine the Mississippi River and make a report in regard to that stream. That board of commissioners have made a report. They have recommended certain appropriations. Among these appropriations is $1,000,000 for the Mississippi River from Cairo to the Gulf of Mexico, and that item of $1,000,000 is altogether independent of the ordinary improvements upon the river to that extent.

Mr. TELLER. I would ask the Senator if he has not made a mistake in saying that it is to the Gulf of Mexico.

Mr. McMILLAN. It is limited.

Mr. TELLER. The million-dollar appropriation is limited to one hundred and eighty miles.

Mr. McMILLAN. No——

Mr. TELLER. If you follow the suggestion of the commission, the commission say that you want $5,000,000 and over this year.

Mr. McMILLAN. However, the appropriation of $1,000,000 is made and is incorporated in this bill, and that is an item which has never before been embraced in a river and harbor bill. That accounts in part for the large amount of this bill. It is not an increase of the ordinary appropriations for the streams in the country. The Senators who voted for the law providing for that commission, of which I was not one, accept their report, and it is in this bill. It is the item to which the Senator from Colorado refers as embracing an appropriation for the construction of levees; and as he would not hear me read the proviso in the appropriation I will now take occasion to read the proviso qualifying the uses for which the appropriation is made:

Provided, That no portion of the sum hereby appropriated shall be used in the repair or construction of levees for the purpose of preventing injury to lands by overflow, or for any other purpose whatever except as a means of deepening or improving the channel of said river. And it shall be the duty of said commission to make report, on or before the 1st day of January next, to the Secretary of War, for transmission by him to Congress, of a detailed statement of the work done, and of the expenditure made from the sum hereby appropriated, with their judgment upon the effect of such work, and the general practicability and estimate of the total cost of such improvements along said river from Cairo to the head of the passes.

Expressly excluding the application of this money to the purposes for which the Senator from Colorado said it could be used, as I understood his remarks on the floor of the Senate.

Then with reference to the reservoirs upon the Mississippi, that is an item in the bill as it came to us from the House. So far as appropriations relating to the State of Minnesota—which I have the honor in part to represent upon this floor—are concerned, no remarks which have been made criticising the character of the appropriations can apply to my State. They are all embraced in harbors upon Lake Superior, one of the great bodies of the country, upon the Mississippi River, and upon the Red River of the North, not only an interstate system but an international system flowing from our own State along its border into the British possessions. I may therefore speak I think without prejudice in regard to these questions. This system of reservoirs has been the subject of examination by successive engineers for the last twenty years, if I recollect the time correctly. Able, eminent engineers have passed upon that question, have examined it accurately, have spread their reports in detail before the country, and they command the approbation of the best judgment in this country that if this improvement is made the navigation of the Mississippi River down to about Dubuque will be greatly improved. These are the items that have been criticised here.

Then with reference to the fact that these appropriations are all based upon estimates from engineers of the Army of the United States made to Congress, these streams have been examined by these officers; they have reported carefully to Congress, and the appropriations are all based upon their reports. I take it, under these circumstances it cannot be complained of the committee that we have acted upon representations from officers of this character. So far as I am concerned I am willing to rest my judgment upon their reports. If they are not to be followed then they should not be made; but with all the appropriations that are contained in this bill I find none that do not come within the class of appropriations recommended by the engineers of the country.

Mr. TELLER. I want to call the attention of the Senator from Minnesota to the fact that he was slightly mistaken in stating that $1,000,000 was recommended by the commission from Cairo to the mouth of the river.

Mr. McMILLAN. To the Passes.

Mr. TELLER. If the Senator will look at the report of the commission he will find that the New Madrid reach, six hundred and forty miles long, was said to require $923,000; Plum Point reach, thirty-eight miles, $736,000; the Memphis reach, sixteen miles, $382,000, and so on, so that there is $4,113,000 there. Then, for closing gaps in levees $1,000,000 more, and this does not include the harbor at New Orleans and the harbors at Memphis and various other places, and has nothing in the world to do with the mouth of the river.

Mr. McMILLAN. Here is the appropriation; the Senator can see it.

Mr. TELLER. It makes no difference what the appropriation is; the Senator said they had appropriated what this commission declared was necessary. They have entered upon this work of carrying out the order of the commission, and the commission demand to start with $5,000,000 right off; and yet the committee only give them $1,000,000. If we are to go into it at all we might as well give them the $5,000,000.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, I have no doubt that there are some appropriations in this bill that ought not to be made. You will probably never pass one without some such appropriations, but in so far as the general objects of the bill are concerned I cordially approve of them. Senators say we have reached a point where we propose to appropriate say $10,000,000 for these objects, and that appropriation is too large. Fifty years ago when $1,000,000 was appropriated it was not regarded very large, and yet it was infinitely larger than $10,000,000 or even $20,000,000 are now. The old democratic doctrine I am aware was that we were to oppose internal improvements by the General Government, and yet such appropriations were made, I believe, at almost every session of Congress; and it is not now worth while to discuss that doctrine, whether it was right or wrong. A different practice has obtained for half a century and now prevails, and will continue to prevail. The future welfare of the country requires it. The future prosperity of the country demands it; and the people will require it of their representatives.

Fifty years ago there was not $1,000,000 a year invested in the construction of railroads. This year there will probably be more than $50,000,000 invested in building railroads in the United States. We will expend this year in the repairs, in additions to the equipments, and in the operating expense of railroads nearly four hundred million dollars. We have not quite ninety thousand miles of railroads. We have in the United States over thirty thousand miles of navigable streams, one-third as great a distance in length as the whole railroad system of the United States. Yes, we have 30,000 miles of great natural highways already built, that only need repairs to make them of immense value to the whole people of this great country.

The people pay annually nearly four hundred million dollars for the repair, improvement, and operation of railroads. In other words, they pay this enormous sum for railroad transportation, which carries their productions to the market, and brings back to them in turn the productions or manufactures of other countries or places which they require for their use or comfort. This looks like an immense sum, and so it is, to pay to the railroad corporations of this country. But we must recollect what they do in return for it. Let it be borne in mind that nearly all the merchandise of this country, of every character, is moved by railroad transportation.

In 1880 our exports to foreign countries alone amounted to $835,638,658, and our imports from foreign countries amounted to $667,954,746. Add the two together and you have an aggregate of $1,503,593,404 worth of exports and imports handled during the last year almost entirely by the railroad companies of this country. Let it be borne in mind that these are foreign exports and imports. Then the railroad companies have moved probably a still larger amount of internal commerce from one section of the country to another, from one State to another, and from one city or town to another, making probably three to four thousand million dollars' worth of produce moved by them for the convenience and profit of our people. This country has reached enormous proportions in its business. It has become a giant. And while its people pay very large sums for the transportation of their produce and merchandise, they make in return large profits in the aggregate which they could not make if it were not for the facilities of transportation afforded them by our railroad companies.

When this vast amount is expended annually and profitably by our people for railroad transportation, is it to be regarded as something marvelous if the Congress of the United States appropriates ten million a year to the improvement of the 30,000 miles of navigable streams within our borders, to say nothing of our harbors, which must be improved to facilitate foreign commerce? The amount expended for the improvement of our natural highways and channels of transportation is insignificant when compared with the amounts that are profitably expended in the construction and operation of artificial highways and thoroughfares of transportation. People complain very much of the monopoly of railroads and of what they call the oppression of railroad corporations. And that feeling seems to exist to some extent in the Senate. Has it occurred to Senators that the best way to free ourselves from those monopolies is to open everywhere our rivers and harbors and make them free to the transportation of the productions of every valley in the country that is tapped by one of them? As long as your rivers are sealed up the railroads will continue to do the carrying business of this country, and they will continue to combine, but when you have opened these rivers and harbors, and especially the interior rivers, so that there is an open natural highway from a port or a city where there are a half dozen railroads in combination, you at once have an independent outlet for the productions of that section. Therefore, in fact you are making a very small and insignificant appropriation for rivers and harbors as compared with the expenditure that is annually made for railroad transportation.

What has been the result of all this immense increase in facilities for transportation? There has been an increase of the wealth and population of the country that has been absolutely astounding, one that is unprecedented in this country or in any other. Suppose you blot out the railroad system and refuse to make appropriations to rivers and harbors, what would be the condition of this country? Where is the wealth of it then? Where is your progress? Where is your boasted prosperity? Where is the immense balance of trade that is now in your favor? You would be set back half a century. You would then be literally treading in the footsteps of the fathers. You would be conforming to the old democratic usages, about which we sometimes hear eloquent periods here and elsewhere by those who forget that the world moves, and that we live in a different era from that which existed fifty years ago.

Senators should not be alarmed at a ten-million-dollars appropriation to improve our great natural highways, and democrats need not be alarmed at it. I have been told in this body frequently that this is a democratic Congress, and we must not enlarge these appropriations; that we cannot afford to do it; that it may injure the democratic party if we do it. If I controlled the democratic party and desired to popularize it, instead of $10,000,000 a year for the improvement of these great natural highways, I would appropriate $25,000,000 a year. I would see that it was judiciously expended where it was needed, and I would popularize the democratic party or any other party that sustained me by doing it. The increase in the business of the country which would result from it would pay it back from year to year with accumulated interest, and our people would rejoice in the new impetus given to their growing prosperity.

I am not afraid, then, of the size of the appropriations. The only question is, are they wisely made, and for a proper object? If so, then I am prepared to vote for the bill. Whether you call it democratic doctrine or republican doctrine or the doctrine of the independent party, I care not. The question is not how it affects party creeds, but how it affects the general welfare of the people of the United States.

But it is said that great injustice has been done by the committee in this case. I presume it is something like the same that every committee does. A member of the committee has better knowledge of the immediate wants of his own State and his own section, and it is probably not strange that he gets more for his own State and section because he believes it needs it more. The action in the House of Representatives is an illustration. I believe North Carolina was not represented on the committee of the House. She got, as the bill that came from the House shows, not a very large share, an inadequate appropriation for the actual wants there; but when the bill came to this body, where the honorable chairman of the committee is from North Carolina, he knew the needs of that State, and he doubtless laid them before the committee, and the committee favorably considered them, and they increased the appropriation for the State of North Carolina by the sum of $229,000, while the State of Georgia only gets $165,000 all told, counting one-half of the appropriation for the Coosa River, which is nearly all in Alabama. It runs fifteen or twenty miles below Rome, the head of it, where the junction of the other two rivers forms it, into Alabama; but counting half of that to Georgia, we have $165,000 in all for that State.

North Carolina got an increase in the Senate of $229,000. But I have no doubt North Carolina ought to have every dollar of it. I do not presume the honorable chairman has put anything in the bill for North Carolina that ought not to be there. Much has been left out, however, that ought to be in it for other States. I think it is not quite liberal in the committee, after reporting the bill in that condition, to come before the Senate and propose to lay it upon the table and prevent discussion every time we offer a necessary amendment. They must remember that a good number of the States were not represented on that committee; that there was nobody who knew the interests of those States as well as the committee-men knew the interests of their own States. Therefore I think they ought to look with a little toleration on our motions here to amend the bill, where the amendments are obviously proper; and I protest against the illiberality of motions to lay proper amendments on the table and thus cutting off debate, as has been attempted in two or three cases when a meritorious amendment is offered.

Some of the Senators, however, have said that these amendments ought to be made with reference to the commerce and business of each State. If you adopt that rule my State compares very favorably with North Carolina, and it would have been entitled under that rule to a larger appropriation even than North Carolina, and she does not get probably what she ought to have in this case. And I make this remark to show that if I should happen to ask for a little more for Georgia than some of the other Senators are asking for their States, I ought to be heard, and the chairman of the committee—the Senator from North Carolina—ought not to cut me off when I make the motion. Let us compare notes a little; Savannah, Georgia, is the second cotton port in the Union, and the seventh in the Union in exports and imports. I speak from the record. Her foreign exports and imports are $24,476,166. Then, as the Cotton Exchange reports of the city of Savannah show, the actual exports, taking foreign and coastwise, for the last year amounted to over forty-nine million dollars that went out of the harbor of Savannah alone. Last year the whole cotton receipts shipped out through the port, foreign and coastwise, amounted to about seven hundred thousand bales. Estimating by the months that have already run in this year, we may safely say that the cotton exports of the port of Savannah for this year will be 800,000 bales, and upon the same ratio of increase in the other exports, such as rice, tobacco, naval stores, lumber, timber, &c., the whole exports from Savannah, foreign and coastwise, for the present year will be between fifty-four and fifty-five million dollars.

Now, how does it stand in North Carolina? As you will see, I have about doubled the foreign trade of Savannah with the coastwise trade. The city of Wilmington, North Carolina, is the nineteenth port in the Union in exports and imports. Her exports and imports amounted last year in the whole to $4,042,322, not quite one-sixth of the foreign exports and imports of the city of Savannah. But there are two other ports in North Carolina that have foreign exports and imports. Pamlico, North Carolina, has an export and import trade of $27,786, and Beaufort, North Carolina, has an export and import business of $1,248. Take it altogether, there are less than four and a half million dollars of exports and imports from the State of North Carolina through all three of her ports. The city of Savannah alone exports and imports over six times as much as the whole State of North Carolina; and yet the increase in the House appropriations made for that State in this bill by the committee are larger than the whole amount appropriated by the bill to Georgia.

Therefore, I say that all these items are not quite just, and while I am unwilling to embarrass the committee, for I see the situation, and I am aware of the lateness of the hour, I think it is unreasonable, with these figures before us, for the committee to say that they will allow no amendments.

Mr. RANSOM. What paper is the Senator from Georgia reading from?

Mr. BROWN. I am reading from the annual report of the Chief of the Bureau of Statistics of the United States of America.

Mr. BUTLER. May I ask the Senator from Georgia a question?

Mr. BROWN. Yes, sir.

Mr. BUTLER. What are the estimates, if the Senator knows, for the improvement of the harbor of Savannah?

Mr. BROWN. Yes, sir; I know exactly. I thank the Senator for asking me the question.

Mr. BUTLER. I mean the estimate upon which the appropriation in the bill for that harbor is made.

Mr. BROWN. I understand the Senator perfectly, and I am very much obliged to my friend from South Carolina for asking me that question, because it calls to my mind another fact that I wanted to state here especially. The city of Savannah has done that which I apprehend the chief city of the Senator's own State probably has not done. She has expended over a quarter of a million dollars out of her own purse, her own treasury, for the improvement of her own harbor. She has gone on the idea that those who want help must do all they can first to help themselves. She has acted on that rule and I can get the data and show every item. Over a quarter of a million of dollars has she expended for the improvement of her own harbor. I do not think many other cities have done as much.

But to the Senator's question. There was an estimate made to deepen the channel to nineteen feet, for you will bear in mind that the bar at the mouth of the river at high tide is twenty-six feet. The object was first to deepen the channel of the river between the city and the bar to nineteen feet. If they undertook to make it as deep as it ought to be at once with the meager appropriations it would be too long before we could do a reasonable business at the harbor. Hence an estimate was made for only a partial completion of the work first, so as to give the benefit of nineteen feet of water all the way down the channel.

The appropriations have been made from year to year until it lacks a little of $65,000 to finish that particular work of deepening the channel to nineteen feet; but we look to the deepening of it finally to twenty-three or twenty-four feet. The Senate has already passed to-day my amendment to this bill instructing the Secretary of War to have the survey made with reference to deepening the channel three feet more, so as to make it twenty-two feet from the bar up to the city of Savannah.

Mr. RANSOM. Will the Senator from Georgia allow me to interrupt him for one second?

Mr. BROWN. I certainly will.

Mr. RANSOM. I ask the Senator if the Committee on Commerce did not increase the appropriation for the city of Savannah to the very last cent of the estimates and to the last cent of the demands of the Senators from that State?

Mr. BROWN. I thank my friend, the Senator from North Carolina, for calling my attention to that, for I want to do the committee full justice. On that point they did give the amount with this exception, that they appropriated $5,000 of the sum for the payment for lands on the opposite side from Savannah.

Mr. RANSOM. That was by the request of the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. BROWN. No; my honorable friend is wrong. My amendment that I laid before you and that I urged before you, and I was unfortunate if I was not understood, was to appropriate $65,000 to complete the work and $5,000 for extinguishing the title to a certain neck of land necessary to be cut off from Hutchinson's Island. The situation there is just this——

Mr. RANSOM. There is no dispute about the Savannah amendment; it has been adopted.

Mr. BROWN. Let me answer the question. I want to make myself understood on that matter now that the Senator has called my attention to it. The river right opposite the city of Savannah is not as wide as is necessary for the shipping purposes there. There is an island immediately opposite the city called Hutchinson's Island. The larger part of the river ran around on the South Carolina side of the island, and the estimates for improving the harbor include jettying across that back river so as to turn the stream as much as possible around by the city. The river is too narrow next to the city, and the engineers say it ought to be widened to six hundred feet right opposite the city where there is so much shipping. When I say so much shipping, I want to say in that connection, that during the whole business season there is, to say nothing of sailing vessels, more than one steamer on an average every day clearing from the harbor of Savannah. With all this shipping in operation there is not room enough for it immediately opposite the city. It is proposed therefore to deepen the shallow portion next to Hutchinson's Island, and cut off a neck of that island; and there we will have to pay for a little land when we invade private rights. That is what we ask $5,000 for, and it is important to have it for that purpose. But deduct that and we lack $5,000 of having the appropriation necessary for Savannah. And it will be borne in mind that the present estimates were made for the improvements of the harbor of Savannah, so as to give us but nineteen feet of water.

Mr. BUTLER. I was not making any comparison between Charleston and Savannah. I really wanted to give Savannah all she is entitled to, and she shall have all that she is entitled to so far as my vote is concerned. The point to which I wanted to invite the attention of the Senator was whether or not the estimates to which he referred had already been made; in other words, has not the appropriation in this bill been very nearly up to the estimates submitted by the engineers, or a very large percentage?

Mr. BROWN. Yes, as I have already stated, it has been within a little less than $5,000 of the estimate for the completion of the work as proposed by the first survey of the port which only proposed to deepen the harbor to nineteen feet. But I will add that when the final survey is made to complete the work on the harbor, it may need a million there. The Senator has the estimates for South Carolina for the completion of Charleston Harbor, and they are large, but I am going to vote every dollar he needs for that purpose. I am a friend of his people and of his State, and I am not finding fault with what he asks. I only wanted to show him what we need, but I was taken up by the Senator from North Carolina on Savannah. That was not the point I was complaining about; my complaint is this: we have three large rivers in Georgia; we have rivers and a coast there that need improvement to the extent of nearly one thousand miles in length. The river on each side running nearly the length of the State belongs to the State. On the west, the west bank of the Chattahoochee is the line of Alabama. On the east, the east bank of the Savannah is the line between Georgia and South Carolina. Then the great river, the Altamaha, which is one of the large rivers of the South, runs nearly through the center of the State. It is formed by the junction of the Ockmulgee and the Oconee—and here I want to say a word about our exports again.

I got a letter the other day from the mayor of Darien, though I have not the official statistics, informing me that during the last year there has been shipped out from the mouth of the Altamaha River 70,000,000 feet of lumber, to say nothing about naval stores and other products. I want to show you that I am not asking for appropriations here for trout streams, or for places where there is no commerce. I am asking for appropriations where there are highways of commerce; I am asking appropriations where there is large commerce and where there is growing commerce. I do complain, therefore, that the committee, after my colleague and I had gone before them and asked an increase, cut us off and gave us not a single dollar of increase on any of our rivers and harbors as the bill came in its original shape from the House, except for the harbor of Savannah alone.

There is one other channel or river I must not forget, and it is one of the most important. It is important to the whole country; it is important to the North and South; it is important to the East and to the West. There is an inland channel along and around the coast of South Carolina, Georgia, and Florida by which you can go from Charleston to Savannah and from Savannah to Brunswick, and around into the Saint Johns, and up into Florida, and never go out to sea at all. We have a class of good boats that are beginning to do a large business there. We run two boats a day now usually both ways, and sometimes more in that inland channel. In case of war, as you have no adequate navy, let me tell you it would be as the engineers have said in their estimates, of immense value to you. You can conduct a commerce with it open between Charleston and any portion of Florida and never go to sea.

Mr. EATON. My friend means "us," not "you."

Mr. BROWN. I speak to the Senate; I mean everybody. I mean you and us; I mean the fifty million people of the United States all united as they are now, and as I am glad to believe they always will be in the future. That is what I mean, and I thank my friend from Connecticut for directing my attention to it if I have used expressions that do not convey that idea. But this inland salt river is of national consequence.

There is a place called Romney Marsh, beyond Savannah some twenty or thirty miles, in the direction of Florida. The boats have to go through the marsh. What is the marsh? It is a marsh between the islands and the mainland, grown over with high grass that at high tide is entirely covered; at low tide it is about five feet above the water. There are rivers and creeks through it. The navigable channel goes through it in a very winding and meandering sort of way. In passing Romney Marsh, if you get there at low tide, you have to lie over always for the tide to rise, and it is a very great hinderance and inconvenience. If the people who come from New England, New York, Pennsylvania, and other States and land at Savannah, going to Florida, that tropical garden we have down there, stop over a day or two at Savannah, they are very apt to take those inland boats, because they are very pleasant. It is as pleasant as river navigation and as safe; but they go around and hang in Romney Marsh and wait there for the tide to rise. The engineers have made a survey of the marsh, and they say that $31,680 will cut a canal through the part of the marsh where we always stick, and open the whole navigation and make it free and easy. The Georgia and Florida Inland Steamboat Company, owning the boats on that line, whose headquarters are in New York, have made a proposition which I now have before me, that I will not stop to read, which is that if Congress will appropriate $20,000 of that $31,680 they will take the contract, because they are running boats there, and complete the job according to the estimates made by the engineers for $20,000. In other words, this steamboat company itself will contribute eleven thousand six hundred and eighty dollars of the amount necessary to cut the canal through Romney Marsh, to have the inland navigation improved as it ought to be.

Now, I did think when I went before the committee that I made a good case there upon which I was entitled to consideration. It is true it sounds a little strange to ask to improve the navigation of a marsh, but it is to improve the navigation of the salt river that runs and winds through the marsh by cutting a little canal across where it is impassable at low tides, so that boats can go along without lying there six or twelve hours waiting for the tides. The steamboat company now says "Give us $20,000 of the $31,680, the estimated cost, and we will cut the canal, as estimated by your engineers, worth thirty-one thousand six hundred and eighty dollars." As this private company proposes to give over one-third of the amount, I thought I made a good case before the committee, but it seems they did not think so. I appeal from their decision, and I say now that I intend at the proper time to offer an amendment to appropriate the $20,000 for Romney Marsh; and I beg Senators on both sides, republican and democratic, to consider it favorably, North, East, and West; you are all interested in it. There is probably no appropriation in this bill of like amount that would do more real good to the commerce of the country than the $20,000 which you would put in Romney Marsh to make that navigation free and easy all the time. I propose the route by Warsaw Island. The island has a beautiful beach. It would afford the people of Savannah an opportunity to build hotels and summer residences on the island, which would then have speedy and easy communication with the city, which would be a great convenience to a large class of our best people, who could spend their summers near home, on a beautiful island, in the midst of a fine, healthy sea-breeze. This would increase the health, comfort, and prosperity of the people of our beautiful city. I thought the committee ought to have given us this appropriation, and it is about that, and the Altamaha River, and the Chattahoochee River, and the Savannah River, all of which are put off with mere nominal appropriations, that I complain, not about the city of Savannah. I referred to the commerce of the city of Savannah to show that it was not, as some of the rivers have been called, trout streams that we were improving there. Here is one of the largest commercial ports of the Union, doing a vast business, constantly improving, with a railroad system going back and penetrating the whole country west and south and southwest. This railroad system has been put into operation at a great deal of expense. It is being improved every year, and as it now stands it is going to pour an immense commerce into Savannah.

Why will we not improve these rivers and harbors, then, as they should be, and encourage these great cotton and timber and naval store and rice interests as they deserve? The committee gave us for the great river Altamaha $5,000; and for the two branches that rise up in that immense timber region, none like it anywhere scarcely, where they are bringing out such large quantities of timber, they give us $2,500 for one and $5,000 for the other. All I asked was $10,000 each for the branches and $10,000 for the Altamaha. I thought we ought to have had it; it is certainly much more reasonable than a great deal that is in the bill, and why should we not have it? Why cut us off by the gag-law, and not even permit us to be heard in these amendments?

Mr. RANSOM. Certainly the Senator from Georgia does not pretend that I have cut him off by a gag-law. He has certainly illustrated the fact that I have not done that.

Mr. BROWN. The illustration is very good, it is true; but I am not quite sure how much I am indebted to my honorable friend for the opportunity of making this speech. I think he tried the gag-law by moving to lay on the table the very amendment which I got up to discuss here; but we voted him down, and he could not put on the gag, could not put the bits in my mouth; and hence by the courtesy of the Senate, and not of my friend from North Carolina, I am allowed to make my remarks.

Mr. RANSOM. When the Senate gets an opportunity I think they will agree to my motion.

Mr. VANCE. I simply want to make an inquiry. I wish to inquire what is the question before the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] to recommit the bill with instructions.

Mr. BROWN. I have the floor on that question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Georgia has the floor.

Mr. BROWN. I am also discussing kindred subjects that are very germane to it. I do not expect to occupy the floor again on this question only to make some motions to amend, and while I am up I want to state the reasons why this gag should not be put upon us, and to show that there are good reasons why the committee ought not to cut us off by motions to lay our amendments on the table, which motions are not debatable.

Allow me to remark here another coincidence which is a little peculiar. In every instance where my friend, the chairman, makes a motion to lay an amendment on the table the Senators from the States that get the largest part of the appropriation vote to cut us off. They cannot afford to injure the bill. Some of the States represented on the committee fare rather luxuriantly in the bill, and it is natural enough, I suppose, that they want to hold on to what they have. But they should let us put a little more on; and if we happen to add by meritorious amendments another million, I think it is infinitely small compared with what our fathers appropriated for like objects when we take into account their numbers, their wealth, and their situation, and compare them with our numbers, our wealth, and our situation.

I do not want to be gagged on this question, and I do not think other Senators who have meritorious amendments do, nor do I think it ought to be done. I know I have not confined myself to the question of the improvement of the mouth of the Columbia River which is the pending amendment which the Senate refused to lay on the table. I am ready to vote for the appropriation because the Senators from that State say it is really necessary and important. The Columbia River is one of the great water-ways of the Union, and I shall vote with the Senators from Oregon on that question, and then I have no doubt when they come to consider other amendments that are equally meritorious they will vote for them.

I do not think the honorable chairman need be alarmed about the fate of his bill. I do not believe we will hazard its passage. We ought to add a little more to it. We should be willing to take the risk. As a democrat I shall take it, and I am not afraid of what the people will say. I would rather suppose they would call us to account for not having made reasonable appropriations than that they would be likely to call us to account for voting more than ought to be given by this bill. If the whole amount appropriated does not exceed $15,000,000 and the money is appropriated as it ought to be for necessary improvements and each State gets its just proportion, I am willing that this democratic Congress shall take that much responsibility. However much of popular confidence the party may have lost on previous occasions by a timid and vacillating policy, if it will appropriate such sums as are necessary to make proper improvements of the great highways of commerce which a bountiful Providence has so richly bestowed upon us, and thus give easy and cheap transportation to the productions and importations of the country, we shall for one time at least hear the plaudit of well done come rolling back to the Capitol from a vast majority of the fifty million people whose interests will be promoted by such an exhibition of practical statesmanship and wise policy.

Mr. PLUMB. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. RANSOM. It is not in order to say anything, but I hope that motion will not prevail.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. PADDOCK. I move that the Senate take a recess until half past seven o'clock. ["No!" "No!"]

Mr. RANSOM. This very long bill has to go back to the other House; already amendments have been adopted to it; and we had better go on with it now. I appeal to the friends of the bill to stand by it.

Mr. PADDOCK. My belief is that it will be an utter impossibility to finish the bill in any reasonable time this evening.

Mr. BECK. May I be allowed to say a word?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is not a debatable proposition, but by consent the Senator may proceed.

Mr. BECK. I wish only to say that the sundry civil bill will reach the Senate at some hour to-night we hope; it is perhaps the most difficult bill to manage. It has to be followed by the deficiency bill. The legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill and several others are going to give some more trouble, and unless we close the consideration of this bill now it will be either a failure, or some important bill that must be passed will either receive no consideration, or not be passed at all.

Mr. RANSOM. I hope that the motion to take a recess will not be adopted by the Senate. There is a large number of Senators here, and we can go on with the bill, and if it is to be finished we can finish it to-night. I concur in what the Senator from Kentucky has said.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Nebraska, that the Senate take a recess until half past seven o'clock.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB, (at five o'clock and thirty-six minutes p. m.) I move that the Senate now adjourn; and on that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. WALKER, (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania, [Mr. WALLACE,] who would vote "yea" if he were present, and I should vote "nay."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. TELLER, (after having voted in the affirmative.) Did the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. CAMERON] vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He did not.

Mr. TELLER. Then I will withdraw my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 9, nays 42; as follows:

YEAS—9.

Bruce,	Hoar,	Logan,
Dawes,	Ingalls,	Morrill,
Hill of Colorado,	Jones of Nevada,	Plumb.

NAYS—42.

Bailey,	Farley,	Kernan,	Saulsbury,
Bayard,	Ferry,	Lamar,	Saunders,
Beck,	Garland,	McDonald,	Slater,
Booth,	Groome,	McMillan,	Vance,
Burnside,	Hampton,	Maxey,	Vest,
Butler,	Harris,	Morgan,	Voorhees,
Call,	Hereford,	Pendleton,	Williams,
Cockrell,	Hill of Georgia,	Pugh,	Windom,
Coke,	Johnston,	Randolph,	Withers.
Davis of Illinois,	Jonas,	Ransom,
Eaton,	Jones of Florida,	Rollins,

ABSENT—24.

Allison,	Cameron of Pa.,	Hamlin,	Sharon,
Anthony,	Cameron of Wis.,	Kellogg,	Teller,
Baldwin,	Conkling,	Kirkwood,	Thurman,
Blaine,	Davis of W. Va.,	McPherson,	Walker,
Blair,	Edmunds,	Paddock,	Wallace,
Brown,	Grover,	Platt,	Whyte.

So the Senate refused to adjourn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the motion of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] to recommit the bill with instructions.

Mr. RANSOM. Without any impatience in the world, certainly with all the deference I can or ought to have toward the sentiment of the Senate, I will presume to say that I think Senators are about as well advised on this bill now as they will be during the night. If we intend to pass the bill it must be passed to-night; that is settled. I hope now, without presuming even to suggest or dictate to the Senate, that we shall proceed with the bill and vote on amendments that may be offered and then on the final passage of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Kansas, to recommit the bill with instructions.

Mr. PLUMB. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ANTHONY, (when his name was called.) I am paired on this question and on all questions on this bill, with some exceptions, with the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. THURMAN.]

Mr. EATON, (when Mr. PLATT'S name was called.) I desire to say that my colleague [Mr. PLATT] is paired with the Senator from Mississippi, [Mr. BRUCE.] If my colleague were here he would vote "yea."

Mr. WALKER, (when his name was called.) On this and all other questions connected with the river and harbor bill I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania, [Mr. WALLACE,] and I make the announcement now, so that I need not hereafter repeat it. If the Senator from Pennsylvania were present, he would vote "yea" and I should vote "nay."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. KELLOGG] and the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KIRKWOOD] are paired. On this question I really do not know how they would vote.

Mr. COCKRELL. I am paired with the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. EDMUNDS,] who is now absent, upon this question, reserving, however, the right at any and all times to vote in order to make a quorum. If the Senator from Vermont were present, I understand he would vote "yea." I should vote "nay."

Mr. TELLER. I am paired with the Senator from Wisconsin, [Mr. CAMERON,] who it seems has gone away. I was to pair with him if he went away, and I shall not vote. If he were present, I should vote to recommit the bill.

Mr. MCMILLAN. The Senator from Wisconsin would vote "nay."

Mr. THURMAN. I am paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ANTHONY] on all questions except those that effect my own State.

The result was announced—yeas 10, nays 39; as follows:

YEAS—10.

Davis of Illinois,	Harris,	Kernan,	Pendleton.
Dawes,	Hill of Colorado,	Logan,
Eaton,	Ingalls,	Morrill,

NAYS—39.

Bailey,	Coke,	Johnston,	Ransom,
Bayard,	Farley,	Jonas,	Rollins,
Beck,	Ferry,	Jones of Florida,	Saunders,
Blair,	Garland,	Lamar,	Slater,
Booth,	Groome,	McDonald,	Vance,
Brown,	Grover,	McMillan,	Vest,
Burnside,	Hampton,	Maxey,	Voorhees,
Butler,	Hereford,	Paddock,	Williams,
Call,	Hill of Georgia,	Pugh,	Windom.
Cameron of Pa.,	Hoar,	Randolph,

ABSENT—26.

Allison,	Conkling,	McPherson,	Thurman,
Anthony,	Davis of W. Va.,	Morgan,	Walker,
Baldwin,	Edmunds,	Platt,	Wallace,
Blaine,	Hamlin,	Plumb,	Whyte,
Bruce,	Jones of Nevada,	Saulsbury,	Withers.
Cameron of Wis.,	Kellogg,	Sharon,
Cockrell,	Kirkwood,	Teller,

So the motion was not agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on the amendment of the Senator from Oregon, [Mr. SLATER,] at line 818.

Mr. MORRILL. I desire to offer an amendment. If it is not in order now, I will wait until this amendment is acted upon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If it precedes line number 818 it will now be in order; if it comes afterward the Senator had better reserve it.

Mr. MORRILL. It comes after it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Oregon, in line 818, to strike out "forty" and insert "seventy."

Mr. RANSOM. I am obliged to call for the yeas and nays upon that amendment, because if I once do anything that consents to putting amendments on this bill, I shall feel called upon, and it is my duty to say so to the Senate, to treat all gentlemen alike who have amendments of equal merit. I should be very remiss if I were to allow one amendment to be admitted here, if when others of equal merit were offered I did not consent to their admission also. So I must call for the yeas and nays and vote against this amendment.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I suggest that the vote to lay on the table was a test vote on this amendment.

Mr. RANSOM. It was not a test vote.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. TELLER. Let the amendment be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 818 it is proposed to strike out "forty" and insert "seventy;" so as to read:

Including bar at mouth of Columbia River, Oregon, $75,000.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. TELLER, (when his name was called.) When I paired with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. CAMERON] I reserved the right to vote on such amendments as I thought proper, and only paired on final action upon the bill, or that which would look to the final defeat of the bill, so that I vote "yea."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. THURMAN. As the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ANTHONY] is now in the Chamber, I vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 23, nays 29; as follows:

YEAS—23.

Bailey,	Grover,	Logan,	Saunders,
Bayard,	Hampton,	Morgan,	Slater,
Brown,	Hill of Georgia,	Morrill,	Teller,
Davis of Illinois,	Hoar,	Paddock,	Thurman,
Dawes,	Ingalls,	Pendleton,	Vest.
Garland,	Kernan,	Plumb,

NAYS—29.

Anthony,	Cameron of Pa.,	Jonas,	Rollins,
Baldwin,	Coke,	Jones of Florida,	Vance,
Beck,	Eaton,	Lamar,	Voorhees,
Blair,	Ferry,	McDonald,	Williams,
Booth,	Harris,	McMillan,	Windom.
Burnside,	Hereford,	Maxey,
Butler,	Hill of Colorado,	Pugh,
Call,	Johnston,	Ransom,

ABSENT—23.

Allison,	Davis of W. Va.,	Kellogg,	Sharon,
Blaine,	Edmunds,	Kirkwood,	Walker,
Bruce,	Farley,	McPherson,	Wallace,
Cameron of Wis.,	Groome,	Platt,	Whyte,
Cockrell,	Hamlin,	Randolph,	Withers.
Conkling,	Jones of Nevada,	Saulsbury,

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MORRILL. On page 41, after line 988 of section 1, I move to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That the President of the United States is hereby authorized and requested to make such deductions from the respective appropriations herein provided for as shall amount in the aggregate to the sum of $4,000,000, and these deductions shall be made in such amount in each case as in the judgment of the President will best serve the public interest in advancing the most necessary improvements.

It is, I suppose, well understood by every Senator that this is the largest river and harbor bill that has ever been reported. It came to us from the House very large, and I do not understand that in committee it has been pruned in a single instance, but the committee have added very largely to it. While I am a staunch friend of internal improvement, and improvements such as the bulk of this bill proposes, yet there are a good many things in the bill that ought to be stricken out. The committee to which it was referred ought to have made provision in order that we may keep such measures as this in some favor with the people; but if we are to go on in this most extravagant style we are ruining the very system that we are undertaking to uphold.

It will be seen by looking at the bill that the Committee on Commerce proposed, and I suppose in Committee of the Whole of the Senate the amendment has been agreed to, to strike out the provision of the House bill that the money should be expended in the most economical manner; that is, by the system of contracts. Everybody knows that we can get from 33⅓ to 50 per cent. more work done by contract for the same money than we can by leaving it to petty engineers all over the country to spend it as they may see fit and proper.

I desire that we shall appropriate a liberal sum for river and harbor improvements, and after we have appropriated a liberal sum I want the best that can be done to be undertaken on the part of the Government. It seems to me strange, unless it is for the purpose of distributing this money and fertilizing the country without any regard to what shall be done with it, that that eminently wise and economical provision should have been stricken out of the bill, under the circumstances, where every little stream in the country seems to have been named and got hold of in order to rope in the interests of the respective States in favor of the bill.

I cannot say that such an amendment as this I have offered will be accepted; but it seems to me when we appropriate $7,600,000—and that will be the amount as near as I can figure it under my proposed amendment; it is a liberal sum and ought to content the Senate; I hope it may content the Senate.

Mr. THURMAN. I suggest to my friend from Vermont that he withhold his amendment until the other amendments to be offered have been voted upon. That is an amendment which should come in after the bill has been perfected or rendered more imperfect, either one or the other as the Senate votes. There are other amendments to be offered.

Mr. MORRILL. If it shall be understood that this amendment may come up without being moved, I have no objection.

Mr. THURMAN. Of course it will come up.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment, then, will lie on the table subject to the call of the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. THURMAN. Do I understand that for the present the amendment is withdrawn?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is laid on the table subject to the call of the Senator who submitted it.

Mr. MORRILL. Or anybody else.

Mr. THURMAN. Although I have very little hope of getting anything better in this bill than it is after the vote on the amendment offered by the Senator from Oregon, which it seems to me was the most meritorious thing that has been offered about the bill, I yet venture, in accordance with the recommendation of the local engineer and also the Chief Engineer of the United States, and for reasons that I shall state, to move to amend the bill, in line 170, by striking out "thirty" and inserting "fifty," which will be an increase of the appropriation of $20,000 for an ice-harbor at the mouth of the Muskingum River, Ohio. The bill appropriates $30,000 as it now reads.

Several years ago Congress made an appropriation for the construction of an ice-harbor on the Ohio River, at the mouth of the Muskingum River. It was highly recommended by the Chief of Engineers and by one of the subordinate engineers of that department as necessary for the safety of the commerce of the Ohio River. It is really in the Muskingum River at its mouth. The State of Ohio has an improvement along the Muskingum River, slack-water navigation, and there is a large dam at that mouth which the State consented might be used in the construction of this ice-harbor, saving to the Government an expense of more than $40,000. Congress first appropriated, if I remember aright, $30,000, and last year appropriated $80,000; and now the Chief of Engineers reports to Congress as follows:

5. Ice-harbor at mouth of Muskingum River, Ohio.—Under the appropriation of March 3, 1879, ($30,000,) a contract was made for furnishing the stone for a lock in the State dam at Marietta, Ohio, and the delivery of stone has been begun.

Under the appropriation of June 14, 1880, it is proposed to commence the construction of so much of the above lock as is located above the dam, the amount of the appropriation being too small and the season too far advanced to justify more extended operations.

The officer in charge submits the following estimate for the ensuing year:

For completing lock at Marietta..... $136,400

That is the estimate made by the Chief of Engineers, and also by the officer of that department who has the matter specially in charge.

I want to say that this is for an ice-harbor on the Ohio River, and the only one on that river. It is true that there is another one projected, but this is the only one on which any considerable work has been done. The Ohio River, from the port of Pittsburgh to its mouth, is a thousand miles in length that is navigable. Its two great tributaries which constitute it, the Allegheny and the Monongahela, are also navigable for long distances from Pittsburgh. It is a river that is subject to the breaking of the ice in the spring, to the great injury of the boats and other craft upon it. I am assured by the member of Congress from the Marietta district that if this work had been completed, the saving this very year upon the going out of the ice would have been three times as much as would have made that ice harbor.

There can be no doubt whatever, and never has been any doubt, of the importance of this work. There is no work of this importance that the General Government ever undertook that will be constructed with as little expense to the Government as will this work, owing to the fact of the State improvement and the consent which the State has given by resolutions of the Legislature to the use of the State dam for this ice-harbor.

Mr. President, I am not going to take up the time of the Senate by detailing the importance of commerce upon the Ohio River. Every Senator certainly knows it; but I wish to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that the appropriation names what it is, the unexpended balance and the appropriation of $30,000. This work cannot be completed within this year, and they have to meet next winter or next spring the same disastrous consequences that have attended commerce this spring. This is an ice-harbor for the use of vessels on the Ohio River all the way from Pittsburgh to Cincinnati. It is of immense importance to them, and it is penny-wise and pound-foolish not to finish this work at once. The appropriations ought to have been through before; the work ought to have been completed at once instead of dribbling out small sums and letting it linger over many years in its construction. The $50,000 to which I propose to raise this appropriation is not enough. The right policy, the true economy, would be to appropriate enough to finish the work at once; but I have no hope of succeeding, if I were to offer an amendment, to raise the sum to what it ought to be; but I trust the Senate at least will raise it to the same sum which Congress appropriated last year, in order that the work may proceed.

Mr. RANSOM. I have to say identically the same words in reference to the amendment of my friend from Ohio that I said in reference to the amendment of the Senator from Oregon, and it is an illustration of what I stated before. If one of these amendments is admitted, there are others just as meritorious, almost without number, and the bill will be broken down and there is an end of the measure. I move to lay the amendment of the Senator from Ohio on the table.

Mr. THURMAN. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 28, nays 13; as follows:

YEAS—28.

Baldwin,	Cameron of Pa.,	Harris,	Maxey,
Beck,	Coke,	Hereford,	Pugh,
Blair,	Davis of W. Va.,	Johnston,	Ransom,
Booth,	Farley,	Jonas,	Vance,
Burnside,	Ferry,	Lamar,	Vest,
Butler,	Garland,	McDonald,	Voorhees,
Call,	Hampton,	McMillan,	Williams.

NAYS—13.

Bailey,	Hill of Georgia,	Paddock,	Thurman.
Brown,	Ingalls,	Pendleton,
Davis of Illinois,	Logan,	Plumb,
Hill of Colorado,	Morgan,	Slater,

ABSENT—34.

Allison,	Eaton,	Kernan,	Sharon,
Anthony,	Edmunds,	Kirkwood,	Teller,
Bayard,	Groome,	McPherson,	Walker,
Blaine,	Grover,	Morrill,	Wallace,
Bruce,	Hamlin,	Platt,	Whyte,
Cameron of Wis.,	Hoar,	Randolph,	Windom,
Cockrell,	Jones of Florida,	Rollins,	Withers.
Conkling,	Jones of Nevada,	Saulsbury,
Dawes,	Kellogg,	Saunders,

So the amendment was laid on the table.

Mr. MORGAN. In line 150 I move to strike out "one hundred" and insert "one hundred and twenty-five;" so as to read:

Improving harbor at Mobile, Alabama, $125,000.

I have no doubt that this amendment will go the way of all flesh, but before it goes in that way I desire to make a statement of the facts upon which it is predicated, and I am prepared to support it by some very essential documentary history. The Senate committee have taken up a House bill and have declined to adhere to the amount of money that the House had appropriated or expressed its willingness to appropriate, and the Senate committee have added very largely to that amount of money. If there are any instances in which reductions have been made I have not yet seen them. There may be some instances, but I do not remember any in which a reduction has been made of the sum of money appropriated in any particular case below that which the House has designated as being its will on that subject.

Mr. INGALLS. Can the Senator state how much the bill was increased? I did not hear the original statement.

Mr. MORGAN. I do not undertake to state that. I have no idea that there is a Senator on this floor who can state it.

Mr. INGALLS. I understand that the Senator from North Carolina who has the bill in charge made a preliminary statement, in which he announced how much the bill had been increased as it came from the House.

Mr. MORGAN. I did not hear that. I do not see the chairman now, but I will ask the committee where there has been any reduction made upon any appropriation sent to us from the House? No Senator has answered that any reduction has been made; and without pretending to be entirely familiar with every item of this bill, I will assume for the purposes of the point I am making that no reduction has been made.

The bill, then, when it came from the House, was to be taken precisely as it passed the House, and when it came to the Senate it was to be amended in those particulars that the committee agreed upon, and then there was an evident understanding on the part of the committee that no departure should be made from that agreement which they have entered into; for we were notified when the bill came in here that there should be no increase in the appropriations beyond that which the committee had fixed in its own mind as being the sum which the Senate would agree to appropriate.

This method of dealing with a subject of this kind cuts off all discretionary action on the part of the Senate. No discretion remains to any Senator or to this body as a whole which the committee will allow to be exercised in changing the amount of these appropriations in any direction, either to decrease or to increase. It comes to us like a Procrustean bed, upon which we are to be measured, after having been first tied upon it, without the option on our part either to see that it is too long or too short, or too hot or too cold. The committee, in the exercise of the jurisdiction and authority which I suppose they feel perfectly composed in exercising, in their judgment measure the appropriation as it shall be made, and nothing is to be heard or urged against it in the Senate that is not encountered at once with a motion to lay on the table.

I confess I have never seen any measure passed through the Senate of the United States under rules and regulations quite as stringent and as military in their character as those that control the action of the Senate on this bill. The Senator from Oregon was not allowed to have an amendment put upon the bill which he insisted was entirely just, and proved to be just before the Senate, because it would increase the amount of the appropriation and load the bill. The Senator from Ohio, who has now almost two full terms of senatorial experience in this body, has not been allowed to amend the bill so as to provide for a harbor of safety and of refuge for vessels on the Ohio River, which he declares in his place in the Senate is essential to the preservation of the commerce of the Ohio River.

After these rebuffs on the part of the committee, because they are not rebuffs on the part of the country, I know the fate of the amendment that I have moved. I discern that whatever is just to be done in this case is not going to be done. I know that the Senate is in thraldom and in leading-strings, so that those who are interested in the passage of this bill are not going to relax for any statements of facts that I can make or any argument that I can present. After the defeat of the honorable Senator from Ohio upon a proposition of the kind that the Senate has just broken him down upon, and after having seen him take his cloak and retire from the Chamber, I am thoroughly admonished that the power which has been imposed upon the Senate by the committee to force this measure through is one that I cannot resist.

But, sir, it remains to me to inquire for a moment how this power happened to be concentrated in the hands of the committee. It has not been done on the merits of the bill. Senators who belong to this committee have risen in their places to-day, and if they have not said it they have at least conceded it, that there are parts of this bill which they themselves would oppose if they felt at liberty to do it. Then we are brought to this condition as legislators that a measure is presented to us for our consideration full of evil, and we have not the liberty to eliminate it because there is a power we dare not attempt to resist which attempts to put, as has been stated here, the evil and the good together. I would feel that I had underrated the dignity of the high office which the people of my State have conferred upon me if I could ever confess that I was placed in such circumstances in reference to public legislation that I had no liberty to eliminate the evil from the good, and that I was bound to take the evil in order to get some modicum of justice at the hands of the Senate. This honorable body does not place itself upon the high plane of legislative action which properly belongs to it under the Constitution and the glorious traditions of its past history, when it concedes that it must pass a measure under the pressure of the previous question, for it is nothing else than that, first introduced here by the motion to lay on the table an amendment which is admitted by the very committee itself to contain merit.

The amendment which I have had the honor to offer here is for the benefit of the port of one of the oldest cities in the United States, settled centuries ago, whose traffic has been of great value commercially to the people of a widespread section of this country. After the most diligent and careful explorations of the Bay of Mobile, it has been ascertained by absolute tests that a channel two hundred feet wide and seventeen feet deep can be obtained there, which will float the commerce of the great tributaries of that stream, the Alabama River, now with 1,600 miles of actual navigation, out to the sea, and that it can be done with an expenditure of $850,000. The Congress of the United States, heretofore voting river and harbor bills not ranging above $10,000,000 of money for appropriations to these subjects, has found that it was its duty to appropriate $125,000 a year to this work, and now the appropriation runs over $11,000,000, probably to $12,000,000, and the Bay of Mobile, instead of receiving its $125,000, receives but $100,000.

I should like to know how it is that with the vast volume of the appropriations, increasing so much, this harbor, against which no man can make a just argument, must content itself with $100,000, while unimportant works in the United States are swelling up in their demands upon the country. Let this honorable committee come to the bar of public opinion and answer that question, for it may be that in this hour in which we are moving to gratify certain constituencies by large contributions from the Treasury Senators can find their convenience or even their interest in voting upon this bill as they have required us to vote, to take it in the shape which they require us to take it, but after awhile comes the judgment, and I am afraid that the judgment will come after death to many of us; but surely it will come, and the people of the United States will inquire into this matter, and they will understand why it is that the harbors of this country which are connected by lines of steamship with foreign trade and through which entrepôts float the riches that pour in upon this country, are to be choked to death while you increase the appropriations more than $1,000,000 each succeeding year. Convenience will not do as answer to this question. Combinations will not do as an answer to this question. That you cannot get anything, that "it won't do" is not an answer to this question. The question stands on its eternal merits, and until we can take away some of the foundation you can never shake the principle.

The bay of Mobile has a commerce which, during the past fiscal year, received the freight of four hundred and twenty-two vessels, one line of which was a line of steamships built largely by the people of Mobile out of their private capital. Those four hundred and twenty-two vessels have a tonnage of 116,987 tons, and the value of the commerce which went out of that port was $7,187,975 in the one product of cotton; there were $430,000 of imports of foreign goods; and the revenue collected was $63,946, justifying the action of the Congress of the United States heretofore in deepening the harbor from thirteen feet at least to seventeen; and the thirteen feet were gained by a contribution from the State of Alabama of $200,000, which was expended upon the very channel through which these ships are passing to and fro. Here is a State that spent out of her own treasury or out of her taxation upon her people $200,000 to deepen this channel to thirteen feet, and Alabama has furnished the commercial channel of the bay of Mobile up to this time. Now, we are trying to accumulate a fund, which, if economically expended, as it will be under the direction of that honest and able gentleman, Major Damrell, who has charge of it, will economize the expenditures of this Government and give us a seventeen-foot channel there to accommodate a vast area of that country reaching into three States, Georgia, Alabama, and Mississippi.

I come and ask that the appropriation may be placed within $75,000 of the estimate of the Engineer Corps of officers, and within less than $300,000 of the estimate of the local engineer; but my proposition will be laid on the table; that will be the end of it; and the money that ought to go for the purpose of improving the depth of water in Mobile Bay will be spent upon the tributaries of the Alabama, and be spent upon streams and brooks elsewhere through the United States, and notwithstanding the appropriation runs up more than $1,000,000 beyond what it did at the last session of Congress, this appropriation must simply go without the assent of the Senate of the United States.

There may be a principle in all this, but I fail to discern it. There may be a reason for it, but it is too obscure for my detection. There may be justice in it, but if there is, it is that justice which violates the instincts, as I conceive, of every community in this country which looks to the real welfare of the country. It is rank injustice. It is the injustice which withholds from a purpose which is legitimate and has been always recognized as legitimate in this Government, the protection and increase of our commerce abroad, a proper and reasonable appropriation, and takes the money and diverts it to other projects which are entirely unknown to the commerce of the country.

When I first entered the Senate of the United States I announced to this honorable body, perhaps without much attention on their part, my constitutional views in relation to appropriations for improvements in my own State, and that I should be guided entirely with reference to the benefits they might confer upon the whole commerce of the people of the United States. Thereupon I introduced a measure to expend $10,000 for borings and soundings in the bay of Mobile, so that no money might be expended extravagantly or without just cause. That appropriation was granted and the borings and soundings and testings were made to an absolute demonstration of the feasibility of this work, and that too within the range of a very economical dispensation of the money of the Government. From that time to this not myself alone and my colleague, but the able engineer who is in charge of the work and the people of the State of Alabama have kept a most watchful eye on the expenditure so that at the last session of Congress when it was proposed to have this work done entirely by contract, I received from the merchants of the city of Mobile representations saying "if you let this work out entirely by contract and do not reserve to the Government officer the power to do it by the hiring of labor, we shall be mulcted in an immense amount of loss in consequence of combinations that will be formed to take possession of the work." Upon that suggestion the bill was amended, biddings were opened and twenty-two cents was the lowest bid that was proposed for work of this kind under the contract system as it then existed, and the engineer could have been bound to have received these bids as the lowest bids from responsible parties. When upon the suggestion of the citizens and merchants of Mobile, that amendment was adopted and the biddings were reopened, what was done? They got an arrangement to do the work from a Baltimore company for eleven cents, saving one-half of the appropriation.

I feel grateful to the committee that they have recognized the duty on their part, as I have no doubt they recognize all their duties, for the modification they have made in the House bill. I lament that the committee have not carried out in all respects the spirit which dictated that action. If they had eliminated from this bill appropriations unworthy to be made, the committee would have given strength to the bill; you would have a bill you would be proud of; but, as it is, the Senate has to bow itself to combinations made in the House of Representatives and transferred to the Senate, which compel us to do the will of a majority that has been made up, not on principle, but on interest.

I was speaking in reference to what the people of Mobile had been doing, and to the honest security they had got that the money of the United States would not be squandered in extravagant expenditures there. They want the work; they need it. The great river which enters the bay, and the territory which it drains, will furnish to the commerce of the United States and of the world an almost unexampled supply of the elements of wealth; but the bar, which has so long obstructed the bay of Mobile, stands there yet; and while the little rivers of the interior demand appropriations from Congress, and aggregate around themselves sufficient strength to carry them through by main force, this great outlet to the sea must be closed and remain closed. God knows when it will be opened. I do not know, for it seems that there is to be no relief by the increase of appropriations. The larger the bulk of the appropriations, the worse the treatment of the great harbors and the less they get. The more money that we expend here, the less the commerce of the United States is benefited.

That, sir, is the complexion of this bill, and I now submit to the motion of the honorable Senator who has charge of this bill, the chairman of the committee. I bow my neck to his saber, and let him decapitate me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. RANSOM. I will simply say what the Senator from Alabama knows well, that we increased the appropriation for Mobile Bay, and came nearer the estimate in that than we did in a large number of harbors in this country. The work to be done is dredging, and $24,000 of former appropriations is unexpended and available for use. But, Mr. President, it is my duty, notwithstanding the very able speech made by the Senator from Alabama on this question, to move to lay his amendment on the table, and I do so.

Mr. MORGAN. Will the honorable Senator allow me a moment of explanation before he does that?

Mr. RANSOM. I will allow the Senator a moment, but I cannot yield for a speech.

Mr. MORGAN. A moment is all that I ask. The increase of the amount of appropriation by the committee is an increase of $10,000, but it is $25,000 short of what it was a year ago, and the request for the increase of the appropriation is only made, I will say to the Senator from North Carolina, to secure the economical expenditure of the money that we must expend, and it can be done more economically by being appropriated at once. I am inclined to economical expenditures.

Mr. RANSOM. If I could have my way, the port of Mobile—and I have given very good evidence of that heretofore—should have enough money to perfect it. We cannot all get all the money we desire. I move to lay the amendment of the Senator from Alabama on the table.

Mr. MORGAN. Now will the honorable Senator from North Carolina allow me to say that I am very sorry he cannot have his own way?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina moves to lay the amendment on the table.

Mr. MORGAN called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered and taken.

Mr. TELLER. As I stated before, I reserved the right to vote on amendments, and I will vote "nay."

Mr. BURNSIDE. My colleague [Mr. ANTHONY] is paired with the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. THURMAN.] If my colleague were here, he would vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 31, nays 11; as follows:

YEAS—31.

So the amendment was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. LOGAN. In line 188 of section 1, I move to strike out "one hundred and fifty" and insert "two hundred;" so as to read:

Improving outside harbor at Chicago, Illinois: Dredging in outer harbor and constructing exterior breakwater, $200,000.

I suppose this amendment will receive the same fate as all other amendments; but I want to show why it should not; at least I want to show the impartiality of this bill. It is not necessary for me to detain the Senate by telling Senators of the importance of Chicago itself as a great city and of its share of the commerce of the country and of the importance of Lake Michigan. The appropriation is $150,000 for dredging the harbor and for extending the breakwater. The Engineer reports that it will take $580,000 to complete this harbor, and that this year they should have $300,000:

The appropriation of $300,000 asked for is to be applied as follows: For dredging the outer harbor, $50,000, and for continuing construction of exterior breakwater, $250,000. With these amounts it is expected to dredge about two hundred thousand cubic yards and to build at least 2,000 linear feet of breakwater.

Mr. HEREFORD. Will the Senator from Illinois allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. LOGAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. HEREFORD. Is he aware of the fact that the Engineer report shows that there was at the date of the report $166,291.96 available for that harbor in addition to the appropriation we are making?

Mr. EATON. Making over three hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. LOGAN. The appropriation that is made now is for the fiscal year commencing the 1st of July next.

Mr. HEREFORD. But there is $166,000 already unexpended.

Mr. LOGAN. For the year commencing the 1st of July, the engineer recommends in his report $300,000 to carry on the work till June 30, 1882. The money that is in the hands of the engineers available will be expended by the 1st of July next. You do not appropriate that because it is not turned into the Treasury until the 30th of June. So there is nothing in that statement. That money is being expended and will be exhausted by the 1st of July.

It is very important that this breakwater should be extended. It has been delayed a great while. Without going into details as to the number of vessels that are lost every year there on account of facilities not being afforded, the papers are full of them all the time. This is an absolute necessity if there is any necessity for a harbor at Chicago, which everybody knows there is.

I do not wish to attack the bill or anybody connected with it, nor do I intend to do so; but I do insist that where there are great harbors like this harbor at Chicago, where there are great interests, where there is a great commerce as there is there, it is at least due to those people that the harbor should be completed as soon as possible. Five hundred and eighty thousand dollars is the estimate for this year, and $300,000 next year would complete the harbor. If you fail now to appropriate anything like the sum asked, if you appropriate only $150,000, that does not near complete it; and it will take three years longer to complete that harbor according to this manner of appropriating money. It does not seem to me that that is wisdom; it certainly does not seem to me that that is economy, but I think it is great injustice.

Mr. RANSOM. Mr. President, I will not take up the time of the Senate to-night to argue each one of these amendments as they come up; I cannot do that well in the time I have. I will simply say in reference to the harbor of Chicago that the same or about the same ratio which has been observed in reference to all the other large harbors of the country between the appropriations and the estimates of the engineers has been observed there. This evening, upon the statement of my friend from Illinois that an increase of appropriation would complete a certain improvement in his State, I at once conceded the principle and asked for the passage of his amendment; but now I must ask the Senate to vote his amendment down, and I move to lay it on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina moves to lay the amendment of the Senator from Illinois on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. LOGAN. I have another amendment. In the appropriation for "improving Ohio River, $350,000," on page 12, I desire to call the attention of the Senate to the language of the clause:

Of which sum $150,000 may, in the discretion of the engineers, be expended on Davis Island Dam, and $200,000 on the river from its mouth to its head: Provided, That $50,000 of the last-named sum may, in the discretion of the engineers, be expended on Indiana Chute.

According to the language of this provision the engineers may expend every dollar of the money that you appropriate, except the $50,000 assigned to Indiana Chute, on Davis Island Dam, and I am not sure but what that is the intention of the committee. If Senators will examine the report of the Engineer in reference to the Ohio River, they will find that he even suggests to Congress the kind of bill that should pass; he even suggests the title of the bill; in fact he intimates to Congress that they do not know anything about it, but must fix up the bill just as he suggests. I think from this bill he probably was correct in that.

Now, I propose that $50,000 of this amount appropriated for the improvement of the Ohio River shall be applied to the work on the Grand Chain. The Grand Chain in the Ohio River is twenty miles above Cairo, a very shallow, rocky bar, on which there has been a considerable amount of money expended and on which a considerable amount more of money will have to be expended in order to make good navigation. It is one of the most important points on the Ohio where work should be begun and completed. The report of the Engineer, which I will not take time to read, suggests that this amount of money would about complete that work; but instead of that the committee provide that all the money except $50,000 may be expended up near Pittsburgh; that is, the money may be expended at the upper end of the river and leave the extreme lower end, within twenty miles of the mouth of the river, without any money whatever for its improvement.

This amendment that I propose does not increase the appropriation one dollar. I merely ask that the amount which is estimated for this Grand Chain, this bar, for building the wings and dam as reported, shall be assigned to that work. It does not increase the appropriation one cent.

Mr. RANSOM. It was the purpose of the committee at one time, upon amendments submitted by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. PENDLETON] and the Senator from Illinois, [Mr. LOGAN,] to make that change in this appropriation; but the committee received a telegram, which I have been looking for but cannot find, the substance of which I remember very distinctly, saying that there was now money appropriated and already applied sufficient to complete the improvement to which my friend from Illinois alludes.

Mr. LOGAN. Appropriated?

Mr. RANSOM. Appropriated in the last bill and now dedicated to that purpose.

Mr. LOGAN. I should like to see a telegram of that kind.

Mr. RANSOM. The telegram is from the engineer in charge of the river, and I wish I could lay my hand on it, for it was that telegram which determined the action of the committee. I am obliged to ask that this amendment may be laid on the table after that explanation.

Mr. LOGAN. Will the Senator please not be in so great haste about laying on the table?

Mr. RANSOM. The Senator from Illinois cannot complain of any want of courtesy on my part to him.

Mr. LOGAN. There is no want of courtesy except in moving to lay the amendment on the table while I have the floor.

Mr. RANSOM. The Senator from Illinois had yielded the floor, and I had made my statement, having been recognized by the Chair.

Mr. LOGAN. On examining the report of the Engineer, in his statement of the amount required, I find nothing showing the amount of money on hand for the purpose of completing that work. I find nothing of that kind.

Mr. RANSOM. But, Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. LOGAN. Certainly.

Mr. RANSOM. This amendment does not affect the general character of the bill. I only state to the Senate what was sent here by the Engineer and what controlled the committee. If the Senate see fit to adopt this amendment—and I am willing to have them vote on it—it does not increase the appropriation; and I may be mistaken.

Mr. LOGAN. I will change the amendment in this way, so as to meet the statement of the Senator.

A sum sufficient of this appropriation shall be expended in continuing the work at Grand Chain Rapids to complete the work.

Is there any objection to that?

Mr. RANSOM. I am willing to have this amendment go in:

Provided, That of this sum an amount not exceeding $50,000 may be applied to Grand Chain, if it will complete the work.

Mr. LOGAN. Do not say "if it will complete the work."

Mr. RANSOM. Well I am willing for it to go in any way.

Mr. LOGAN. If the engineer has that amount of money this will not affect it; but I want at least that much of the amount of money applied to Grand Chain, on the Ohio River.

Mr. RANSOM. To complete the work?

Mr. LOGAN. Certainly, to complete the work.

Mr. RANSOM. Put it in this form; add to the proviso:

And that not exceeding $50,000 of this sum may in the discretion of the engineers be expended on Grand Chain Rapids to complete the work.

Mr. DAWES. I suggest "or so much thereof as may be necessary to complete this work shall be applied."

Mr. RANSOM. Yes, "not exceeding $50,000."

Mr. LOGAN. I am willing to agree to that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment as thus modified.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McDONALD. I should like to know in what form the amendment is adopted.

Mr. BROWN. I have three or four amendments that it is my duty to offer, and I want the yeas and nays on the amendment as to Romerly Marsh. I do not intend to discuss the question further unless it is necessary to say something in reply to some remarks made about it. If the Senate will permit me to have the different amendments read in their order, I will simply ask a vote by sound on each one in order, and not call for the yeas and nays on either.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will send his amendments to the desk and they will be read.

Mr. BROWN. I will send the first one.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed, after line 144 of section 1, to insert:

Improving the navigation of Romerly Marsh, Georgia, to facilitate the navigation of the inland channel by route C to F, by way of Warsaw Island, as reported in the survey and map contained in the engineer's report submitted by the Secretary of War, the sum of $20,000: Provided, The Georgia and Florida Island Steamboat Company will, as proposed by said company, cut the canal and complete the work in accordance with the plan and recommendations of the department of engineers, by which the work is estimated to cost $31,680, the work to be done under the supervision of the department of engineers, and completed in all respects as the plan of improvement recommended by the engineers requires, for the sum of $20,000.

Mr. BROWN. That is the first amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Georgia just read.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. BROWN. Now, in line 138 of section 1 I move to strike out "five" and insert "ten;" so as to read:

Improving harbor of Brunswick, Georgia, $10,000.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. BROWN. Now, in line 544 of section 1 I move to strike out "five" and insert "ten;" so as to make the item read:

Improving Ockmulgee River, Georgia, $10,000.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. BROWN. In line 547 of section 1 I move to strike out "two thousand five hundred" and insert "ten thousand;" so as to read:

Improving Oconee River, $10,000.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. BROWN. In line 552 of section 1 I move to strike out "eight" and insert "fifteen;" so as to read:

Improving Savannah River above Augusta, Georgia, $15,000.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. BROWN. In line 848 of section 1 I move to strike out "fifteen" and insert "forty;" so as to read:

Improving Savannah River, Georgia, $40,000.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. BROWN. In line 856 of section 1 I move to strike out "five" and insert "ten;" so as to read:

Improving the Altamaha River, Georgia, $10,000.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. BAILEY. I move, in line 665 of section 1, to strike out the word "fifteen" and insert "twenty-five;" so as to read:

Improving Cumberland River, below Nashville, Tennessee, $25,000.

I wish to say one word. I will not detain the Senate. I am not encouraged by the action taken to-night to expect that the amendment which I have offered will be adopted; and yet I submit to the chairman and gentlemen of the committee, and to the gentlemen of the Senate, that I hope they will think proper to adopt the amendment. Cumberland River, flowing through the States of Kentucky and Tennessee, is navigable for a distance of five hundred miles. There are shoals upon this river that offer a very serious obstacle to its navigation. I wish to call the attention of the chairman of the committee, and of the gentlemen of the committee, to the fact that the estimate made by the Engineer is for an expenditure this year of $41,000. They have given to us but $15,000.

I need not speak of the commerce on that river, of the value of the exports, of the value of the imports. It flows through the States which I have named, passes by the capital city of our State, with 45,000 inhabitants, one of the most prosperous cities in the South, one of the most progressive in all its industries. This expenditure is absolutely necessary, as I am assured, to secure the navigation of the river, and I trust the Senate will reverse the action that has been taken on the amendments moved by the Senator from Georgia. I ask for but $10,000 additional, and I hope the Senate will not refuse that $10,000 for this improvement. I hope the Senator from North Carolina will not move to lay it on the table, but will let us have a direct vote.

Mr. RANSOM. I am opposed to the amendment, but I am willing that the Senator from Tennessee should have a direct vote upon it, for that takes no longer time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee, [Mr. BAILEY.]

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. SAUNDERS. On page 32, section 1, after the word "dollars," in line 773, I move to add:

Improving Missouri River from Yankton, Dakota, to Kansas City, Missouri, $35,000.

I wish to make just one remark on that subject. I am very certain that the necessity for the improvement of the Missouri River has been overlooked by the committee of the other House, and, I think, by our own committee. I am in favor of liberal appropriations for the improvement of the main rivers of this country, and for the harbors, to keep them in good navigable order. I think it is necessary to keep the rivers open in order to keep the railroads within bounds, so far as their charges are concerned.

I find that from Saint Louis up the Mississippi River—and I have no disposition to complain of the amount appropriated for that river—there is appropriated more than $1,000,000; I think there are five different items, making over one million dollars; while on the Missouri River the whole amount appropriated is less than one-quarter of that sum. From Kansas City to the mouth of the river there has been recommended by the Senate committee $35,000 for the purpose of improving the navigation of the stream, which, as I understand, will be used, or a part of it at least, for the purpose of employing a snag-boat to be used in that part of the river. That is the object we have in view in this amendment. We have a small appropriation for the improvement of the river near some of the larger towns, but nothing to keep the bars open and the snags out between; and for that reason I have asked that $35,000 be appropriated, which shall be used in keeping a snag-boat at work in that part of the river during the navigable season.

If I were to present some figures which I have prepared on this subject, but which I shall not ask to do at this time for want of time, they would astonish many of the Senators who are not familiar with that part of the country. The figures I allude to give the quantity of grain of the different kinds raised the last year in the States of Kansas, Nebraska, Iowa, Dakota, and the northwest part of Missouri. I allude, of course, to that part of the country which lies contiguous to and would furnish business for the transports on the Missouri River. I believe I will ask to have the statement I allude to printed.

Mr. RANSOM. That is right; let the Senator publish the statement.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I will furnish the statement and have it printed at a future time. In order to keep this river open, which is one of the great arteries of commerce for our country, it does seem to me that a reasonable sum should be appropriated. I offer the amendment with some hope of success, and I trust the sum asked for will be granted to us to aid in this necessary work.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska, [Mr. SAUNDERS.]

Mr. RANSOM. I hope the amendment will not be adopted.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. PADDOCK. Now, I propose an amendment which will not cost a dime, but will be in the direction of justice and propriety. In line 756 of section 1 I propose to strike out "Kansas City" and insert "Sioux City;" so that the clause will read as follows:

Improving the Missouri River from Sioux City to its mouth, $35,000.

It is not necessary, after the remarks which have been made by my colleague in reference to the importance of this improvement, to make a speech. I am not going to do that. I have too much regard for the Senate to do that at this time or any other when it is not necessary; but I do say that the application of a portion of this fund ought to be made to that part of the river above Kansas City, between that and Sioux City. The distance from Kansas City to the mouth of the river is about three hundred and fifty miles. The distance from Kansas City to Sioux City is about eight hundred miles, and that is a very important part of the river. All I ask is that this amount may be distributed over the entire distance.

Mr. PLUMB. I ask the Senator from Nebraska if he has made any calculation of the amount that would be per mile—eleven hundred miles at $35,000?

Mr. PADDOCK. That is not essential to the question at the present time. It may be that the engineers or those who are engaged in this work will discover when they come to examine the river that the money had better be applied above rather than below. What I want is that the appropriation may me in such shape that the engineers, in their discretion, may apply it where it seems to be best, that is all, giving all that part of the river above an equal chance with that below.

Mr. PLUMB. I desire to ask the Senator from Nebraska why, if it is to be done according to the estimates of the engineers, and Congress is not to give any direction, we had better not appropriate a lump sum for everything?

Mr. PADDOCK. There is no special estimate in respect to this particular matter. It is simply for the improvement of the river between Kansas City and its mouth. It is in pursuance of a survey which was ordered two or three years ago from Sioux City to the mouth of the river. It does not apply to any special survey from Kansas City to its mouth. It is only in pursuance of a general survey from Sioux City to the mouth of the river.

Mr. PLUMB. But if it is extended according to the judgment of the engineers, why not give it to them at large to expend it as they please in the United States?

Mr. PADDOCK. That question is too absurd to consider.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska, [Mr. PADDOCK.]

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. HAMPTON. Mr. President, I propose to do what nobody else has done heretofore; that is, I propose to withdraw an amendment which I had the honor to submit; but before doing so I wish to say that I do it for two reasons. The amendment to which I refer is one to increase the appropriation for Charleston Harbor, and I take it that no more meritorious appropriation has been offered to this bill or is embodied in it. The Chief Engineer says that he can expend $600,000 with advantage. I proposed to increase the appropriation from $175,000 to $250,000; but I see from the temper of the Senate that no amendments are likely to prevail; and while I think that none could be more important than that harbor, so important on the Atlantic to the great commerce of the West, I propose to withdraw it, not only because it will embarrass the Senate but because I do not wish to embarrass this bill. I realize that this bill, unless it is passed to-night, will fail; and some one has said that true statesmanship is to take the next best thing to that which you want when you cannot get what you want. While I object to a great many things in the bill, I propose to vote for it, and I propose not to embarrass the committee by any action of mine, and I therefore withdraw my amendment.

Mr. LOGAN. I desire, on page 30, after the word "dollars," on line 714 of section 1, to insert the following amendment, which is merely to fix a portion of the appropriation according to the report of the engineers:

Of which sum $50,000 shall be expended in continuing work at Kaskaskia Bend, and $50,000 shall be expended in continuing work and removing obstructions at the foot of Dickey's Island.

If there is objection to this it will take some time, and I can show the Senate that the Engineer's report, which is quite long, in reference to Kaskaskia Bend, which is the first proposition, shows the difficulty of this work, and the necessity of it, and he says in conclusion that $50,000 can be expended this year for protection; it is washing out rapidly. I could describe it by going on at length. I have the maps here; but I do not want to take up time. I have put the amount at $25,000. There has been but $18,000 expended in the work thus far. The Engineer says it will take much more; but "$50,000 could be expended this year to advantage if specially and independently provided." That is exactly what the Engineer says, and so I propose the amendment.

Then, at Dickey's Island, near the junction of the Ohio and Mississippi Rivers, the Engineer makes a report in which he says he desires $50,000 to be expended there during this year. Any gentleman who is conversant with the Mississippi River between the mouth of the Missouri and the mouth of the Ohio well knows that these two places require work more than any other places on the Mississippi River at this time, or as much, at least. Out of the $600,000 I desire but $75,000 to be appropriated in this way; that is, specifically allotted to this purpose. If there is any objection to that, I should like to hear it; if not, I should like to have the amendment agreed to.

Mr. RANSOM. The Senator from Illinois knows very well that I would agree to the amendment if I could with propriety; but these appropriations of $1,000,000 for the Mississippi River below Cairo, and $600,000 for the Mississippi from the mouth of the Ohio to the mouth of the Illinois, are both appropriations under the direction of the Engineer Department. They have recommended that they be put in this form; and if I was to begin to permit one gentleman along the stretch of that river to take certain parts of the appropriations and apply them to particular works along the line, I do no not know where it would end. Every gentleman in Missouri, in Illinois, in Iowa, and all down and up the Mississippi River would propose to apply a certain part of the money to harbors or places in his own State. I think it is a great deal better to leave that matter to the engineers. The Senator knows very well that at the last session an amendment was put on the river and harbor bill creating the Mississippi River commission, and it is on the recommendation of that commission that this appropriation has been made.

Mr. LOGAN. I hope as I have not detained the Senate by reading the report, I shall have at least an opportunity of explaining this amendment which does not increase the appropriation. I ask nothing in the world here except what the engineer has asked. The engineer who has charge of the work says so in his report.

Mr. RANSOM. May I say one word to the Senator? If the engineer in his report has made that recommendation, the Senator from Illinois can safely trust the disposition of this fund to the engineer who has made that recommendation and he will then stand exactly in the same position that the other gentlemen on the Mississippi River do.

Mr. LOGAN. I am the representative of the people of Illinois in part. The Mississippi River washes the shore on which my constituents live, and I take the responsibility as representing that length of the Mississippi River on that side to make this proposition in accordance with the report of the engineers. I know that river as well as the engineers do. I do not see why, if I take the responsibility in accordance with the engineers' report of moving this amendment to affect my constituents all along the river, objection should be made. I do it because it is desired. I am not willing to let these things all be in the hands of the engineers. I have nothing to say about the Engineer Department or the Engineer Corps; but I know something about the influences which operate on men as well as others do, and I am not willing this should be left entirely to the engineer. I want it fixed in the appropriation bill for the reason that he suggested himself that it ought to be there so that the board of engineers cannot overrule it. There is where this amount of work is necessary, absolutely necessary, and I hope the Senate will at least allow the representatives to have some responsibility in these matters.

If you are going to do just as the engineers say why not appropriate the money in bulk and turn it over to them and let them apply it where they please? I notice the Senator is very particular in making the applications down in his own State to certain rivers and certain places. Why not let the engineers do it there on the same principle that you want them to do it in my State? I am responsible for this amendment, and I offer it according to their report, according to their suggestion, and according to the wants of my constituents. It does not increase the appropriation one cent, it only says that so much of it shall be used for purposes which are absolutely necessary instead of being used to advance private property for which a great deal is used at times. This is for the purpose of benefiting the commerce of the river, and I hope the Senate will agree to it.

Mr. RANSOM. We have heard the Senator from Illinois. Now I move to lay the amendment on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina moves to lay the amendment of the Senator from Illinois on the table.

Mr. LOGAN. I ask for the yeas and nays on that motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MCDONALD, (when his name was called.) On this question I am paired with the Senator from Illinois, [Mr. DAVIS,] reserving the right, however, to vote if my vote should be necessary to make a quorum. At present I will not vote.

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. BURNSIDE. My colleague, [Mr. ANTHONY,] is paired with the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. THURMAN.] If my colleague were here, he would vote "yea."

Mr. MCDONALD. I vote "yea" to help make a quorum.

Mr. FERRY. My colleague [Mr. BALDWIN] is paired with the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. MORRILL.]

The result was announced—yeas 28, nays 12; as follows:

So the motion was agreed to.

Mr. GROOME. I offer an amendment that does not add one cent to the amount appropriated by this bill. After line 182 in section 3 I move to insert:

And the Secretary of War is hereby directed to cause to be made by some officer of the United States Engineer Corps examinations and surveys of the lines over the peninsula between the Chesapeake and Delaware Bays which are most likely to prove best for a ship-canal, especially of the two routes designated as the Sassafras and the Choptank routes, and of the approaches thereto, with a view to ascertaining the most feasible route for such a canal between the said bays of the depth of fully twenty-six feet at mean low tide and of one hundred feet wide at bottom throughout its entire length, and to estimate the cost of constructing such a canal and making the approaches thereto of a depth not less than that of said canal.

Mr. RANSOM. That is an amendment ordering a survey, involving no appropriation, and I will not object to it.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CALL. I ask the attention of the chairman of the committee. On page 24, in line 556 of section 1, after the word "Newton," I move to insert "and the channel from the bay to the town of Freeport." It does not change the amount of the appropriation; it is only providing that part of the money shall be expended at the entrance to the river.

Mr. RANSOM. I do not know what change that may be. The appropriation intends to be now for the Choctawhatchee River up to Newton, $10,000, and I cannot admit this amendment.

Mr. CALL. The chairman will allow me to say that it is altogether within my own knowledge that the appropriation simply applies to the bar at the mouth of the Choctawhatchee River.

Mr. RANSOM. I cannot admit the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida, [Mr. CALL.]

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. CALL. On page 24, line 562 of section 1, I move to change the phraseology, so as to read "continuing the improvement of the entrance of the Saint John's River, Florida." The bill as it now reads says "improving Saint John's River, Florida, $100,000." The appropriation recommended by the engineers is for the improvement of the Saint John's River. It is merely a change of phraseology that I propose.

Mr. RANSOM. The amendment the committee passed upon contemplates the improvement of Saint John's River; but, as I understand the amendment now proposed by the Senator from Florida, he would confine the amount to the improvement of the mouth of the Saint John's River.

Mr. CALL. The whole improvement has been at the mouth of the river. The report of the engineers is for the mouth of the river. There is no desire to change it.

Mr. RANSOM. That being so, the engineers will put the money there. I would not like, after the committee have considered this question now, without any opportunity of looking into the whole matter, to accept this amendment. I have no doubt, the facts being as they are stated by the Senator from Florida, the engineers will so expend the money. I must object to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida, [Mr. CALL.]

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. CALL. I desire to say without detaining the Senate that my colleague and myself had proposed to offer an amendment to this bill appropriating $100,000 for the improvement of the bar at the entrance of the Saint John's River. This is of very great importance to the ingoing and outgoing commerce of Saint John's River, amounting to $3,000,000. The estimate by the engineers is $400,000 for the present year. We do not ask this appropriation in deference to the evident desire of the Senate not to amend this bill any further. We have thought it proper to say in regard to that and many other improvements in the State of Florida that they are within the maritime jurisdiction of the United States, and properly the subject of improvement and for which there is most urgent necessity. We refrain from urging the amendments because of the lateness of the hour and the impossibility of passing the bill if it be further amended.

Mr. PLUMB. I desire to offer an amendment in line 6 of section 1, after the word "War," to insert "so far as he may deem the same necessary;" so as to put the expenditure of the appropriations contained in the bill in the discretion of the Secretary of War; and I hope there will be no objection to that amendment. There is a very large amount of money appropriated, and it may be that the condition of the Treasury during the coming year will not be such as to admit of this great expenditure. In addition to that, it has been stated on the floor by friends of the bill time and time again, and it is thoroughly understood to be correct, that the propriety of many of these appropriations is doubtful. They have been put in in the haste accompanying the formation of a bill of this kind; they are put in upon, perhaps, insufficient data. The Secretary of War and the engineers ought to have a discretion to say which ones of these different improvements shall be carried on to the extent named in the bill, and which may properly be omitted. It is not an unusual discretion; it is not a discretion that he will exercise with any partiality, but it is a wise discretion which ought to be vested in that officer, and especially in view not only of the very large amount of money appropriated, but in view of the character of very many of the improvements contemplated by the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. PLUMB. I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. RANSOM. I am so well satisfied that the Senate will not adopt the amendment that I shall have nothing to say about it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas calls for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered and taken.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I desire to state that my colleague [Mr. ANTHONY] is paired with the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. THURMAN.] If my colleague were here, he would vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 4, nays 40; as follows:

YEAS—4.

Dawes,	Logan,	Plumb,	Teller.

NAYS—40.

Bailey,	Davis of W. Va.,	Hill of Georgia,	Pugh,

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. PADDOCK. I move, in lines 756 and 757 of section 1, to strike out "improving Missouri River from Kansas City to its mouth, $35,000" and to insert in the place thereof the words "improving Missouri River from Sioux City to its mouth, $60,000."

That is simply allowing to that part of the river north of Kansas City to Sioux City, eight hundred miles nearly, $25,000; $35,000 being allowed for that part of the river below Kansas City, between that and its mouth. This embraces the greater part of the river upon which now is carried on the proper commerce of the river. The river, nevertheless, is navigable 3,000 miles. It is the largest navigable river of all, and yet the smallest appropriations of all is made for this river. It drains the most extensive and the most fertile valley in this country, which yields an enormous surplus of grain, which is shipped to the South and West. I think it is nothing more than right and proper under the circumstances that this amendment should prevail.

Mr. PLUMB. I hope this amendment will be adopted. It is entirely proper that this river should receive some recognition; but my friend from Nebraska has overlooked the principle of this bill. He complains that the large rivers are neglected. That is for a very obvious reason. Where there is water and there are facilities for boating appropriations are not necessary. Where there is no water and consequently the greater room for the exercise of the engineer's art, various plans must be resorted to for making channels, and of course it is necessary that appropriation should there be made.

Mr. VEST. I do not know how the Senator from Kansas voted on the last year's river and harbor bill, but I think he voted for it. My impression is that he voted for it with myself. That bill gave to the Mississippi River $100,000 for general improvement. This bill gives $1,600,000, and yet the Senator from Kansas says large rivers are not in this appropriation bill. That is all I desire to say.

Mr. PADDOCK. But this bill gives to the Missouri River, all told, less than $300,000; very little more than we allow for the Illinois River, which is altogether in one State and not three hundred miles long.

Mr. VEST. This $35,000 from Kansas City to the mouth of the Missouri River might be of some benefit. Scattered along eight hundred miles further up the river it would not be so.

Mr. PADDOCK. The Senator does not understand the amendment as now proposed. My amendment is to strike out the word "Kansas City" and insert "Sioux City" and to increase the aggregate appropriation from $35,000 to $60,000.

Mr. RANSOM. I must stop debate on this matter. Everybody knows that if I were to let my friend, the Senator from Missouri, once get his say here, and my friend from Nebraska, and my friend from Kansas, I could not hold this bill. I move to lay the amendment on the table.

Mr. PADDOCK. I call for the yeas and nays on that.

Mr. RANSOM. I will not make the motion to lay on the table, but will let the vote be taken on the amendment directly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina withdraws his motion and the question recurs on the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska, [Mr. PADDOCK.]

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There was an amendment offered by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] which was laid on the table until that part of the bill was reached on page 41.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 41, after line 988 it is proposed to insert:

Provided, That the President of the United States is hereby authorized and requested to make such deductions from the respective appropriations herein provided for as shall amount in the aggregate to the sum of $4,000,000, and these deductions shall be made in such amount in each case as in the judgment of the President will best serve the public interest in advancing the most necessary improvements.

Mr. RANSOM. I move to lay that amendment on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. TELLER. I move to strike out the third section of this bill, and on that I desire to say a word or two. The third section is the section which provides for the examination and survey of all small streams in the country which have not already been surveyed and appropriated for.

Several years ago when these bills were before Congress they were kept within reasonable proportions; but after a little it became a custom to add to each bill a provision like this third section, that all the streams in the country should be examined, and the engineers report the result of their examinations and surveys. Whenever these examinations are made and the reports come in here, it seems that the Committee on Commerce of both branches consider that there is a direction to them to proceed to put them in the appropriation bill and provide for carrying on the work, no matter how absurd, no matter how impossible it may be of practical execution. When they come to the committee the committee put them in the bill; then when they report the bill to the Senate it is considered to be a full and complete vindication of the bill to say that the Engineer has so reported.

I desire to take back what I said in part, because I said it hastily and I do not want to do any injustice. I said that this committee had not come up to the Engineer's estimates. When I said so I had not given this bill that critical examination upon that subject which I ought to have done. I find that in two or three instances they have come up to the estimates, and in addition to that I find that they have in a few instances gone beyond the estimates. It is a remarkable circumstance that in every case, so far as I know, where they have come up to the estimates, it has been where a member of the committee resides in the State in which the improvement was to be made. I do not desire to say anything that looks like a reflection on the committee; I know how much pressure there is on the committee, and I have a great regard for the members of the committee, especially some of them who are sitting here very near me; but it is a little remarkable that they never should be able to reach the estimates in any State that was not blessed and honored with a member on the committee; and it is a little astonishing that in the two instances where they exceed the amount, in one $5,000 and in the other $10,000, it should be in the State of the honorable chairman of the committee.

On looking at the bill more carefully and comparing it with the estimates sent to Congress by the Secretary of the Treasury, I find several items provided for in this bill which are not provided for in the estimates. I find in the State of North Carolina that while the estimates submitted to Congress upon which we are supposed to be acting proposed for improving the Cape Fear River from Wilmington to Fayetteville $20,000, the committee report $30,000. Then I find:

Improving Currituck Sound, Coanjok Bay, North River and Bar, North Carolina, $30,000.

While the estimate sent to Congress was $20,000.

Mr. VANCE. What sound?

Mr. TELLER. The item is on page 22, lines 509 and 510. Then following on down the page I find on line 523 and further on three items, one for Contentnia Creek, $10,000; Beaufort Harbor, $30,000; and Lillington River, $3,000. I do not know, but I presume that some engineer has some time made an estimate for these.

Mr. LOGAN. Will the Senator allow me a suggestion in reference to that?

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. LOGAN. I may be mistaken, but it strikes me this is the way of it: they have appropriated more than the engineers estimated, for the intention was to have money to condemn the land upon which the river is to be made.

Mr. TELLER. I rose principally for information for myself; I did not expect to impart any to anybody, but I am glad of the suggestion.

I find that there is $15,000 over the estimates in these items, and I find here $33,000 on one page not estimated for at all. Then I find on the next page another item of $1,000 that I was unable to discover any estimate for. It is barely possible that some engineer who straggled off down there has made a suggestion that these were good streams upon which the Government could spend its money. We have been now four or five years pursuing this particular course. We have run our appropriation bills so high that I think there is a paucity now of streams upon which the science of the Engineering Department can be exerted, and I think possibly that somewhere in some engineer's report there may be an estimate, but there is certainly none in the estimates submitted to Congress.

The Senator from Illinois suggests that perhaps this money is appropriated to condemn the land. I think it likely that that is so. We appropriated a large amount of money to a stream up in West Virginia a few years ago, and soon after the honorable Senator, who is one of the Committee on Commerce, [Mr. HEREFORD,] came to the Senate with a bill, and I believe he passed it, to pay for the land on which the Government had built this river, where they had dug a channel for it to run in when the heavens let it down water in sufficient quantity. That is about a sample of this whole bill. I know that Senators sit here to-night and say it is not worth while to talk about it; but when a claim comes here representing an honest man who has put his money into the coffers of the Government, I have seen the Senate spend a day rather than pay $10,000 or $15,000 of money that was honestly due a citizen of the United States for fear there was some waste of the public funds, some wrong to the taxpayers; but here if the Senate was put upon its oath there would be a majority who would have to admit that there is more than one-half of this bill that is an absolute waste, and in my judgment in utter violation of the constitutional power of the Senate. I do not believe that wherever there is a little branch that does not run to tide-water, and will not float more than a canoe, the Senate has the moral or legal right to vote the money of the people of the United States to that.

But I am not disposed to talk for the sake of delaying this bill. I know that it is to pass, but I want the country to understand that this thing will eventually do as has been suggested, break down the system; it will compel the American people to abandon all internal improvements.

I know that the democratic party here to-night is almost solid for this kind of a proceeding. I know that in the face of their history and in the face of their professions, in the face of their declarations made again and again at their conventions and at almost every one, the whole democratic party pretty much is solid for this bill, and a very large and respectable majority on our side is in the same way. The fact is they have all got a little of this pork, and that is what is the matter. They have all got a finger in this bill. It is not pleasing to say it, but nevertheless if it was not so the bill would not pass.

Senators say Colorado has not got anything in the bill. Mr. President, Colorado does not want anything in the bill. There are streams in Colorado that are as much entitled to the assistance of the Government as a majority of the streams in this bill, and if you want to build reservoirs and fish-ponds at the head of the Mississippi River or its tributaries, that is the country to build them, where nature has provided natural reservoirs and where the water could be utilized for the purpose of making the desert blossom like the rose. But nothing of the kind is intended and nothing is asked in that way by the Representatives from that State. Take the river that runs from the Missouri into the heart of Colorado that is as susceptible of navigation as half of these streams—and you cannot float a saw-log through that more than half the year—and if that was here with a big bonus it would not make any difference to me.

These appropriations are not of the character that benefit the country, and the country is not a bit better off when you have got through with all of this outlay of money than if you had put it in the fire. If we come here and propose for the benefit of the whole country a scheme to educate the children, we are met by the very Senators who are now contending for this outrageous outlay of money, first with a constitutional objection, and then, if we overcome that, we should be met with the suggestion that the people could not afford this great outlay of public money even for so beneficent a purpose as that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. HARRIS in the chair.) The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Colorado, [Mr. TELLER.]

Mr. RANSOM. I move to lay the amendment on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

Mr. THURMAN. Mr. President, when I was a boy there was some firing of cannon in my town one day when I was on my way to school; I inquired what that firing of cannon meant, and I was told that the democrats were firing at the news about General Jackson's veto of the Maysville road bill. That road passed through the town in which I lived, and yet the democracy of that town were so much in favor of the principles of that veto that they fired cannon over it.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. Will the Senator from Ohio allow me to say that the trouble with his argument is that there has been a good deal of cannon fired since that date.

Mr. THURMAN. Yes, there has been; and now, Mr. President, that veto message which received the approbation of the whole democracy of the United States has fallen into such disgrace that we are told the democracy of the United States must make a new departure, that they must quit the old straight-laced notions of the fathers, and that they must go for what is called a liberal policy, and vote away just as much money from the national Treasury as their votes can effect.

Mr. President, I am an old man and an old democrat, and I cannot train in these new ways. I cannot agree that the Treasury of the United States shall become a Treasury of communism. Political economists have found much difficulty in ascertaining what is the annual product of the earth, but they have found immense difficulty in fixing how that annual product is to be distributed. If the Congress of the United States is to become the chief agent in distributing the annual product of the United States; if it is to tax not the wealthy men of the country, for all taxes really come in the end from the producing classes of the country; if it is to take their hard earnings and distribute them according to the interests of members of the other House and of Senators in Congress; if we are to have this kind of communism, let us know it. "I'll none of it."

This bill is not a right bill; every member on this floor, I believe, feels that it is not a right bill. Sir, I am in favor of a bill that shall appropriate money properly and rightly to benefit the commerce of this country; but I am not in favor of a bill that appropriates money for the improvement of streams where a tadpole could scarcely wriggle. I am not in favor of benefiting Mr. A B's chance for re-election to the House of Representatives by voting for a bill that improves some tadpole stream in his district or some other stream so that a catfish can swim in it.

Mr. President, this whole thing is anti-democratic and against the teachings of the fathers. When I say "anti-democratic" I ought to correct myself. No man, democrat, federalist, or whig, ever supported such a bill as this——

A SENATOR. What about the republicans?

Mr. THURMAN. Well, they have changed the Constitution so that I do not know what they do not support.

I am not to be very long here; a very few days will end my political career forever; and I wish to leave this Senate with the kindest feelings for every member of the body, and I do most sincerely desire that I may, and when I make these remarks I know that I run counter to the opinions of men whom I dearly love and who I believe love me in return; but I wanted to say before I leave the Senate a few words of soberness and truth, and therefore I have said what I have.

Mr. RANSOM. Mr. President, the Senate knows me too well to fear for one second that I intend to prolong this debate, for I am very anxious to have a vote. ["Vote!" "Vote!"] Only one word. I have before me a memorandum of seven river and harbor bills, amounting in all to over six million dollars, approved from 1830 to 1837 by Andrew Jackson. I have high democratic authority when I show my friend that I can answer him to-night by his vote on this bill at the last Congress. Then he voted for the river and harbor bill, I am very happy to say. If I can give any better democratic authority in this world than Andrew Jackson and the Senator from Ohio, I do not know where to find it.

Mr. THURMAN. The Senator, I think, is entirely mistaken when he says I voted for the last river and harbor bill.

Mr. RANSOM. No, sir, I am not mistaken.

Mr. THURMAN. I think the Senator is.

Mr. RANSOM. I would not dispute anything with the Senator.

Mr. THURMAN. I voted—and I shall beg to be pardoned for it—for a good many of these bills, but I think I was not guilty of the crime of voting for the last one.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole. Shall the vote be taken in gross or separately? ["In gross!"]

Mr. TELLER. Separately.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If a separate vote is demanded, the vote must be taken separately. Is a separate vote demanded on any of the amendments?

Mr. PLUMB. The last amendment, striking out section 3.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Chair understand the Senator from Kansas to suppose that section 3 was stricken out?

Mr. PLUMB. No; I desire to reserve the amendment moved by the Senator from Colorado to strike out section 3.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It has gone and cannot be reserved. That is not the report of the Committee of the Whole. It has been laid on the table in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. PLUMB. Then it will be in order to renew that motion in the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. When the Senate has acted on the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole, the bill will be open to amendment.

Mr. PLUMB. A motion to strike out that section can be made then?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will act upon that question when the time for it comes.

Mr. INGALLS. I should like to understand about that. That amendment was acted upon in Committee of the Whole, and the question ought to be determined now whether my colleague can reserve a vote upon that, or whether it can be renewed subsequently.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has held and continues to hold that the amendment proposing to strike out the third section having been laid upon the table is not an amendment now pending in the Senate. When the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole have been acted upon by the Senate, the bill will be in the Senate and open to any amendment that would be ordinarily in order under the rules of the Senate. The question is on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendments were concurred in.

Mr. PLUMB. I move to strike out all of the third section except the last line. I want to save White Oak River in North Carolina, and therefore will not move to strike that out. It is the last line of the section.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The section the Senator from Kansas proposes to strike out is five or six pages long. Is the reading of the section demanded? ["No!" "No!"] Will the Senate agree to the motion of the Senator from Kansas to strike out the third section with the exception of the last line?

Mr. PLUMB. I do not care to discuss again, and especially at any great length, the objections to the third section advanced by the Senator from Colorado. I desire, however, to call attention to the remarks made by the Senator from Missouri, in which he rather impeached my consistency, because, he said, I had voted for the last river and harbor bill, which had very little in it for the improvement of the Mississippi River, and was now opposing one which had a great amount in it for the improvement of that stream. I hope I shall not be subject to the charge of voting for or against a bill because it may have more or less in it of the things which I may have or be assumed to have some personal interest in.

This bill has in it some considerable appropriation for the improvement of the Mississippi River, and a comparatively small one for the improvement of the Missouri River. The improvement of both these streams is a matter of great consequence to the State of Kansas; but it is not of sufficient consequence, as I think, to induce me, in deference to the wishes of the people of that State, to vote for a large number of appropriations which I know are not proper to be made; and when I say I know they are not proper to be made I am re-enforced by the statements which have been made privately and more or less publicly by a large number of the supporters of this bill, who say, "Just give us this bill this year, and next year we will make a better one." I never knew so good a time to commence reform as the present; but it is not in the hope that any reform will be made that I am addressing the Senate. I desire to record my vote against the passage of a bill which appropriates three or four million dollars to improve streams which are of no account for navigation or for any kind of commerce whatever, and to say that if the amount for the Mississippi River were doubled or were quadrupled my opinion would still be the same.

In addition to that this appropriation for the improvement of the Mississippi River, as I construe it—and I shall have ample evidence before the Senate reassembles again—is not for the improvement of the Mississippi River at all. It is for the erection of levees along that stream, notwithstanding there is a statement here which might seem to admit of another construction. That is not for the benefit of commerce so much as it is to improve somebody's private property. It is not only to improve somebody's private property, but it is to improve a class of property for which Congress has heretofore made large subsidies in land. It is not intended or designed in any way to aid or add to the navigability of the Lower Mississippi. It has only this scope and perhaps no other, namely, the improvement of the swamp lands lying upon the lower part of that stream. That is what we are coming to. That was the intention of the constitution of the Mississippi River commission, and it is simply a part of the flower, the fruit of the institution of that commission that we are appropriating this year $10,000,000; and I shall be surprised next year if we do not have a bill here for the appropriation of $20,000,000. This thing grows by what it feeds upon. A combination made this year embracing certain streams notoriously not navigable, not to be found on any map of the United States, not to be found on any local map whatever, is susceptible of indefinite enlargement.

Mr. THURMAN. Or in any gazetteer.

Mr. PLUMB. Or in any gazetteer, or in the imagination of any man except some one on this floor or elsewhere who has made the suggestion whereby the committee was induced to act in putting that in the bill.

This matter might just as well be met now as at any other time. It is better to meet a bill that has $10,000,000 in it than one with $20,000,000. A bill that has $20,000,000 in it is twice as strong as one that has $10,000,000, and next year it will be $20,000,000, and the combination grows. I have some reason to suppose, at least I imagine, that there might have been something added for the State of Kansas in this bill, for when men get to be liberal with somebody else's money the addition of a few thousand dollars more or less does not amount to a great deal.

Here we are providing for a new crop of appropriations next year. I ask the Senator from Missouri, who is deeply interested in the river which gives its name to his State, and in the Mississippi, which is a part of that great water-way, if he thinks that the appropriation for a permanent improvement of that great stream is to be enhanced by putting in here eighty streams to be surveyed and reported upon by surveyors next year; not Government engineers, not men now in the employ of the Government and resting under any obligations to the Government, but men employed in the locality for the purpose, interested by reason of their local relations and interest in making and reporting to Congress as large an amount of money as they can for the improvement in order to induce Congress to take the first step; and it is the first step that costs.

There has never been a case where an improvement has been started that it is not continued. It has rarely been the case where one was started and continued that it ever has stopped. Here are eighty-four new subjects of expenditure in the next river and harbor bill provided for. There is no question but that every one of these will turn up in the next bill, and I submit now to the committee that they have taxed the patience of the Senate a good deal. They will find, I think, that they have taxed the patience and the good-will and the common sense and judgment of the people of the United States a good deal, and I submit to them if it is not a good time to stop and to have this section stricken out, so that they can say that at least they have not laid out work for the future.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Will the Senator permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. PLUMB. I will do so with pleasure.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. If this authority is given to the Engineer Department to make new surveys, is there no possibility of a hope that there will be adverse reports?

Mr. PLUMB. I am very thankful to the Senator from Florida for having asked me that question. I think there is no hope for an adverse report. I think that the Engineer Corps and all other corps under the employ of the Government or elsewhere, commissioned as these will be, will do as Paul did—magnify their office. They will report in favor of the appropriation of money for the purpose of improving all these streams. The report which I had before me a few minutes ago recommends the appropriation of hundreds of thousands of dollars for the purpose of securing a maximum depth of water in small streams of twelve inches, and that only water which can be used for navigation one way; to wit, down stream. There is no expectation that the boat that goes down it can ever go back, and there is no expectation that any boat can ever go down it except it goes down pushed by poles. In fact, the words "raft and push-boat navigation" are used. In other words, the maximum expectation is a channel of twelve inches, and I think in one case ten inches, and the maximum and only kind of navigation expected is raft navigation, and down-river navigation at that.

I think there ought to be some stopping-place somewhere, and I think section 3 is a good place to stop. I was in hopes that the motion of the Senator from Colorado would have been adopted, and that the committee would be willing to say that the improvements provided for in the body of the bill were sufficient, and that this new crop of expenditures for next year would not be thus anticipated and provided for.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Will the Senate agree to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas, [Mr. PLUMB?]

Mr. TELLER. Let us have the yeas and nays on that.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BURNSIDE, (when Mr. ANTHONY's name was called.) My colleague [Mr. ANTHONY] is paired with the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. THURMAN.] If my colleague were here, he would vote "nay."

Mr. LOGAN, (when the name of Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois, was called.) I desire to state that my colleague [Mr. DAVIS] is paired on this bill with the Senator from Louisiana, [Mr. KELLOGG.]

Mr. TELLER, (when the name of Mr. HILL, of Colorado, was called.) My colleague [Mr. HILL] is paired upon this bill with the Senator from Iowa, [Mr. ALLISON.] I do not know how my colleague would vote upon this question. He is opposed to the whole bill, and presume he would vote to strike out.

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. FERRY. I desire to state that my colleague [Mr. BALDWIN] paired with the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. MORRILL.] If my colleague were here, he would vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 12, nays 35; as follows:

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. TELLER. I now move to strike out, commencing on the four hundred and seventh line, page 18, all of that page and down to and including the word "passes," in the four hundred and thirty-fifth line, on the nineteenth page. I want to say a word or two upon the amendment.

I am appealed to by Senators who say they want to vote. I do not like to detain the Senate, but I do not propose that this system shall be commenced without putting upon record my protest. I expect to live to see the day when every Senator who votes for it will regret his vote. I expect to see the day when the people who are interested in the honest administration of public affairs in connection with improvements will regret everywhere the adoption of this principle, because, as I said with reference to another subject, I believe it will eventually break down the river-improvement system in this country; and it cannot be carried out, the expense will be so great.

I desire to call the attention of the Senate to what this proposition is. It is nothing more nor less than because we have appointed a commission who went out to report upon a system of creating water, you may say, or creating permanent banks, if you choose, for the Mississippi River, and they have made a report to the Senate, we are bound because they made that report to accept it and to enter upon a system that they have recommended. I find that this commission made a report which is alluded to in the bill. The bill says:

For the improvement of the Mississippi River, in accordance with the plan therefor recommended in Executive Document No. 58, second session Forty-sixth Congress, by the Mississippi River commission.

I hold in my hand the document; and I want to say for myself—I am not responsible for the establishment of that commission—that while I have great respect for some members of the commission, while I believe if we are to send out a commission of men to adopt a system of leveeing the Mississippi River they are as capable as any men that can be sent out, yet because they are good engineers and honest men I am not in favor of entering upon this great wild scheme of expenditures for private purposes and not for public good.

I said before that this was a private affair. I am anxious not to detain the Senate too long, but I propose to read from the report of the commission, and I think it will convince everybody that while this commission are in favor of this scheme, the majority of them are compelled to admit that it is a private enterprise, and the minority, two respectable engineers, stamp the whole thing with their condemnation. I find in this report the following:

While it is not claimed that levees in themselves are necessary as a means of securing ultimately a deep channel for navigation, it is believed that the repair and maintenance of the extensive lines already existing will hasten the work of channel improvement through the increased scour and depth of river bed which they would produce during the high-river stages. They are regarded as a desirable, though not a necessary, adjunct—

Mark the words—

They are regarded as a desirable though not a necessary adjunct in the general system of improvement submitted.

It is obvious that levees are, upon a large portion of the river, essential to prevent destruction to life and property by overflow. They give safety and ease to navigation and promote and facilitate commerce and trade by establishing banks or landing places above the reach of floods, upon which produce can be placed while awaiting shipment, and where steamboats and other river craft can land in times of high water.

In a restricted sense as auxiliary to a plan of channel improvement only, the construction and maintenance of a levee system is not demanded. But in a larger sense, as embracing not only beneficial effects upon the channel, but as a protection against destructive floods, a levee system is essential; and such system also promotes and facilitates commerce, trade, and the postal service.

Mr. President, we are entering upon a system of public improvements that if it is carried out to its legitimate and logical conclusion will compel us to go to work and build railroads in every part of this country where there is commerce to be transported. The same argument can be made with full force to Congress that it should build railroads all over this country that can be made for this system of leveeing the Mississippi River. It facilitates commerce. It facilitates, says the commission, the postal service. So it does, and so does a railroad, and so do a thousand schemes that can be devised for plundering the Treasury and taking the money that is wrung from the taxpayers and wasting it, as 90 per cent. of it is frequently wasted and as always a very large per cent. is wasted when it is intrusted to distribution at the hands of Government officials.

Let us go a little further with this report, for this is the report of the commission, these are the advocates of the system; this is the commission that the Senate say to-day has instructed them virtually to make this legislation:

A levee system aids and facilitates the postal service by protecting from injury and destruction by freshets and floods the various common roads and railways upon which that service is conducted to and from the river bank, and generally within that portion of the alluvial region subject to overflow. Moreover, the permanent maintenance below Cairo of a connected levee system, a system of sufficient strength to inspire confidence in its efficiency, or the demonstration, by the achieved results of an improved river, that overflow need no longer be seriously apprehended, would act as a prompt and powerful stimulant in rapidly developing a largely increased trade and commerce in all the products of agricultural industry indigenous to that region, and in those branches of manufacturing enterprise related thereto.

There is the whole thing admitted by the commission. We are starting upon an enterprise that the commission of the Government say for two hundred miles and less than two hundred miles requires now $5,133,000, and the Government engineers in 1875 placed it at the lowest estimate at $5,000,000.

I think it is well enough for the Senate to vote money for legitimate purposes; but nobody can cover himself with any degree of self-respect and say he votes that $1,000,000 for the Mississippi River for the benefit of commerce.

When the honorable Senator from Missouri, who has great interests in this noble highway, as all the people of the Northwest have, spoke of the money that was appropriated to the Mississippi River, I noticed that he said it was $1,600,000, ignoring this million dollars altogether, for he knew, as every sensible man knew, that not a dollar of it could under any honest pretense be claimed to be expended for the benefit of commerce. If it is the purpose of the dominant party in the Senate now to go to work and levee the banks of the Mississippi River, let them come square to the front like honest men and say so.

Let them say that they propose now to protect private property up and down that great river at the public expense, for it appears by the very report of the majority, and it is especially asserted by the minority of the commission, that not a dollar of this sum can be claimed to be in the interest of commerce. If the people of the United States are prepared now to indorse a scheme that will take $1,000,000,000 before it is through from the public Treasury, it is well and good, if the majority have overcome their conscientious scruples as to their authority to donate the public funds for such a purpose; but I think it ought to be fairly and perfectly understood that this is not in the interest of commerce, and the commission do not claim it is, except they say it will facilitate commerce by protecting the railroads and by protecting the dirt roads up and down that river. When you carry out this argument to its legitimate conclusions, then we shall be called upon to protect every highway in the United States that runs up the side of a river provided there shall be upon it a postal service.

This is an iniquitous measure under the cover and pretense of assisting the commerce, but really for the purpose of leveeing that great river, and that, too, by adopting a system that some of the best engineers in the world declare will eventually in a few years prove disastrous to the people dwelling on its banks. I myself believe that there is no way in the world to ultimately destroy the Mississippi Valley so certainly as to levee its banks, and thus fill up the bed of that great river. It is not in the interest of commerce, and, in my honest judgment, it is not in the interest of the men living on its banks. There are other methods by which the waters can be kept from overflowing plantations and the railroads adjoining and the dirt roads besides these. The whole thing is, I say again, not only injurious to commerce, but injurious to the dwellers upon the banks of that great river.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, as a matter of course at this hour I do not propose to discuss the bill, but the Senator from Colorado either misunderstood me greatly or else I did not clearly understand myself. I stated to the Senator from Kansas that $1,016,000 was appropriated by this bill for the improvement of the Mississippi River. I repeat that assertion. The last river and harbor bill gave to the Mississippi River $100,000 for general improvements, and this bill gives to that great national highway sixteen times as much.

The statement of the Senator from Kansas and the Senator from Colorado that this bill is a covert attempt to improve private property with public money is gratuitous and unfounded. There is not a scintilla of fact in this bill or anything in this report which goes to substantiate that statement. The bill provides upon its face, if ordinary candor is given to the committee, that no portion of this money appropriated for levees shall be used to levee lands in order to protect them from overflow. It is true that the Mississippi River commission reported in favor of closing up the gaps in certain levees, amounting to $1,016,000, and that upon the familiar principle of the jetty system to meet the escape of water from the channel of the river, in order to deepen the channel to increase the navigability of this great stream.

I do not choose that it shall go to the country and to my people especially in the West that I sat here silently and permitted these charges to be made without denying them. I vote for this bill because it will enable the farmers of the great Northwest, the granary of this country, to compete with the world. It will enable us to carry to Liverpool for eight cents less upon the bushel the corn and wheat which are produced upon our vast fields. It will enable them by the 1st of July next to put barges upon the Mississippi River which will export 5,000,000 bushels of wheat and corn to England. It will enable us to use tugs to carry, as one did recently, into the port of New Orleans at one single trip enough corn and enough wheat to fill 1,500 cars upon the railroad. It will enable us more than that to break the monopoly of the railroad system which grinds the northwestern farmers into the dust whenever they have held them at their mercy on account of low water in the Mississippi River. If we are able to break down the railroad monopolies of this country it is by utilizing the bounty of God in this great system that connects the lakes with the Gulf. That is the reason why I shall vote for the bill.

The Senator from Ohio, my honored friend and the honored leader of the party to which I have the honor to belong, has seen proper to say that this bill is supported from personal and interested motives to keep Representatives and Senators in office. I shall not answer that charge as I would answer it if it came from any other quarter. I stand here to-night representing the interests of my people. I know the Senator from Ohio at the last session when he put his vote on record for a much more objectionable river and harbor bill than this, for this bill gives to this great river, the "Father of Waters," in which is buried the body of De Soto, a larger appropriation sixteen times, and opens communication to the sea and gives a free way and a free progress to the vast productions of our fields in the Northwest.

If the bill contained no other provision than that I should vote for it. If there is any object of my political life, it is the improvement of that river. If there is any object in which the people of the great Northwest, and especially of the State of Missouri, are unanimous without political distinction it is the improvement of the Mississippi River, and that clause alone of this bill entitles it to the support, in my judgment, of every patriot. Whatever may be said of these catfish and tadpole rivers, as they have been termed, there ought to be no difference of opinion in regard to the Mississippi. It is the property of the whole people, the people of all the States of this great Union. It belongs to no State, with its four thousand miles of shore; with its ten States tributary giving their productions to its bosom. It belongs to the people, and the people of every State should seek to improve it. It is for that reason I support this bill.

Mr. WALLACE. Mr. President, I have said nothing upon this bill up to this time, but I cannot vote for it; it contains provisions which are utterly against my belief, my teaching, and, I believe, against the interests of my people. I think that I have voted for but one river and harbor bill during the six years I have been in the Senate. I shall not vote for this bill, for it is double the size of many that I have voted against. It is enormous in its proportions. Every inlet on the coast and on the lakes and every mountain stream in certain localities are to be improved; money is to be expended upon them to begin the work or improvements are to be continued or a survey is to be made, and to do all these the money of the people is taken in millions and devoted to what I think is an improper and unlawful use.

The third section in the bill is the entering-wedge to vast expenditures in the future. It has been so in the past. It opens a vista before us of enormous expenditures by the Federal Government for the improvement of many mountain streams that ought to be, that have been, and in my view ought to continue to be exclusively under State control.

I do not believe that the people of Pennsylvania want the Federal Government to aid us to improve the Susquehanna, although it flows through the State from New York to Maryland, for it is not naturally navigable, but it is a great stream in which a hundred millions might be expended in a system of slack-water navigation and dams, and it could be thus utilized to bring to tide-water our lumber, our coal, our minerals of every kind, and our grain. But it is almost totally within the State; it is not navigable in a national sense; it is not in its natural condition capable of ascending trade, and it is not navigable in the sense of the commercial powers of the Constitution, and our people have never come here to ask its improvement by Congress. The State has exercised jurisdiction over it, has made grants of water-power from it, erected dams upon it, and vested rights have grown up under this jurisdiction that congressional control would destroy.

The third section of the bill is the entering-wedge to large expenditure as it has been in the past. Every State and Territory in the Union was represented in the bill of last year except Alaska, and is, I believe, also in this one. Every locality seems represented annually in the river and harbor bill, a survey ordered upon streams in every locality for the useful end that votes may be had for the bill, and that too without regard to the national value of either the stream or the improvement. Step follows step in the process of securing votes and money.

Let us examine the surveys ordered by river and harbor bills since 1870. Take up the figures of these bills, and we find that from 1870 to 1880 there have been six hundred and eighteen surveys ordered by these bills, and this bill adds nearly sixty more. In 1873 there were but twenty-eight surveys, but last year the bill ordered one hundred and eighteen. They are entering-wedges, the hand is drawn in by this process, and the body follows. The survey ordered, then the engineers go upon the ground, then the estimates come, and then follow bills for the money, such as the present one, and thus the gross amount increases and the money of the people is lavishly expended.

The number of surveys ordered since 1870 is as follows:

By act of—
July 11, 1870	63
March 3, 1871	52
June 10, 1872	53
March 3, 1873	28
June 10, 1874	63
March 3, 1875	46
August 14, 1876	1
June 18, 1878	97
March 3, 1879	97
1880	118
Total	618

What is this process? It is simply each man fighting for his own locality and not for the good of the whole. Each man cares for himself and his own locality in place of standing by that which is plainly national, and abiding by the teaching of the fathers and the meaning and letter of the Constitution.

I make no charge that men seek by this process to have money expended for personal gain; but I say that each Senator and each Member cares for his own locality and forgets the general good, and the bill and its passage comes to be a log-rolling process in the highest sense. In the past it had got to be the rule that these bills passed without permission for debate or scrutiny, but this one is an exception. This bill was debated in the House, and it has been debated here, and I am glad to see even this progress. Yet it is fated to be passed, and it seems to me that it is a truism that the meaner the bill is, the bigger it is, the surer it is to pass.

If we take up the reports of the engineers we find that in 1870 there were but 635 pages of reports made by them, while in 1880 there were 2399 pages of reports from the engineers, making nearly four times as many in 1880 as there were in 1870, and this with a democratic Congress half the time.

Then watch the growth of expenditures. In 1870 the bill was about $2,000,000; in 1871, under $4,000,000; in 1872, a trifle over $4,000,000; in 1873, $5,500,000; in 1874, $6,000,000; in 1875, when we came into power, $5,218,000, there being a spasm of economy; in 1876 it was $6,643,000; in 1877 we got it back again to $5,000,000; in 1878 there was no appropriation; in 1879 it swelled itself to $8,200,000; in 1880 it was $7,800,000; and in 1881, that is for the current year, about $9,000,000; and to-day it swells itself to between $11,000,000 and $12,000,000.

Mr. KERNAN. Eleven millions and a half.

Mr. TELLER. Eleven millions and about six hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. WALLACE. On the legal aspect of the subject, I shall quote what I said before when a bill of this character was up:

> Our power to make these appropriations comes from the power in the Constitution "to regulate commerce among the States." "Commerce among the States" are the words of the Constitution. As I understand the authorities, commerce means and includes navigation; commerce among the States means and includes intercourse between them. Navigation, as applied to this clause, means as well ascending as desending navigation. Without both the stream is not a navigable water of the United States. Intercourse means not commerce and traffic simply from one State by a water-course at its flood into another without the power and means of returning, but also an opportunity for the productions of that other State to traverse the highway and carry its products to market. A navigable highway is a water which possesses the capacity of ascending as well as of descending.
> Intercourse means interstate traffic. When we find a river that has at its flood a descending navigation, but is naturally in such a condition that it is not navigable in the other direction, then we have no navigable water of the United States within the meaning of the Constitution and the decisions under it to which we can lawfully appropriate money. The general principle is that where a river is not navigable in fact, that Congress has no control over it, but that its control belongs exclusively to the States, and that whether such a stream is a part of a continuous line from a navigable stream, naturally navigable, into another State, or whether it lies wholly within the State, is immaterial. If a river be navigable in fact within a State as a part of a continuous line of communication, Congress has the power to appropriate money to improve it so far as it is so navigable under the power to regulate commerce. If it lie wholly within a State and be navigable in fact, if not a part of a continuous line of communication, Congress has no control over it, and it belongs to the State to regulate its commerce. If it be a part of a continuous line from without to within a State, but its character is such that no ascending navigation in fact exists, nor can naturally exist, the Congress has no control over it under this power, but the jurisdiction of the State is exclusive.
> Apply these doctrines, these rules of law, the now settled law, not the theories and dogmas of fifty years ago, but the law that has grown up from the necessities of your ever-expanding commerce, that which has come from the growth of your country, that which has crystallized itself through the decisions of the Supreme Court upon the power to regulate commerce among the States. Apply these doctrines to our present bill for improving rivers, for appropriating money to that object, and we have the question settled.

The rivers to which we may give the money of the United States are those which the Constitution of the United States as interpreted by the Supreme Court have recognized to be navigable waters of the United States, and those, and those alone, are such as are navigable in fact, and are avenues of interstate commerce.

In this bill there are many instances of appropriations of money to rivers which are not navigable rivers within the meaning of the Constitution and laws. It is not a question of a short river reaching from a lake into a State. Such a stream may be navigable for but ten miles and still be within the purview of the general power. The doctrines of the Constitution as interpreted by the Supreme Court are our platform, and the decisions of the court have followed the progressive march of that commerce which the intense desire of our countrymen for gain has pushed to its furthest limits in the development of the natural highways and internal arteries of our great net-work of lakes and rivers.

Mr. BAILEY. I concur in a large degree with what the Senator has said, but is there any constitutional objection to the passage of such a bill?

Mr. WALLACE. What I understand to be the law and the Constitution as declared by the Supreme Court is that rivers and streams that are not in themselves navigable cannot be improved by the Federal Government, but that they are exclusively within the control of the States.

Mr. HEREFORD. If the Senator will allow me, I will say that there is a decision of the Supreme Court directly the opposite.

Mr. WALLACE. Gentlemen are entitled to their opinion of what the law is, and I am entitled to mine.

Mr. BAILEY. Will the Senator permit me to ask him the question, whether the admiralty jurisdiction has not been extended over all the navigable streams of the country, navigable from the ocean up to the very source itself, provided they are navigable?

Mr. WALLACE. True; but then it comes back to the question, what is a navigable stream? When a stream in the spring of the year has merely descending navigation and no navigation of any character at any other season of the year, I do not understand it to be navigable in the sense of Federal control.

Mr. BAILEY. Will the Senator permit me to ask him to what extent the bill provides for streams that are navigable in the manner he speaks of?

Mr. WALLACE. There is one appropriation in the bill for improvement of part of a stream two hundred miles from tide, and you could not get to that point with a scow in August.

Mr. BAILEY. Which stream is that?

Mr. WALLACE. A part of a river in Pennsylvania.

Mr. HEREFORD. Then I ask the Senator why he does not move to strike it out? It is in the Senator's own State; let him move to strike it out.

Mr. WALLACE. It has come here in the bill from the House.

Mr. HEREFORD. I will inform the Senator that that very appropriation was put in there at his request.

Mr. WALLACE. The Senator is utterly mistaken. I have never asked for such an appropriation or any other of such a character.

Mr. HEREFORD. Last year the Senator did.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Senators will please address the Chair. The Senator from Pennsylvania has the floor.

Mr. WALLACE. The Senator is utterly mistaken. I never asked for any appropriation for the State of Pennsylvania except for the navigable streams thereof; for the Delaware and the Schuylkill up to the city, by which to send our great commerce from Philadelphia to the sea; for the harbor of Erie and the rivers Ohio, Monongahela, and Allegheny at Pittsburgh. I have never asked for any other improvement by the General Government for our State. I believe our people want none such. We want to maintain State control over our rivers and to preserve them within our own jurisdiction, so that our factories, furnaces, and mills may keep the water-power vested under State authority. We think that Pennsylvania is able to care for herself, as she has done in the past, and we do not want the Federal Government to come within the State and aid in the improvement of streams not naturally navigable and thereby uproot our industries, destroy our dams, and render useless our water-powers. River and harbor bills here always have passed against my vote, against my wish, against the will of my people as I believe, but the provisions which make these local improvements have been repeatedly in the bills without my request, because they came from the House. I have voted against them always, although it is true, as said, that Pennsylvania has had appropriations for the improvement of the Kiskiminetas.

Mr. McMILLAN. If we can take the sentiment of Pennsylvania as represented by the members of the House of Representatives, elected directly by the people, the members were over here and in the presence of the Senate committee asked for appropriations for other rivers in that State, the Youghiogheny, pressing it upon us, and it was refused by the committee because the stream was not such as was capable of navigation.

Mr. WALLACE. I have no doubt of it.

Mr. McMILLAN. I think the members of the other House, elected directly by the people, represent the people of that State as well as the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WALLACE. That is a question that I will settle with my people, and it is not for the Senator from Minnesota to dictate to me what I should say upon this floor. I want the Senator from Minnesota to understand that I am here expressing what I believe to be the sentiment of my people and the Senator has no right to dictate to me what I shall say on this or any other subject.

Mr. McMILLAN. I have attempted no dictation to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. WALLACE. Certainly.

Mr. McMILLAN. I attempted no dictation to the Senator from Pennsylvania as to the course he should take. I merely cited the fact to show that there were Representatives directly from the people of the State who differed from him in opinion.

Mr. WALLACE. Certainly. I have no doubt about that, as there may be in the State of the Senator from Minnesota, but that does not affect me in my opinion, nor do I believe they express the wish of our people as to streams of that character.

Mr. President, I believe the theory of this bill on this subject to be wrong. I am conscientious in my convictions thereon; I need only cite what has occurred in the past in the great States of New York and Pennsylvania as to their internal improvements to show the basis of my views. Did we when we built our great system of canals ask the Federal Government to aid us? Nothing of the kind; but we taxed our own people to build them. The State depended upon itself. It had not then learned to lean feebly on the arm of the General Government. Take two instances now, the case of the Fox and Wisconsin Rivers in Wisconsin, and that of the Great Kanawha River in West Virginia. They were improved for a similar purpose to those of the canals from tidewater in Pennsylvania to the Ohio, and from the Hudson to the lakes in New York. The General Government has made large appropriations for the rivers in West Virginia and in Wisconsin. They were to make connections between the eastern and western waters also, but if in the days of DeWitt Clinton New York had come here to ask for money to make a water line of communication from the Hudson to the Lakes through her own territory it would have been regarded as a monstrosity by her people. It would have been utterly antagonistic to their idea of the law. Therefore, they taxed themselves as Pennsylvania taxed herself and her people. Their moneys thus expended aided in the commerce of the whole country, and their people owned the whole. Now, local wants and local needs seek help at the Federal Treasury, instead of self-reliance and State control.

Compare the money expended on these two schemes of internal improvement with that spent on the one great navigable highway of our State. The amount expended on the Fox and Wisconsin Rivers, showing a total of $2,040,000, and for the Great Kanawha $1,190,000 since 1875. The Delaware River with the upper bay that floats the commerce of the State of Pennsylvania from the port of Philadelphia, from 1824 up to 1881, received all told but $669,000.

The great rivers and harbors of the country it seems to me are neglected and their commerce suffers, while indentations on the coast are dignified by the name of harbors, and are improved, and creeks and mountain streams are sought to be made navigable. The number of improvements projected in the third section and the amount of appropriations made to objects that are outside of the scope of Federal power, render this bill most objectionable. As to the Mississippi River improvement I take no issue except as to the large amount given, for that is a subject of national character and deserving our care.

I do not desire to detain the Senate further upon this subject. I might take up this bill and point out the many incongruities that are in it, but they have been shown again and again. I believe that the tendency toward centralization of the Government can find scope in no more insidious guise than it does in this bill. Lavish expenditures for objects which are peculiarly within the province of the State are made by this bill. Instead of being self-reliant, the States are taught to appeal to Congress. If a pier in a harbor needs mending, or needs to be erected, or a channel of a creek is to be widened for the egress of a raft, the General Government is appealed to and thus becomes the fountain of all power, of all wealth and greatness, and the States sink from their proud position of sovereignty into beggars and dependents on the Federal power.

Under such a system all notions of policy which formerly divided parties are confounded. I regret to see it, but we may as well recognize the fact. It is here on this side of the Senate, on the democratic side. The gap stands widely open; Senators must face the existing fact. The teachings of some of our brother Senators are different from those of others. One man believes in one doctrine and one policy, and another man believes in another and a totally different doctrine and policy. I can but believe that this is not simply personal or local, but that their modes of thought and political education cause them to differ thus widely from others of their political brethren upon this floor. My teaching, my belief, my judgment to-day cause me to favor a strict construction of the Federal Constitution, and hence to vote appropriations under the commercial power only to those objects that are clearly and plainly within the purview of the Federal Constitution—to those rivers and harbors that are navigable in fact. Can it be that the strict constructionist who jealously watches every encroachment of Federal power abandons his fear when centralization comes with the sugar-coating of an appropriation for rivers and harbors? Under the magic influence of such a measure as this, the latitudinarian and the strict constructionist are found jogging along together in the same conveyance, and centralization so much dreaded seems to lose its dangers when it comes annually in the form of millions through a river and harbor bill.

Mr. President, I have spoken what I believe to be the sentiments of the people of my State as to this bill. I shall not detain the Senate longer. I cannot vote for the bill. I believe it involves a departure from the doctrines of the Constitution and the teachings of the fathers of the organization to which I belong.

Mr. ALLISON. I wish to offer one or two amendments to the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is an amendment now pending to the bill, offered by the Senator from Colorado, [Mr. TELLER.]

Mr. RANSOM. I move to lay the amendment on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out all from line 407 to line 435, in the following words:

For the improvement of the Mississippi River, in accordance with the plan therefor recommended in Executive Document No. 58, second session Forty-sixth Congress, by the Mississippi River commission, to be expended by the Secretary of War, with the advice and under the supervision of said commission, the sum of $1,000,000. And it shall be the duty of said commission to take into consideration, and of the Secretary of War to extend operations, under their supervision, to tributaries of the Mississippi River to the extent, and no further, that may be necessary in the judgment of said commission to the perfection of the general and permanent improvement of said Mississippi River; but this clause shall not be construed to interfere with the prosecution by the War Department of the improvement of said Mississippi River and its tributaries under general appropriations made therefor: Provided, That no portion of the sum hereby appropriated shall be used in the repair or construction of levees for the purpose of preventing injury to lands by overflow, or for any other purpose whatever except as a means of deepening or improving the channel of said river. And it shall be the duty of said commission to make report, on or before the 1st day of January next, to the Secretary of War, for transmission by him to Congress, of a detailed statement of the work done, and of the expenditure made from the sum hereby appropriated, with their judgment upon the effect of such work, and the general practicability and estimate of the total cost of such improvements along said river from Cairo to the head of the passes.

Mr. RANSOM. I move to lay the amendment on the table.

Mr. TELLER. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary called the roll.

Mr. BURNSIDE. My colleague [Mr. ANTHONY] is paired with the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. THURMAN.] If my colleague were here, he would vote "yea."

Mr. KELLOGG. I am paired on this question with the Senator from Illinois, [Mr. DAVIS.] If he were present, he would vote "nay" and I should vote "yea."

Mr. ALLISON, (after having voted in the affirmative.) I desire to withdraw my vote. I am paired with the Senator from Colorado, [Mr. HILL.] As I do not know how he would vote on this question, I prefer to withdraw my vote.

Mr. COCKRELL. I am paired with the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. EDMUNDS,] who is absent sick. If he were here, I should vote to lay the amendment to strike out on the table. I do not know how the Senator from Vermont would vote.

The result was announced—yeas 36, nays 6; as follows:

So the amendment was laid on the table.

Mr. ALLISON. In section 2, line 7, after the word "than," I move to strike out "its own" and to insert in lieu thereof the words "that passing over its own road;" so as to read:

That the joint resolution approved July 20, 1868, authorizing the construction of the bridge over the Mississippi River "to connect the island of Rock Island with the cities of Davenport and Rock Island," is hereby so amended as to require the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific Railroad Company to charge for any cars carrying freight other than that passing over its own road, and for its own cars when carrying freight for other roads, which it may carry across said bridge.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. In line 9 of the same section I move to strike out "the" and insert "a," and to strike out "of only" and insert "not exceeding," and at the end of the line to insert "loaded;" so as to read:

A sum not exceeding $3 for every loaded car, two-fifths of which sum shall be paid by said railroad company into the Treasury of the United States each month; and the monthly returns thus made shall be in such form and with such authentication as the Secretary of War shall direct.

As the proposition now stands, this company would be required to charge $3 for every loaded and empty car, and if they choose to charge, for example, $2 only for coal cars or for any other class of heavy freight, this provision would stand in their way, because the Government of the United States is to receive new bids for the same. Therefore this ought to be only a limitation with reference to the maximum of charges.

Mr. KERNAN. I desire to make a little inquiry. The House seems to have agreed to this provision, and this amendment largely reduces what the Government will receive. I want some explanation.

Mr. ALLISON. I endeavored to make a brief explanation of it when I offered the amendment. The Senator will observe that, as the clause now stands, the company would be obliged to charge $3 per car, not only for loaded cars, but for empty cars as well; and it may be, and I am told the fact is, that for a large class of freight, such as coal, ice, lumber, and other heavy articles, they do not now charge the amount fixed in this bill.

Mr. KERNAN. Why is the Government entitled to any part of it?

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator asks me a question, which I think there is very grave doubt about. I think under the statute which we passed in 1868, which is to be found in the fifteenth volume of the United States Statutes, page 258, there is a provision authorizing the construction of this bridge, which I think makes it very doubtful whether we can enforce this provision of section 2. We have declared in that statute—

That the Government may permit any other road or roads wishing to cross on said bridge to do so by paying to the parties then in interest the proportionate cost of said bridge, but no such permission to other roads shall impair the right hereby granted to the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific Railroad Company.

It is perfectly clear that any other railroad company wishing to cross this bridge can do so by paying its proportional cost of the bridge into the Treasury of the United States and into the treasury of the Rock Island Railroad Company. No other road sees proper to do so. There are other terminal roads at this point. Instead of doing so, they have made arrangements in one way and another by which the Rock Island road itself transports its cars across the bridge. It is a question whether or not this can be done under the provisions of the statute; but if it is done, it certainly should be made so reasonable that it will not be a burden upon the shippers or upon the railroads in the charges imposed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa, [Mr. ALLISON.]

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LOGAN. I move to strike out, on lines 426 and 427, the words "except as a means of deepening or improving the channel of said river." This part of the section proposes to expend a million of dollars on the Mississippi River, under charge of this commission which has been organized, and proposes to do it not in the way of making levees, but in some other way, and in harmony with the Engineer Corps under the instructions of the Secretary of War. The language is this:

That no portion of the sum hereby appropriated shall be used in the repair or construction of levees for the purpose of preventing injury to lands by overflow, or for any other purpose whatever except as a means of deepening or improving the channel of said river.
